"Chauncy likes it that way, mamma."

"Oh, does he? Well, he'd better learn not to like it; it's unhealthy. You oughtn't to put sugar in tomatoes, Hattie; they're healthier without."

"But, mamma, Chauncy"—

"Oh, if he likes them so, of course, it's no affair of mine. But I won't eat them that way. Seems to me I smell tobacco smoke."

"I guess it's Chauncy's cigar smoke, mamma."

"He doesn't smoke in the house?"

"Why, yes, he—he—does—mamma."

"Mercy on us! I wonder the baby lives through it. But, of course, it's his own house and—Chauncy, don't you think Hattie looks thin and pale? I noticed as soon as I saw her. Hattie, you make your coffee too strong."

"Chauncy likes it so, and"—

"That's just what makes his color so bad, and I know very well that you oughtn't to touch it. Chauncy, that baby musn't wear spring heels yet. I'll change these boots you brought home this evening. And you and Hattie make a mistake in feeding the child as you do. I'll see to its diet hereafter; and I think I must speak to your provision man about the meat and potatoes. And I think, Hattie, your cook needs a little looking after. And, Chauncy, I'm afraid you burn too much gas, and I'm sure the furnace wastes coal. If I can find a good carpenter around here I'd like to change some of these doors. I don't believe in meddling mothers-in-law, but it's a real help sometimes to have a little advice, isn't it, children?"—Detroit Free Press.

THE GREAT SNOW OF 1717.

In February, 1717, occurred the greatest fall of snow ever recorded in the annals of New England—almost burying under the frozen mass the small log houses of the new plantations. So effectually were even the most traveled roads blocked that the magistrates and ministers of Boston, who went out of town on the first day of the storm to attend the funeral of Rev. Mr. Brattle of Cambridge, were unable to return for some days. The storm began on the 20th and ended on the 24th of February. Old Indians, of a hundred years, said their fathers had never told them of such a storm. It was six feet deep in the streets of Boston, ten feet at Dunstable, twelve feet at Deerfield, on the Connecticut. At Exeter and Dover, cottages and cabins of of one were entirely buried, so that the people dug paths from one house to another under the snow. Many farmers lost their sheep, and in some instances sheep and swine which they saved lived for one or two weeks without food. One man had some hens buried near his barn, which were dug out alive 11 days after.

During the snow a great number of deer came from the woods for food and were followed by the wolves, which killed many. Others were shot by the people. It is related that some deer fled to Nahant, and chased by the wolves leaped into the sea and were drowned. Great damage was done to the fruit trees in the latter part of the storm, by the freezing of the damp snow to the branches, which were broken by the weight. The mail from Boston was ten days in reaching Portsmouth and seven in returning. Hon. John Winthrop said in an account of the storm: "We lost at the island and farms 1100 sheep, beside some horses and cattle. It was very strange that 28 days after the storm the people of Fisher's Island, in digging out the remains of 100 sheep, found two of them alive by feeding upon the wool of others." For 40 years after the old people dated events as so many years after or before "the great snow."

At a recent breach of promise trial, eight letters were produced which told the story pretty clearly. The first began: "Dear Mr. Smith," and then followed "My Dear John," then "My Darling John," then "My Own Darling Jack," "My Darling Jack," "Dear John," "Dear Sir," "Sir," and all was over.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 13, 1888.

GEN. CROOK, of Indian-fighting fame, succeeds Gen. Terry, retired, as major general.

ROSCOE CONKLING has been dangerously ill the past week, but now has a fair chance of recovery.

A BILL has been introduced in Congress to repeal the law which forbids any person who was in the Confederate military, naval or civil service being appointed to any position in the United States army. Better let the law stand.

WHOLESALE bribery by both parties in the recent election in Rhode Island is charged by the Providence Journal, which says that voters were marched to the polls and sold like so many cattle. If this is be true, the Journal ought to make it so hot for the guilty ones that they cannot escape punishment.

"BUXTON must go," has been the cry in certain quarters in Springfield since the fatal fire in the Union office, there being an evident desire to make the inspector of buildings the scape-goat for the city in this matter. But he don't "go," just the same. Gov. Ames has given him a hearing, and it was shown pretty conclusively that whatever fault there was was in the law rather than in the officer. It pays to be fair, after all.

THE United States supreme court has decided that a Pennsylvania state law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in the state is constitutional. This is in harmony with the recent decision sustaining the right of a state to prohibit the manufacture or sale of liquor within its borders, though on the other hand the court holds that a state cannot forbid the importation of liquor or any other article from another state, as that would be regulating commerce between the states, a power which is vested exclusively in the national goverment.

THE House at Boston has wisely defeated the proposition to reduce by one-half the amount of money which any one person may deposit in a savings bank. The idea of keeping the banks for the use of the poorer classes is all right, but as a matter of fact it is just this class which would be injured by such a law, for there are a surprising number of them who can show bank books with far more generous balances to their credit than many of the reputed well-to-do people can produce. This every-year attempt to tinker laws which are better let alone is a strong argument in favor of biennial sessions.

No business has been transacted in the House at Washington for the past week, the legislative day of Wednesday, April 4, having been continued until yesterday by a filibustering minority, who were bound to defeat the bill refunding to the states the direct tax collected during the war. The bill passed the Senate by a large majority, and a majority of the House are in favor of it, but the determined opposition of the minority has defeated it for this session, probably. The Democrats got their forces well enough in hand yesterday to break the deadlock, and the bill is likely now to go over until December. Massachusetts would receive $175,000 if the bill were to pass.

HENRY B. LOVERING has been appointed United States marshal for Massachusetts, in place of Gen. N. P. Banks. This is a big triumph for the machine, and an equally big pill for the mugwumps. Mr. Lovering has had no sympathy with President Cleveland's civil service reform notions, and his nomination for governor last year was recognized on every hand as an anti-Cleveland victory, carrying joy to the heart of every spoilsman. The mugwumps turned from his candidacy in disgust, and many Democratic supporters of the administration would not vote for him. But now the president takes him up, and in spite of the protests of civil service reformers rewards him with an office he has sought these many months. Mr. Lovering personally is unobjectionable, and it is evident that the exigencies of the approaching presidential campaign are such that civil service reform will be allowed to remain in a state of "innocuous desuetude" until after the election.

The Grand Army will not get the Drexel cottage on Mt. McGregor in which General Grant died. It was offered to the comrades by the late Joseph W. Drexel, but its acceptance was not authorized by the New York legislature, and as no mention of the matter is made in Mr. Drexel's will, his estate is left in such a condition that his wish cannot be carried out.

The night express on the Central Vermont Railroad ran into a washout five miles above Bellows Falls last Friday night. The engine and baggage and express car were thrown from the track, the engineer and fireman killed, several passengers severely injured and the baggage car burned.

A large amount of damage is reported from Dakota and other points in the Northwest on account of the heavy rains and unusually high water in the rivers, many bridges being swept away and large tracts of land being overflowed.

The states which have elections prior to the general election next November are Louisiana, April 17; Alabama, August 17; Arkansas, September 3; Vermont, September 4; Maine, September 10, and Georgia, October 3.

A young New York German and his wife, who had been out of work for some time and had no money, took poison as the easiest way out of their trouble.

It is proposed to raise a $100,000 fund for carrying on the Sunday-school missionary work in this country, as a memorial to the late Asa Bullard.

The town of Amesbury was badly crippled by an $800,000 fire last week, nearly 1000 workmen being thrown out of employment.

Gen. Q. A. Gillmore, one of the best military engineers and artillerists in the war, died at Brooklyn last Saturday.

Conductor Sedgwick of the Ware River Railroad has sold his chestnut gelding to Springfield parties for $300.

Rev. A. Weeks has bought the Stark property, corner of Pine and Squier streets, through D. F. Holden's agency.

The Betts Fencing Company has received an order from the Boston & Albany Railroad for fifteen miles of fencing.

The historical committee will meet Monday evening to consider the matter of putting the town's history into manuscript.

A Republican caucus, to choose delegates to the state convention, will be held at the district court room next Tuesday evening.

Twenty-one small children from Tewksbury arrived here last Friday afternoon, and were taken to the state primary school.

Hennessey Bros'. Minstrels had a date arranged for this town, but owing to the damage done to the rink were obliged to cancel it.

Active preparations are being made by the ladies' society of the Second Congregational church for the annual May breakfast.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union held an important meeting at the Second Congregational church Tuesday afternoon.

Miss M. E. Marsh has removed her private school from Park to Church street, having leased the tenement recently vacated by M. C. Morey.

The ladies' society of St. Paul's Universalist church will hold a social and give an entertainment at the church parlors next Thursday evening.

The recently-elected prosecuting committee of the town held its first meeting Monday evening and organized with F. A. Bowen of Three Rivers as chairman.

Quite a number from this village attended the musical entertainment in the Union church at Three Rivers Tuesday evening, given by the Springfield Orchestral Club.

Dr. C. W. Biddell of Cambridge will occupy the pulpit at St. Paul's Universalist church next Sunday. Rev. F. O. Hall of Fitchburgh supplied the pulpit last Sunday.

F. E. Sedgwick, express messenger on the Ware River Railroad, has discontinued his duties for that corporation at present, and is succeeded by W. A. Wilcox of Chatham, N. Y.

The selectmen met in this village Saturday afternoon and fixed the license fees as follows: First class, $250; second class, $100; third class, $100; fourth class, $150; fifth class, $100.

In response to a petition signed by thirty-eight of the citizens residing at Three Rivers, the selectmen have appointed these special officers: P. Forte, F. A. Bowen and F. W. Lavine.

Charles A. Kingberger of Norwich, Ct., has received the appointment of mail agent on the southern division of the New London Northern Railroad, resulting in the removal of B. H. Lee.

A. O. Allen has been appointed a constable by the overseers of the poor, to take charge of the lockup and tramp room. He is also at present discharging the duties of janitor at the bank block.

Hampden Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, has received an invitation to go to Greenfield on the evening of the 25th and witness the exemplification of the chapter work by the Masonic lodge of that town.

The aggregate passenger and freight receipts of the New London Northern road at this station for the month of March, which was an unfortunate one for the company, amounted to $5500, or thereabouts.

The Endeavor Society of the Congregational church will give a pink coffee party at the church parlors next Friday evening, at which a broom drill by young ladies will be one of the features of the occasion.

A special train from Springfield arrived here yesterday morning at 8.25 in charge of Superintendent Sackett, who is making the annual inspection of all the stations on the line between Springfield and Worcester.

Denman Thompson, in "The Old Homestead," will be at Springfield the 27th, and a special car has been secured to run to Palmer after the performance. W. A. Barnes has tickets for sale, and has already disposed of about 40.

Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F., has appointed a committee to arrange a programme for the celebration of the 69th anniversary of the institution of Odd Fellowship in the United States, which occurs on the evening of the 26th.

D. E. Robinson, who was recently appointed to repair the interlocking switches between Springfield and Worcester, has returned to his old position in the signal tower. M. J. Dawson has also resumed his duties as janitor of the station with increased pay.

Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F., has received an invitation to be present at the dedicatory exercises of the new hall at Warren next Thursday evening, which is to be occupied by Arcturus Lodge of that place. The members of the local lodge will be provided with a special car.

The fire alarm worked rather irregularly Wednesday evening, owing to the fact that after box 63 had been pulled in some one also pulled in box 57, and both were going at once. The town clock also commenced to strike nine at the same time, and made a somewhat complicated matter of it.

The Nassowanno House changed hands again Tuesday afternoon, M. E. Haradon of West Brookfield, who has had some experience in hotel keeping, assuming the proprietorship. Mr. Southwick will leave for Saratoga Springs shortly, where he contemplates leasing a large and well equipped hotel, which he will run during the summer season.

The committee appointed by the town has awarded the contract for the construction of the new high school building, which will stand upon the corner of Park and Thorndike streets, to Darling Brothers of Rochdale, the contract price being $10,717. The contractors have agreed to have the structure completed and ready for occupancy by Nov. 1.

The local sporting men have held a meeting and decided that it is not advisable for the Palmers to enter the Western Massachusetts base ball league, owing to the lack of financial support. However, a good team will be put into the field as soon as the season opens, and lovers of the pastime will then have a chance to witness some interesting games.

A horse attached to a team belonging to Charles Upham became frightened at a passing locomotive on the Boston & Albany Railroad Saturday afternoon and ran down South Main street, colliding with the fence and veranda of Barney Gallagher's house, and demolishing them badly. The vehicle was also badly damaged, but fortunately no one was injured.

The Monson selectmen held a conference with the local board at D. F. Holden's office yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock, relative to discontinuing the Blanchardville bridge, which was washed away. No decision will be rendered until the adjourned town meeting is held at Monson Monday, although the selectmen state that the bridge will probably be rebuilt.

The singing committee of St. Paul's church has arranged for a concert for next Tuesday evening by the Apollo Club of North Brookfield, assisted by Miss Marion Sterns, reader. The gentlemen who compose the club are fine singers, and Miss Sterns is too well known in Palmer to need comment. Mr. Howard, tenor of St. Paul's church choir, is second tenor of the Apollo Club.

The fire department responded to an alarm rung in from box 63 for a fire that caught in a small shed in the rear of the New London Northern freight office about 8.55 Wednesday evening. The structure was located beside the coal bin, and used to store tools in. The firemen had a good stream on the fire in a short time, and no great damage was done. The fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin, and the loss is estimated at something like $30.

Fair weather has favored the Thomson-Houston Electric Company for the past two weeks, compared with the two weeks preceding, and the work of stringing the outside wire for the arc system is nearly completed. The hoods will be placed on the poles next week, and everything put in readiness for starting the plant by the first of the coming month. The work of constructing the station will be entirely completed by next Thursday, and the engines and dynamos will be placed in position shortly after.

The following appointments for the Springfield district were made at the annual conference of Methodists at Milford this week: G. F. Eaton, presiding elder; Amherst, C. R. Spellman; Belchertown, E. H. Tunnicliffe; Bondsville, E. W. Virgin; Brookfield, S. H. Noon; East Longmeadow, supplied by J. H. Gaylord; Enfield, supplied by T. H. Vincent; Hampden and Glendale, supplied by A. A. Graves; Ludlow Center, William Ferguson; Monson, J. H. Emerson; Wales, William Gordon; Ware, Elwin Hitchcock; Warren, J. F. Mears; West Brookfield, F. M. Miller; West Warren, B. F. Kingsley; Wilbraham, J. R. Cushing; G. M. Steele, principal, Benjamin Hill, professor in Wilbraham academy, member of Wilbraham quarterly conference.

The fire district would be foolish to throw away the fire alarm, as it will do if the $200 remaining due on it is not paid. It is not satisfactory, perhaps, in its present shape, but it can be made so, we believe, by putting a striker on the bell of the Baptist church, and perhaps also on the Congregational bell. The three bells striking together would attract attention at once, whereas many people do not notice an alarm now, as it resembles the striking of the town clock so closely. An alarm can be rung in quite a little quicker, on the average, than if we depended upon having the church bells rung by hand, and instead of throwing away what money has been invested in the apparatus already it would be much the wiser course to put a little more with it and make it as perfect as possible.

District Court.

At the district court last Saturday John Lane, Michael Sullivan, J. Casey and Michael Decker, four juveniles, were arraigned before Judge Robinson, charged with breaking into the school house at the wire mill recently and doing considerable damage to its contents. The matter was continued until to-morrow morning, and the boys were released by furnishing bonds amounting to $50. Wednesday morning there was a complaint made against Robert Moffatt of Pittsfield, for vagrancy, and he was given three months in the house of correction. Richard Rogers of Ludlow, who was tried in this court in January last, and convicted of illegal liquor selling, withdrew the appeal which he took at that time, and paid a fine of $50 and costs. David Collins and Alexander Mallen of Palmer paid fines of $7.73 each for drunkenness and were released. Sidney Kelsey was given a hearing yesterday morning, charged with assaulting his daughter, Emma Kelsey. He was convicted of the offence and was allowed until Saturday to settle with the court. The case of O. M. Southwick, of the Nassowanno House, charged with selling liquor Fast day, will be heard to-morrow morning.

Not a Wise Move.

The limitation of the number of men in the steamer company to 12 may not prove for the best interests of property owners. Fifteen men are undoubtedly enough for the hook and ladder truck, but there is a grave doubt in the minds of many as to the ability of only 12 men to successfully handle a brisk fire should one start in a thickly built section. Of course there are always plenty of others who are willing to help, but in the majority of instances the firemen would do more effective work in a shorter time if such persons, unaccustomed to the apparatus, would stand one side until their assistance is called for, and give the firemen a chance to do their work. Twelve men are not enough to handle three or four lines of hose, moving them from place to place upon ladders or buildings. Then, too, the department cannot always depend on all of these twelve being present at a fire. Some of them are liable to be out of town when an alarm is rung in, and it will be a very exceptional company indeed if there is ever an alarm when some of the men will not be unable to attend. The men are paid no more than last year, and the reduction in numbers nearly doubles the amount of work for each man, consequently some of the best men have already said they should leave at once, and the next monthly meeting will possibly see the company with less than the 12 members wanted. Property owners cannot afford to save a few dollars in this manner when by so doing they cripple the value of their fire protection.

Personal.

Andrew Pinney of Troy, N. Y., has been in town this week.

Dr. J. P. Lynde of Athol was in town for a short stay this week.

Mrs. E. Brown has returned from a brief visit at Stafford Springs, Ct.

Charles G. Gardner, Edward N. Lacey, Harry Brown and George Holden returned to their studies at Amherst College yesterday morning after a two-weeks' vacation in town.

A Hot Fire District Meeting.

NO MORE MONEY FOR THE ELECTRIC FIRE ALARM.—A NEW BOARD OF ENGINEERS.

The annual meeting of the fire district Tuesday afternoon was largely attended, and was a somewhat stormy one, some rather unpleasant personalities being indulged in. S. S. Taft was chosen moderator. The report of the treasurer showed the receipts of the year to have been $2690.35, and the expenditures $2131.69, leaving a balance in the treasury of $558.66. The board of engineers reported the apparatus to be in good order, and that the department had responded to six alarms in the past year, two of these being outside the district. Article 4 was then taken up and $800 appropriated for the annual rental of the Palmer Water Co.

The fun commenced when it was moved to appropriate $300 for the electric fire alarm, $200 of this being to finish paying for the same, and $100 to put another box in and make some other extensions. Last year the district voted $500 for an electric alarm, at the request of the chief engineer, which it was stated would cost "about $550, exclusive of stringing the wire." The committee had the work done at a cost of $700, and it was urged that the district should back up its committee, as a contract made by them was virtually made by the district, and that it should pay its just debts. On the other hand it was argued that the alarm, as now located on the same bell with the town clock, could hardly be distinguished from the striking of the clock, and was of no use whatever, and that rather than put in any more money the district had better lose the $500 already paid, as by the contract if it is not paid for in two years the manufacturers will take it out, the district losing the money paid on it. The matter was discussed for over an hour, and then the motion was lost, as was also the one to appropriate $200 to pay for the alarm and so protect the honor of the district. Considerable hard talk was indulged in by both sides.

The question of the amount to be paid the firemen also brought out a good deal of talk. The acting engineer stated that there were now 37 men in the department, but that he thought 27 enough—15 for the hook and ladder and 12 for the steamer. It was finally voted to limit the department to 27 men, and pay them $10 each per year, a motion to pay them 40 cents an hour for time actually on duty being lost. The sum of $100 was voted for the board of engineers, to be divided into $65, $20, $15; $96 for the janitor of the engine house; $50 for coal; $40 for the engineer of the steamer; $24 for stoker; $150 for contingencies.

The article regarding the lighting of the streets was indefinitely postponed, a discount was voted on all taxes paid on or before September 1st, and $200 appropriated to cover the deficiency caused thereby. The tax collector reported that over $900 of the taxes for 1886 and 1887 were yet unpaid, and he was instructed to collect them before September 1st. The appropriations amount to $1980. There were two tickets, headed by W. H. Hitchcock and G. A. Griffin; 162 ballots were cast, and these officers were elected for the ensuing year: Chief engineer, W. H. Hitchcock; 1st assistant, G. A. Bills; 2d assistant, G. O. Henry; clerk, W. W. Leach; treasurer, C. E. Fish; prudential committee, E. G. Hastings, J. N. Lacey, J. S. Holden. The vote was as follows:

|---|---|---|---|
| | CHIEF ENGINEER. | | |
| W. H. Hitchcock, | 86 | G. A. Griffin, | 76 |
| | FIRST ASSISTANT. | | |
| G. A. Bills, | 86 | J. W. Brainard, | 73 |
| | SECOND ASSISTANT. | | |
| G. O. Henry, | 87 | G. A. Bills, | 75 |
| | CLERK. | | |
| W. W. Leach, | 161 | T. W. Kenefick, | 1 |
| | TREASURER. | | |
| C. E. Fish, | 162 | | |
| | PRUDENTIAL COMMITTEE. | | |
| E. G. Hastings, | 162 | J. S. Holden, | 88 |
| J. N. Lacey, | 160 | H. P. Holden, | 75 |

WEST WARREN.

Beacon Light Lodge of Good Templars celebrated their first anniversary with a supper Monday night.

The firemen's ball came off last night and was well attended. Brigham's orchestra of Marlboro furnished excellent music.

Mrs. David Kennedy's millinery opening was held yesterday and to-day. Miss Gertrude Crapo of Boston is the milliner this season.

A dipper duck has been in No. 3 mill pond for the past few days, and seems to have engaged board for the season, for guns and stones have been in active use since its arrival, but the duck still lives.

WARREN.

The Woman's Relief Corps gave a poverty supper last Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Lincoln and Miss Dow had their openings Thursday and Friday.

William B. Ramsdell, in his suit against the town, was awarded $2363 and costs.

Charles Morgan, who recently moved his family to Hartford, is to go to Chicago.

The Odd Fellows propose to dedicate their new hall next week Thursday evening.

The Lend A Hand workers had a supper and entertainment in the ladies' parlors Friday evening.

The social committee of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor held a musicale at the parsonage Wednesday evening.

Mr. Edson of Worcester, agent of the board of education, was in town last week visiting schools, and spoke before the teachers Friday afternoon.

The funeral of A. Fairbanks took place at his residence Friday afternoon. He was born in town and has always resided here. His illness was very short.

The Universalist society gave an organ concert Tuesday evening, with Emma Lincoln, H. A. Messenger, and Edward Lombard, organists; Arthur More, violinist.

THREE RIVERS.

N. K. Rogers is improving his grounds just west of the Baptist church by putting in a stone wall.

Mrs. N. J. Trudeau has opened a millinery store in the place temporarily occupied by the post office.

Station Agent E. L. Derby was called to Orange this week to attend the funeral of his grandfather, Isaac Spears.

Joseph Lemier, formerly clerk for Shaw Bros., has opened a tea and coffee store in the basement at the rear of Shaw Bros.' store.

Alfred Hunt, who has been learning to telegraph at the New London Northern station the past two months, has gone to Belmont to finish the art, also doing the baggage work there.

Mrs. A. M. Orcutt, accompanied by Miss Nellie Manning, have been in New York this week getting the spring styles and buying goods for the spring millinery opening. While away her store has been thoroughly repaired, the work being done by Charles Ruggles.

The course of lectures under the auspices of the Young Men's Bible Class closed Tuesday evening by a musical and elocution entertainment. Although the night was very stormy there was a good sized audience. The music was furnished by the Orchestral Club of Springfield, and was the finest ever produced in our little village. Miss Eva A. Bailey of Boston, the elocutionist, won the admiration of the audience by her first piece, "The First Settler's Story," and was encored at each recital.

THORNDIKE.

The Emmet Club have disbanded until fall.

Louis Desotell has bought a fine turnout of Frank Mayett this week.

Miss Brothers of Holyoke was visiting friends in town the past week.

The Patterson Club of Palmer met at the residence of W. C. Greene Thursday evening.

James Lines and wife returned Saturday, after spending a few days with relatives in Haverhill.

Edward McKeligett, Sr., has been appointed highway surveyor for this district by the selectmen.

Requiem mass was offered Monday at the Catholic church in memory of Mrs. Ellen Wren, who died recently.

Union Hall has been repainted and fitted up in a first class manner. The interior never looked better than at the present.

Cornelius Broderick, who has been in the employ of the Thorndike Company for a number of years, has resigned and will remove to Ware.

The Emmet Club had a large attendance at their entertainment on Fast Day eve, nearly all the seats being taken. The parts were well taken, and the play was a vast improvement on the last one.

Agent Greene of the Thorndike Company is to put new spinning frames into the No. 1 mill, and will move the cards now in the brick part to the old part. He also intends to put in 200 feet more of curbing on Church street.

A paper was circulated among the help in the mills Tuesday to get the signatures of those wishing the half-holiday during the summer months. The proposition met the approval of all. Therefore it will no doubt be put in force.

Two small boys, whose ages are 13 and 12, got into a boat on the river above the No. 1 mill dam a few days ago, and were unable to return to shore, the current being very swift and every moment bringing them nearer the dam. Their cries for help happened to be heard by Cristie Fisher, a lad of 14 years, who at once undressed, plunged into the water and swam to the center of the river just in time to save the two younger boys from drowning, for had they gone over the dam there would be no question about it. After reaching the boat Fisher got in and rowed to shore, and was none the worse for his cold bath.

WALES.

Ruth R. White has been granted an absolute divorce from her husband, Walter C. White, the latter having been sentenced to the state prison for 10 years.

A correspondent writes: As there seems to be more or less talk about railroads in this vicinity, it may not be out of place to say a word on the subject. We all know that a route was surveyed some years ago from Southbridge to Palmer, but owing to some circumstances did not amount to anything. Our oldest citizens remember very well that before railroads were built the stage coaches running from New York to Boston in an air line as near as might be, came through Wales. Now a feasible route seems to present itself in building a railroad from Rockville, Conn., through the flourishing towns of Stafford Springs, Stafford Hollow, Staffordville, Wales, East Brimfield, Fiskdale and Sturbridge to Southbridge, thus giving the New York and New England road an air line from New York to Boston, and the local traffic and immense amount of freight to be transported from the various manufactories in the above named towns would be an item worthy of consideration. The N. Y. & N. E. operate a line to Rockville already, and also a line from Southbridge connecting with their lines into Boston, and by supplying this missing link quick time could be made through a very pleasant and growing country, and would touch all manufacturing towns, each sending out and bringing in millions of pounds of freight, to say nothing of passenger traffic. The route would be a very feasible one to build, and could probably be built as cheaply as any line in New England. There are other lines that might be built that would be paying routes, but none seem to make much headway. Where are the capitalists and railroad men that will push this thing through and give these towns much-needed railroad facilities? Talk it up, work it up, and see what the result will be.

WILBRAHAM.

There are 220 students in attendance at the academy this term.

The Methodist society raised nearly $500 for benevolent purposes last year.

Rev. James Sutherland and wife left for their new home at North Prescott yesterday.

The pupils of the academy held a reception and interview in Fisk Hall Friday evening.

Rev. J. H. Emerson returned from conference yesterday and will resume his pastorate at the Methodist church the coming year.

The weight of the gas machine in Central Block broke Monday evening, and it was necessary for the merchants to furnish lamps or close their places of business.

A. N. Gaouette, the photographer, has been in Boston this week, taking a course of painting lessons. His brother Alfonse has had charge of his business during his absence.

It is hoped that something will be done about lighting our streets at the town meeting Monday. There is not a town of its size in the state whose streets are as poorly lighted.

The Ladies' Social Circle of the Universalist society held a largely attended and interesting meeting with Mrs. Charles F. Buffington Wednesday afternoon. The Bible class met there in the evening.

The Easter concert, given by the Universalist Sunday-school in Central Hall last Sunday evening, was very largely attended, and was a departure from the ordinary custom. It was one of the best ever given.

Officers raided the saloon under the Davis block last Friday afternoon and secured a quantity of the "ardent." It is said that the keeper was given 24 hours in which to get out of town, which he reluctantly consented to do.

About 100 of the women who have worked in Fay, Peck & Co's. straw shop for a number of years past, gathered at the boarding house last Friday evening. An excellent entertainment consisting of farces, recitations, music and poems was provided for the occasion, refreshments were served and a very pleasant evening was passed by all.

Silas J. Wilcox died Friday noon of consumption at the age of 39. Mr. Wilcox was born in Cambridge, and for the past few years has been engaged in the jewelry business in this town. The funeral was held at the house Sunday afternoon, Rev. F. S. Hatch officiating. The interment was at Lowell on Monday. A wife and two children survive him.

The annual parish meeting of the Universalist church was held in Central Hall Monday evening. W. J. Ricketts was chosen chairman and Harlow Chapin clerk. These officers were elected: Treasurer, Gilbert W. Farrington; parish committee, G. F. King, Lee Blanchard, W. J. Ricketts, Marvin Bradway, A. D. Ellis, C. S. Pease, E. M. Hatch, H. P. Witherell, C. R. Buffington; musical committee, W. J. Ricketts, A. A. Babbitt. Sixty-five new members joined the parish at this meeting.

A special meeting of the trustees of the academy was held Saturday afternoon, and the prudential committee was authorized to purchase the Hammond place, opposite the Congregational church, and will take possession May 1st. It is proposed to use the property for a principal's house and a dormitory and boarding house. There are 21 rooms in the building, which will accommodate a limited number of students, and more rooms will be added if necessary. It is proposed to have the building ready for use at the opening of the fall term of the academy.

The annual parish meeting of the Congregational church was held Monday evening. Dr. George E. Fuller acted as chairman and C. H. McMaster as clerk. These officers were elected: Prudential committee, Dr. George E. Fuller, George Tucker, E. P. Keep; musical committee, W. M. Tucker, D. A. Dustan, C. C. Keep; treasurer, F. E. Morris; auditor, C. W. Holmes, Jr. A committee of C. W. Holmes, Jr., E. F. Morris and E. L. Cushman was chosen to see about repairing the parsonage and painting the church, and to raise the money for same by subscription. Voted to pay the pastor, Rev. Mr. Hatch, $1600 and rent of parsonage, which is an increase of $100. Spencer Lane has been engaged to to take charge of the singing, and Charles Merrick as organist.

Town Meetings.

The adjourned town meeting will be held at the town hall next Monday at 1 o'clock p. m. Article 23, to see what action the town will take in regard to the Blanchardville bridge and the roads leading thereto; and article 25, to see if the town will raise and appropriate money for lighting the streets and direct how the same shall be expended, which were passed over at the meeting of April 2d, will be brought up and action taken. The committee appointed to look into the town farm barn matter will report at this meeting. There are also several other important matters to be brought up, and all the voters should be on hand. It is hoped that some action will be taken in regard to night police; there is certainly a great demand for them, and those only should be appointed who will do their duty.

A special town meeting is called for next Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, to act on these articles: To see what action the town will take in relation to the suit for damages against the town brought by William Merriam of Palmer; to see what action the town will take relative to the case of the (now or former) wife of Abdel Calkins, support being claimed for her by the town of Brimfield, and instruct if suit shall be brought for her support; to see if the town will take any measures to rebuild the bridge known as the Blanchardville bridge, or petition the county commissioners to discontinue the same and so much of the roads connecting therewith as would not be required; to see if the town will authorize the sale of the Shea house on the cemetery lot, the same to be removed from the premises.

WARE AND VICINITY.

W. N. Hoyt would like to be elected senator.

Miss Annie Munsell has been appointed teacher in district 7, which will begin next Monday.

It will surprise many to learn of the death of Harry Thurman of Nottingham, Eng., of consumption the 9th ult.

Rev. Elwin Hitchcock, pastor of the M. E. church, has been returned to Ware this week by an unanimous vote of the society.

William Anderson, who has sung in the East Congregational church for some time past, has accepted a similar position in Worcester.

Subscription tickets for the Kneisel concert will be on sale at Blood's drug store April 20th and 21st, and admission tickets the 23d and 24th.

A new block is going up on Water street for a saloon. It has been stated there was a saloon in every other house on the street, and still there seems to be a demand for more.

Rev. C. W. Duffield will deliver an address before the Social Science Society in the Town Hall to-morrow afternoon. Subject, "The life and writings of Robert Browning."

An interesting event was the celebration on Tuesday of the 73d birthday of Mrs. Eliza Robinson by a family party at the residence of her son, John W. Robinson, on Bank street.

William Kenyon, who has been employed in M. P. Marks's music store for some time past, has gone to Woburn to accept a position with his brother in the sewing machine business.

Charles A. Stevens and daughter are in Mexico, having arrived there nearly on time, making up, in transit, the delay in getting out of Massachusetts on account of the great snow storm.

The Ware Center Grange will meet next Wednesday evening, when Deputy Stoddard of North Brookfield will install the officers. All are invited to be present and join as charter members.

We received a call to-day from J. W. Wittey, who so narrowly escaped with his life at the time of the fire in the Union office, Springfield. He has so far recovered from his burns as to be able to attend to his regular work.

The First Congregational church of Ware Center has extended a call to Rev. E. S. Huntress. There will be a meeting of the parish next Tuesday, when it is expected that they will unite with the church in the call.

The board of health has issued its annual notice, calling the attention of residents of the town to the law requiring vaults, cess-pools and drains to be cleaned out, which they require to be done on or before May 20th or a vigorous prosecution according to law will ensue.

Herbert P. Cummings has received the contract for erecting the new church building for St. William's society. Mr. Cummings has erected the best buildings we have in town, including the town hall and library building, and this will be another monument of his skill as a builder.

Hennessey Brothers Minstrels are so well known here that no words of commendation are needed. The announcement that they are to appear at the Town Hall tomorrow evening will be sufficient to give them a good house. P. J. Mulvany will be on the stage in his old position in the first scene.

Bishop Paddock will visit Trinity Episcopal church Thursday evening, May 10th, for the purpose of administering the rite of confirmation. He will also preach. In anticipation of that visit, and as a preparation for it, Mr. Duffield will preach Sunday evening on church membership, its meaning and value.

Albert Weiss bought the house known as the Capt. Hartwell house on the corner of Pleasant and Parks street, Tuesday, for $475. It is to be removed before May 1st to make ready for the new Episcopal church. He will move it to the lot on the corner of Bank and Pleasant streets recently bought of Mrs. Pierce.

There was a large attendance at the adjourned town meeting Monday afternoon. The article to hear the report of the committee on the Otis Company's tax case and act thereon, drew out considerable discussion. A motion to reconsider the article and accept the report of the committee was carried, on division of the house, by a vote of 165 to 66. The report was accepted as a progressive one, and the committee was retained in office with full power to act. The vote at the annual meeting whereby $2000 was to be expended for sidewalks was rescinded, and $1000 appropriated instead. It was voted to construct sewers according to plans already accepted by the town through Aspen, Vigeant and West street to the river; also from the foot of Church, through Main street and West Main street to Muddy Brook, and through Water street to connect with the trunk sewer on West Main street. Both house and storm water sewers will be laid.

LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, April 11, 1888.

The Senate did a surprising thing at the afternoon session Friday in killing beyond hope of resurrection this year the bill to prevent the coloring of oleomargarine to imitate genuine butter, and the case against the bill was no doubt most skillfully and thoroughly worked up. No debate occurred and the whole thing was done very quietly. Senator Glines moved to reconsider the vote of Wednesday passing the bill to be engrossed. The motion was carried 11 to 10. Then the question recurred on the engrossment and the bill was defeated, 10 to 11, with seven pairs. Senator Stevens of Norfolk was the member who changed his vote from yes to no. A vote was gained for each side by two senators who were not recorded on Wednesday, and two other members, Crosby of Berkshire and Kimball of Suffolk, who voted for the bill Wednesday, were absent without pairs on Friday. This vote was a reconsideration, and as the rules forbid a second reconsideration, the matter is dead for this session.

Leave to withdraw has been reported on the petition for a city charter for the town of North Adams.

An adverse report on making a better record of the officers and enlisted men of the volunteer service who served during the rebellion has been recommitted with the intimation that the report may be changed.

The bill to regulate the employment of children has been made a special assignment for Thursday, April 12.

The one per cent liquor bill came up in the House Friday afternoon on the question of concurring with the Senate in its engrossment. No debate seemed to be desired by anybody, but they had a roll call on motion of Mr. Collison of Boston, and the result was 82 yeas to 51 nays and 11 pairs. So it promises to be that hereafter one per cent of alcohol, instead of three, is to be the standard of intoxicating liquors.

Not a word was said in the House Friday against the adverse report on changing the civil service law so that veterans who are entitled to the soldiers' exemption law need not be obliged to go through the form of certification. Considering the stir that was made about it last summer, decision of the supreme court and all, this is a rather tame ending of the excitement.

Mr. Mellen of Worcester made an attempt in the House on Friday to cut down by one-half the amount of money which can stand to the credit of any one depositor in a savings bank. His idea was that the banks were used too much by the well-to-do people, and that they should be kept for the poorer folks. But the reply of the banking committee was that the proportion of well-to-do depositors is decreasing, and that to reduce the sum would be to discourage deposits from poor people. The House defeated Mr. Mellen's bill by a decided majority.

The educational authorities of the state have gained a preliminary success for the bill to provide school superintendents for the small towns (half of whose salary is to come from the state treasury), for the treasury committee of the Senate has reported that it ought to pass. But there is a decided opposition to it among some country members. This is not surprising, when it took so long to educate public opinion to the point of abolishing the old school district system, though it had for many years been the opinion of the leading educators of the state that the district system was the cause of many evils. What the educational authorities wish to do is to secure better schools in the poor towns, and an illustration of how much this is needed is the fact that in one of the towns of Berkshire county there was not a scholar in any school who could answer the question how much a gallon and a pint of milk would cost at six cents a quart. In some places in the state small communities are in an almost heathenish condition, and if the bill does not pass this year, it probably will before long.

The state board of health, under the resolve of last year, has made a report upon the oleomargarine question, and the surprising part of it is the extreme to which the board goes in its support of oleo. Thorough examinations were made of the processes of manufacture at different places, and the report describes them in full. Dr. Elliott G. Brackett of Harvard College was appointed by the board to investigate the special matter of the healthfulness of oleo, and he goes into it in detail, reaching the conclusion that the difference in favor of butter is practically so slight as to be of no consequence, except perhaps in the cases of invalids. This report and the defeat by the Senate of the bill to prevent the coloring of it, makes quite a triumph for the oleo men. In the pamphlet are the laws of England, Germany, Russia, France, Norway and Denmark regulating the sale of oleo. England, by the way, uses the word "margarine" without "oleo." The latter word means oil, and the former comes from margaric acid, which is one of the fatty acids which go into the composition of beef fat. So Dr. Abbott tells me, the secretary of the state board of health.

Speaking of adulterations, the doctor says that almost all wine sold in this country is adulterated. Whisky is adulterated the least of any liquor, but brandy is adulterated badly. There is not a single preparation of the many which are advertised to cure the opium or liquor habits which are not frauds containing alcohol or some form of opium. The "Scotch Oats Essence," which has lately been so much advertised as an invigorator, he says contains 35 per cent of alcohol and a quarter of a grain of morphine to every ounce of the stuff.

By vote of 86 to 97 the House has refused to engross the bill to prevent fines for imperfect weaving, and has defeated by a decided majority a motion to reconsider the rejection.

A practically unanimous vote was given by the House Monday for the bill appropriating $320,000 for settling up the state account system of prison labor at Charlestown, Concord and Sherborn.

A new tack was taken Wednesday in both the Senate and the House on the bills to require the payment of liquor license fees into the state treasury, and to limit the number of licenses to one in 1000 of population. The point was that the report that no further legislation was necessary on the governor's message relating to liquor laws had been accepted, and as the message covered these points, they had been finally disposed of and could not be brought up again. The bills were tabled till the point of order was settled. By 61 to 84 the House, after an excited debate, defeated the bill to make the issue of druggists' licenses in non-license towns permissive instead of mandatory.

A long debate on the Senate bill to allow the Boston and Maine Railroad to buy the Eastern resulted in the House in an overwhelming vote in its favor.

The Senate, in debating the House bill to forbid liquor selling on Fast day, Thanksgiving day and Christmas, decided that Memorial day was a fit day for the exercise of like prohibition, and added it by vote of 16 to 13, but refused to include other holidays.

A large part of Wednesday was spent in the House on the bill for the annexation of part of Deerfield to Greenfield, and it was defeated by 51 to 103. Most of the local representatives, except Mr. Griswold of Greenfield, opposed it.

The committee on agriculture has reported a resolve appropriating $19,000 for all sorts of repairs and improvements at the Agricultural College. From the specifications it would seem to be badly down at the heel at present.

FULTON'S SUPPRESSED BOOK,
"WHY PRIESTS SHOULD WED."

Rev. Dr. Fulton's "Why Priests Should Wed" is destined to become the most celebrated book of these times. When the old and highly esteemed publishing house of Rand Avery Company of Boston decided that it would not print the book, on the ground that its contents were so obscene as to be unfit for its female compositors and proof-readers to set the type or read the proofs, it was generally supposed that Dr. Fulton would give up its publication. But his friends came forward and said that he should not be crushed, that his work should not be stopped, and that his work should be printed. "Why Priests Should Wed" is truly a marvellous book. It has queer, black borders, with the indicative insignia; it has awful, black edges; striking illustrations; gaudy covers in cloth, illuminated in black, white, and red, with terrible designs. At its price of $1.50 a copy it is, as books are nowadays, a marvellously cheap book. And, moreover, its contents, were the book made in the commonest form, and had it been printed in the quietest manner possible, would have attracted world-wide attention, for it is brimful of statements which, if true, should arouse every American to the need of some instantaneous action, and which, if untrue, should condemn Dr. Fulton as one of the worst men who ever wore the robes of a clergyman. But can Dr. Fulton be mistaken? Can he be uttering and printing falsehoods? It seems as if he must know of the things about which he writes and talks so freely. He has had a career of nearly forty years as a clergyman, and throughout his whole lifetime he has always been esteemed for his fearless denunciations of wrongs and vices. He has a record which can be equalled by but few clergymen now living, and wherever tried he has never been found wanting. He has gone forth from his family, his parish, and his friends to do what he believes to be his specially ordained work, and in spite of the efforts to crush his work and to suppress his book, he seems likely to maintain himself nobly before all the world, and to secure for his book a circulation never before heard of in the annals of book-making.

TO THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN:—Respectfully represent the undersigned, Selectmen of Palmer in said county, and the Boston and Albany Railroad Company, that the highway in said Palmer known as Commercial street is crossed in said Palmer by the railroad of said Company, the railroad of the New London Northern Railroad Company, and the railroad of the Ware River Railroad Company, the said highway passing under said railroads; that the passage-way is long, narrow and dangerous, and the undersigned are of the opinion that it is necessary for the security and convenience of the public, as well as to enable the said Boston and Albany Railroad Company to construct at and near said crossing a suitable and convenient approach to its passenger station in said Palmer, that said passage-way should be shortened, widened, and that other alterations should be made in the crossing, the approaches thereto, the location of the said railroads, highway, and in the bridge at said crossing.

We therefore pray that after due notice you will hear all parties interested, and if you decide that such alteration is necessary, certify your decision in the matter to the parties and also to the board of railroad commissioners, and take such other action in the premises as to you shall seem meet and proper.

TO THE HONORABLE JUSTICES OF THE SUPERIOR COURT, holden at Springfield, within and for the County of Hampden. Humbly shews Mary Decker of Palmer, in said County of Hampden, that she was lawfully married to Charles Decker, then of Altona, Clinton County and State of New York, and now of Brandon, Rutland County and State of Vermont, at Mooers, Clinton County and State of New York, on the tenth day of August A. D. 1872, that they have since lived together as husband and wife in Altona, Shadiga Lake, and Woods Falls, all in the State of New York, in Middleboro', in the State of Vermont, and in said Palmer until September last, since which time they have lived separate and apart from each other, and she has ever conducted towards him as a faithful, chaste and affectionate wife yet the said Charles Decker, regardless of his marriage vows and obligations, has contracted gross and confirmed habits of intoxication. Wherefore she prays that the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between her and the said Charles Decker, may be dissolved, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.

THE INCURABLE CURED!

Hopkinsville, Ky., Feb. 24, 1887.

Gentlemen—Seven years ago a sore developed on my nose from a finger nail scratch. I tried a few simple remedies, but the sore would not yield. I grew worse every year for seven years. Many thought I had a cancer. Over a year ago I began to take S. S. S., and two dozen bottles entirely cured me. When I began with Swift's Specific I was in very poor health, and could hardly drag about. After I had finished the course of S. S. S. I was strong and buoyant, and had a good appetite. I regard it as a most valuable medicine for ladies in weak, delicate health. It is a household medicine with me. Yours respectfully,

Mrs. R. W. Wilson.

Spartansburg, S. C., April 2, 1887.

Gentlemen—For twenty years I have had a sore on my left cheek. I had gradually been growing worse. The many physicians whom I had consulted were unable to do me any good. Last fall a year ago I began using S. S. S. At first it inflamed the sore, and it became more virulent than ever; so much so, indeed, that my family insisted that I should leave off the medicine. I persisted in using the S. S. S. At the end of two months the sore was entirely healed. Thinking that the evil was out of my constitution, I left off the medicine; but in November, ten months after a very slight breaking out appeared. I at once began again on S. S. S. It has done me more good than all the doctors and other medicines I ever took. Yours truly,

A. R. Shands.

Winston, N. C., April 12. 1887.

Gentlemen—Two or three years ago a cancer came on my face. It soon grew to be quite large. It wore on me, and my general health was very poor. Last September I began a course of S. S. S., which I have continued to the present time with there happiest result. The cancer entirely disappeared, there being no evidence or symptom of a cancerous character left. My general health is good now, and my appetite better than it has been for years. I am 82 years old, and to-day I am working in the field planting corn. Yours truly,

Jonas Limebach.

Gentlemen—I had a sore on my upper lip for eight years. Seven different doctors attempted in vain to heal it. One gave me a small vial for five dollars, which was a "certain cure." It is needless to say it did me no good. About two years ago I became quite uneasy, as people thought I had a cancer, and I took a course of eighteen bottles of S. S. S. The result has been a complete cure. The ulcer or cancer healed beautifully, leaving scarcely a perceptible scar. From that day I have been in excellent health, the Specific having purified my blood thoroughly, increased my appetite and perfected my digestion. In a word, I feel like a new person, and, best of all, the 8-year ulcer is gone entirely. Yours truly, Mrs. W. P. Cannon.

MASON & HAMLIN

ORGANS. The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861.
$22 TO $900.
Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. GRAND AND UPRIGHT. Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinay claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason and Hamlin Piano Stringer," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.

A circular containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

For a Little Bird Tells.

It's strange how little boys' mothers
Can find it all out as they do
If a fellow does anything naughty,
Or says anything that's not true?
They'll look at you just a moment,
Till your heart in your bosom swells,
And then they know all about it—
For a little bird tells!

Now where the little bird comes from,
Or where the little bird goes,
If he's covered with beautiful plumage
Or black as the king of the crows,
If his voice is as hoarse as a raven
Or clear as the ringing bells,
I know not—but this I am sure of—
A little bird tells!

The moment you think a thing wicked,
The moment you do a thing bad,
Are angry, or sullen or hateful,
Get ugly or stupid or mad,
Or tease a dear brother or sister—
That instant your sentence he knells,
And the whole to mamma in a minute
That little bird tells!

You may be in the depths of a closet
Where nobody sees but a mouse!
You may be all alone in the cellar,
You may be on the top of the house,
You may be in the dark and the silence,
Or out in the woods and the dells—
No matter! Wherever it happens,
The little bird tell!

And the only contrivance to stop him
Is just to be sure what you say—
Sure of your facts and your fancies,
Sure of your work and your play;
Be honest, be brave and be kindly,
Be gentle and loving as well,
And then—you can laugh at the stories
The little bird tells!

OLD LEAP-YEAR LAWS.

It is commonly supposed that leap-year is an invention of the playful mind, and that it never had a more serious existence than it now has in the acts of those sportive young people who give leap-year parties to which the ladies escort the gentlemen, and who laugh over the idea of a lady asking a gentleman to become her husband.

But there was a time when leap year was a serious affair; when men were compelled by law to recognize seriously the matrimonial proposition of women. For example, there was an old Saxon code, one section of which ran thus:

"Albeit, as often as leape yearre dothe occure, the woman holdeth prerogative over the menne in matters of courtships, love and matrimonie; so that, when the lady proposeth, it shall not be lawful for the man to say her nae, but shall entertaine her proposall in all gude curtesie."

Among the old Saxon statutes still preserved is to be found one, bearing the date of 1228, which contains this business-like section:

"It is stutut and ordaint that durin the reine of her maist blessit majestic, ilk maiden layde of baith high and low estait shall have liberty to bespeak ye man she likes; albyit, if he refuses to take her to be wif, he shall be mulcted in the sum of one pound (£1) or less, as his estait may be, except and awis if he can make it appear that he is betrothed to one woman, and then he shall be free."

We find nowhere any statute intimating that a woman can be held for breach of promise, nor is there anything in the law to prevent her going up and down all Scotland and proposing to every man she meets till she has either found one who will accept her proposition or has had every unengaged bachelor in the realm fined for refusing her.

And yet there are people who say woman, through all history, have been crushed down and enslaved and abused, and that never before were they treated so well as they are to-day.—Chicago Times.

HE GOT THE JOB.

When Amos Cummings arrived in New York, after the war, he had a most excellent opportunity to be a tramp. All he possessed beside a job lot of ragged clothes on his back was 20 cents worth of postage stamps badly glued together. He wore a pair of battered cavalry boots and about three-quarters of a pair of trousers. The place where the missing parts of the latter should have been was concealed by a sunburned army overcoat. In this garb he climbed up to Horace Greeley's editorial den and asked Mr. Greeley for a job. He did not ask to be appointed to either the position of managing editor or foreman. He was willing to do anything.

"No place for you," squeaked Greeley, without turning from his desk to look at the applicant, "don't you see I'm busy? G'way! Scat! Damit!"

"But I tell you I must have a job." Mr. Greeley turned around his revolving chair, and, glaring at Cummings, said: "Must? For what reason, young man, do you say must?"

"For this reason," replied Amos, turning his back on Mr. Greeley, lifting the drapery of his old blue overcoat and exhibiting the vacant places where the wild winds had whistled through his trousers. He got the job.—J. Armoy Knox.

"My mother gets me up, builds the fire, gets my breakfast and sends me off," said a bright youth. "What then?" said the reporter. "Then she gets my father up and gets his breakfast and sends him off, then gets the other children their breakfast and sends them to school, and then she and the baby have their breakfast." "How old is the baby?" "O, she is most two, but she can walk and talk as well as any of us." "Are you well paid?" "I get $2 a week; father gets $2 a day." "How much does your mother get?" With a bewildered look the boy said: "Mother! why, she don't work for anybody." "I thought you said she worked for all of you?" "O, yes, she does, but there ain't no money in it.—American Farmer.

Young Man—"Are you not afraid, dear, to entrust your future happiness to my care? Remember, it may be a case of love in a cottage." Girl (heroically)—"Ah, George, can you doubt my love? And besides, we spent last summer at Newport, you know, and the cottage we occupied was simply delightful."—Harper's Bazar.

* * *

"I have long loved your daughter, sir," he said, "and I would fain make her my wife." "You would what make her your wife?" demanded the old man, who has knots on his head. "I would fain make her my wife, sir." "Well, I would fain say thee nay," with bitter sarcasm. "A young man who uses such language as you do would have to stand his landlord off for the second month's rent."—New York Sun.

I Was Astonished.

Children often suffer greatly from impure blood until a good medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla, is taken to expel impurities and give vitality.

READ THIS:

"I think it my duty to tell how much good Hood's Sarsaparilla did my little girl. She was from birth puny, pale and sickly, and did not gain strength as she grew older Even when three years of age she could not stand alone She ate hardly anything, and seemed to be weak constitutionally; but was doubtless kept back by impure blood, which caused her much discomfort and suffering. She had scald head terribly, her head being covered with one sore. I decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I was astonished at the effect the first bottle had on her. Her appetite began to pick up, and soon we could hardly give her enough to eat She also gained strength, could stand alone, and the sore on her head began to grow less. We soon healed that up with Hood's Olive ointment, and when she had taken three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla she could run about the house as smart as any child. She has been bright and hearty ever since. I write this out of pure gratitude to Hood's Sarsaparilla." E.T. Alexander, 28 Cleaves street, Portland, Me.

THE NEW HIGH SCHOOL BUILDING,

Of which a perspective view and floor plans are given above, will be of brick, two stories high and of unique design; it will have a handsome tower, which will rise at the corner of Thorndike and Park streets, of brick as high as the second story; above that it will be an octagon the remainder of the way, and the material will be of wood. The main entrance will be on the Park street side and designed for girls; it will have a large semi-circular arch of moulded brick. Over the entrance for boys on Thorndike street will be a large window of cathedral glass, designed to light the stairways. Large triple windows in upper and lower stories of the building, and surrounded by brick arches heavily moulded, will adorn the sides of the structure and furnish excellent light for the students. She first floor will contain two large class rooms, the dimensions of which will be 20x30 feet, while the height will be 12 feet. These rooms will be well lighted and ventilated and located in the rear of the building. At the right of the main entrance will be the laboratory, and apparatus department, while near this is to be a stairway leading to the second story, where will be located a large assembly room 30x40 feet, to be used for high school entertainments and a place in which the board of education can transact its business. A small brick addition to the main structure will be built, in which there will be a stairway leading to the ground, to be used only in case of fire. In front of the first story, where the tower is, will be located the high-school library, which will be provided with many choice works. On the opposite side of the hall will be the teachers' room, while very near this will be the girls' lunch-room. The astronomical department will be located in the top of the tower, and will be fitted up in elegant style, as will also many of the other rooms. The basement will be used by the students for recreation and play rooms. The structure will be finished in white wood throughout, heated by steam, and will accommodate about 100 students.

Old Scotch Song.

I hae a curl, a bricht brown curl,
A bonny, bonny curl o' hair,
And close to my heart it nestles warm,
But its brithers dinna ken it's there

I stole my curl, my silk-saft curl,
My bonny, bonny curl o' hair,
An' a' the nicht it sleeps upon my heart,
But its master doesna ken it's there.

O, bricht, bricht curl! O, luvely, luvely curl!
O, curl o' my bonny, bonny dear!
I wad that again ye waur shinin' on his head,
But I wad that his head waur here!

THE TALE OF A SHIRT.

"Dear me," sighed Mrs. Eastman, as she looked at the clock and then glanced around at the amount of work awaiting to be done, "I do wish Jessie took an interest in housework; I'm sure I don't know what she will do if she ever has a home of her own."

"I shall be sorry for her husband if she ever has one," replied Mr. Eastman; "she will be a wretched housekeeper. I don't see why it is; her mother was a great worker, and I am sure you have set her a good example all her life."

"One reason it grieves me so, John, is that I am afraid people will blame me, and say if she was my own child it would be different."

"No one will say so that knows you, Hattie; her own mother never would have been as kind and patient with her as you have been, and I think the time is coming when she will see she has made a mistake in not trying to learn while she had so good a housekeeper to pattern after," and with a look that showed how well satisfied he was with the housekeeper, Mr. Eastman left the room.

Mr. Eastman was a farmer, and was what his neighbors called "well-to-do." His first wife had died when Jessie, their second child, was a baby, but neither she or Tom, two years oldre, had ever missed their mother's care since Mr. Eastman had brought home his second wife, who petted, loved and humored the children as if they had been her own.

Tom was attending college now, but Mr. Eastman considered it better for girls to learn good practical housekeeping than Greek and Latin. So, after Jessie had graduated from the little seminary in the adjoining village, she had come home.

But as far as learning to be a housekeeper was concerned, Jessie might as well have gone to college with Tom. She had never liked housework, and she would not try to learn, and Mrs. Eastman, finding how unwilling she was to help about anything, soon stopped asking her, fearing Jessie would think she was trying to make her work more than her own mother would have done.

Mr. Eastman would speak about it sometimes, and say how bad it would be for her when she had a home of her own; but Jessie would only laugh and say:

"You talk as if housekeeping was a very difficult matter; when I have a house I shall take an interest in the work, and you will find that I can be a good housekeeper without fussing over it all the time beforehand."

Time went on, and Mrs. Eastman did the work alone, while Jessie played on the piano or read poetry in the hammock, with no thought that the time would ever come when she would be willing to give her knowledge of music and poetry both for the least insight into the much-despised art.

One afternoon Tom and his friend and fellow-student, Walter Herndon, came down unexpectedly.

"Prof. G—— was ill," Tom said, and so was glad to give them a couple of days' vacation, and he had coaxed Walter to spend the time with him.

To tell the truth, he had not needed much coaxing. He had been home with Tom a few times before, and the remembrance of the hours spent in Jessie's company made him accept Tom's invitation at once.

The evening passed very pleasantly, and Walter resolved that, before his visit was over, he would ask Jessie to be his wife. Early the next morning Mr. Eastman received a telegram. Mrs. Eastman's only sister was very sick. They must go at once if they wished to see her.

Mrs. Eastman thought of Jessie, even in her grief.

"How will she get along with the work?" she said.

"Don't worry about the work," said Tom. "Walter and I will help her."

"I think I had better help her by returning to town to-morrow," said Walter, but neither Tom nor Mrs. Eastman would hear to that, and begged him to stay.

"We shall be so lonesome with every one gone," said Tom, and as Jessie added her entreaties, he promised to remain.

When they returned from the depot, after seeing Mrs. Eastman on the train, they found Jessie in the kitchen. She did not, as yet, doubt her ability to do the work as it should be done, so made no objections when they proposed coming to help her, and they offered to shell the peas for her, while she mixed the bread Mrs. Eastman had set the night before.

She never thought of putting in any salt, or more water, but mixed it up just as it was, blushing as her inexperienced hands scattered the flour down the front of her dress and on the floor, and she saw that Walter was looking at her.

At last the rough, lumpy looking dough was as hard as she could mix it, and with flushed cheeks and aching arms, Jessie set it aside and prepared to clean up the flour she had spilled, feeling more awkward than she ever had in her life.

It was not as hard to make the beds and rearrange the parlor, and when it was done she returned to the kitchen. Knowing Mrs. Eastman's bread was always baked before dinner, she at once built up the fire and prepared to bake hers. There did not seem to be as much of it as her mother made, and she could not make nicely shaped loaves, but she got it into the tins somehow, and put it at once into the oven.

Oh, that dinner! as long as Jessie lives she will never forget how mortifird and embarrassed she felt as she sat at the table and listened to Tom's surprised remarks as he tried the various articles of food she had prepared.

The peas were cooked into a thin batter, while the potatoes were only half done, the meat was burnt on the outside, and raw in the middle, and the bread was—as Tom said—"fearfully and wonderfully made," being heavy and hard, and spotted here and there with lumps of unmixed flour, and smelling strongly of yeast.

There was nothing she could say, no excuse she could offer, and she sat still trying to keep back the tears, while the young men made their dinner off stale bread and crackers, and tried to lessen her embarrassment by appearing not to notice it.

She was thankful when they were leaving the dinner table to hear Tom ask Walter to go for a boat ride, never dreaming that his doing so would make her still more trouble.

She had just got the dishes washed when they returned. Tom was laughing and Jessie could not help joining him as she looked at Walter.

In pushing off the boat Tom's paddle had slipped and sent a shower of muddy water all over his friend.

"Get one of father's shirts for him, Jess," said her brother as soon as he could speak; "we expected to go back to-night, so did not bring any extra clothes with us."

Jessie returned from her father's room after a prolonged absence with a colored shirt hanging over her arm.

"He has taken all his clean white shirts with him, I guess," she said; "this is all I can find."

"That will do just as well, thanks," said Walter. "Now, can you tell me where I can find a laundress?"

"There is no one around here does work of that kind," said Tom; "any of our neighbors would be offended for life if you asked them to wash a shirt for pay. Jessie will do that up for you. You can't go back to town in that colored one."

Poor Jess! Common politeness demanded she should offer to do up the shirt, and she did so, blushing a little as Walter said.

"I do hate to make you so much trouble, but as there is no laundry here I suppose I shall have to. I see by your own collars and cuffs that I am giving the task into skillful hands."

Washing the shirt was easy enough, and Jessie felt quite victorious as she saw how white it looked in the rinsing water.

"I wonder how much starch it will need," she thought, as she took down the package; "men always have their shirts awful stiff, it must take lots." So she poured about half the package into a pan and prepared it according to the directions on the box.

They went for a drive while the shirt was drying, and in discussing the scenery Jessie forgot her discomfiture over the dinner, and appeared as light-hearted as ever. But even the pleasant ride must come to an end, and as they drew near the house the thought of getting tea ready began to weigh upon her mind. She did not anticipate any trouble ironing the shirt. She had seen Mrs. Eastman iron them often, and it looked very easy. So she was surprised as well as dismayed when the starch stuck to the iron and onto the cloth, in great black patches that would not rub off, in spite of all she could do. There was something wrong with it, but she could not tell what; it was surely stiff enough, she could hardly bend it. She worked away desperately, scraping with a knife, and rubbing it with a wet rag, until she was making it worse instead of better. It was a curious looking garment to be called clean, and Jessie stood looking at it with her eyes full of tears, wondering what she should do, and what the fastidious Walter Herndon would say when he saw it, when she heard Tom and him coming.

She would have put it out of sight before they got in the room, but she was too late. Tom Spied it, and burst into an uncontrollable fit of laughter, in which Walter, in spite of his pity for Jessie, soon joined.

"Oh, Moses!" gasped Tom, "she's starched the whole shirt!"

Jessie glanced from Tom's laughing face to the shirt and realized in a moment the mistake she had made. Tears of real mortification filled her eyes, and she hastily left the room just as Mr. and Mrs. Eastman came in at the gate.

They had found Mrs. Walton much better, entirely out of danger, Mr. Eastman said, and Mrs. Eastman, feeling worried on account of the work, had insisted on coming home; but where was Jessie, and why had she not come to speak to them?

Tom soon explained matters, and although Mr. Eastman felt very sorry for his daughter, there was a merry twinkle in his eyes, that Tom nor Walter did not understand, as he said:

"Do not think me hard and unfeeling if I say I am very glad this has happened. It is better for Jessie to feel mortified and humiliated for a few hours now, than to ruin her own and husband's happiness, if she ever has a home of her own."

Jessie could not be induced to partake of the tasteful supper Mrs. Eastman prepared, and she did not come down stairs the next day until Tom and Walter had gone.

But she profited by the lesson she had received, and the next Christmas when Walter again went down to the farm-house with Tom, Mr. Eastman told them, with pardonable pride, that every article of food on the well-filled table was prepared by Jessie's own hands.

Jessie is now Mrs. Walter Herndon, and is a model housekeeper, but her father declares she would not have been if they had not left her to keep house the time Mrs. Walton took sick; and although Tom is now a grave judge, he often laughs at his sister about her way of doing up shirts.

BOSTON TALK IN ARKANSAS.

"I desire to retire," said a Boston guest to the proprietor of a hotel in Arkansas.

"You which?" asked the dazed man.

"I desire to retire."

"You what?"

"I desire to retire."

"Well—I—I—I'll be durned if I b'lieve we've go it in the house, mister."

"Got what?" said the amazed gest. "I didn't ask for anything."

"Well, say it agin, an' see if I kin ketch on."

"It is strange you cannot understand plain English. I simply said I desire to retire; that is, I wish to go to my room."

"Oh—aw—oh! That's hit? You want to turn in, eh? Why'nt you say so? We don't know nothin' about 'desirin' to retire' here in Arkansas. We just put off to bed."

And when he came down stairs he said to his wife: "If that's the way they talk in Boston, it ain't no wonder there's so many fools there. 'Desire to retire.' Well, I'll be blowed!"

The Rescued Youth.

I knew a youth with a noble soul,
And a step all proud and free,
But he loved too well the sparkling bowl
And the midnight revelry.
But the lapse of years the secret told,
'Twas seen in his feeble tread,
Till one dark night from his steed he rolled,
And the deep ditch was his bed.
Then I heard a voice from heaven proclaim:
"That man is a brother to thee;
Leave him not there in his guilt and shame,
And helpless misery."

Then up I rose and the place I sought,
And I thundered in his ear,
But he lay like a stone—he heeded not—
How could the drunkard hear?
Then slowly to my home I turned,
And breathed an earnest prayer
That God, with His omniscient grace,
Would save from every snare,
Still I heard that voice from heaven proclaim:
"That man is a brother to thee;
Leave him not there in his guilt and shame,
And helpless misery."

Then back I flew on the wings of love,
And raised the fallen youth,
And help was given me from above
To speak the words of truth.
Then up he rose that night,
The pledge he signed,
And now once more his friends rejoice
O'er that noble and rescued mind.
For I heard that voice from heaven proclaim:
"That man is a brother to thee,
Leave him not there in his guilt and shame,
And helpless misery."

A DANGEROUS DODGE.

"Did I get anything in there?" repeated a dilapidated looking fellow as he came down the steps of a Jefferson avenue residence yesterday. "Well, you can cackle to cachinate that I did."

"They generally bang the door against the toes of tramps."

"And they ought to. Not one tramp in fifty knows how to work a house."

"How did you work that one?"

"Well, my ring at the bell was answered by a servant girl. I lifted my cap to her and said:

"'Please inform the lady that a gentleman desires to communicate with her."

"In a minute the lady herself was before me, and I took off my cap again, made a very low bow, and said:

"'Redivus imprimus defacto curanter.'

"'Which?' she says.

"'Oh, you don't speak Latin? Very few ladies do. You, of course, speak French, German and Spanish? In which language shall I say to you that I have met with misfortune, and desire food, an old coat and a little money?"

"'Oh, you need'nt mind, being as you have told me in English. Go to the kitchen and the girl will attend to you.'

"Thanks, ma'am. Bon jour republique, ma foi.'

"'O, of course.'

"'Sabe que es pulque camarjo?'

"Certainly I will. I am sorry for your misfortune, and will hunt up a suit for you.'"

"And there's the suit?"

"You bet; and she gave me a square meal and 30 cents in cash to boot. Recherche de jean hoehandle."

"Oui, santiago de cheese-box."

GREELEY'S PENMANSHIP.

There have been more jokings over Horace Greeley's execrable handwriting than we could name, but the annexed one is certainly the best. Once upon a time Mr. M. B. Castle of Sandwich, Illinois, invited Mr. Greeley to lecture. To this the following reply was sent:

DEAR SIR—I am overworked and growing old. I shall be 60 next February 3d. On the whole it seems I must decline to lecture henceforth, except in this immediate vicinity, if I do at all. I cannot promise to visit Illinois on that errand—certainly not now. Yours, HORACE GREELEY.

M. B. Castle, Sandwich, Ill.

We can partly imagine the great efforts made by the lecture committee and others to decipher Horace's pothooks, and the delight which they must have felt at their success in extracting their general meaning. That they did so will be seen from the following epistle forwarded in due time to Mr. Greeley:

SANDWICH, ILL., May 12th.

Horace Greeley, New York Tribune:

DEAR SIR—Your acceptance to lecture before our association next winter came to hand this morning. Your penmanship not being the plainest, it took some time to translate it, but we succeeded, and would say your time—"third of February," and terms, "sixty dollars"—are perfectly satisfactory. As you suggest, we may be able to get you other engagements in this immediate vicinity; if so, we will advise you.

Yours respectfully,
M. B. CASTLE.

HIS SENSE OF THE RIDICULOUS.

The other afternoon, as we were strolling out Woodward avenue, a swell young fellow entered a car and recognized a fellow swell, when the following conversation ensued:

"Aw, there, Chawley, me boy."

"Aw, there, Fweddie, old chappie."

"Wery slipwy, Chawley."

"Indeed, Fweddie, that weminds me of w'at happened w'ile I waiting for the caw—ah."

"W'at was it, Chawley?"

"W'y, one of those fellahs of the—ah—of the—of the—ah—twade clawses, you know—ah—was carrying a basket of—ah—ah—hen's fwruit, you know—ah, w'en he began to look at me, the beastly fellah, instead of where he was walking, and he slipped up—ah—and dropped his basket of ah—ah—hen's fwuit, and sat wight down in it—ah, and it so gwatified my sense of the widiculous that I actually smiled, Fweddie, actually smiled—ah."—Detroit Free Press.

Laundry women are most humble and forgiving beings on earth. The more cuffs you give them the more they will do for you.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 20, 1888.

Louisiana's state election, Tuesday, resulted in a large Democratic majority.

Emperor Frederick of Germany is steadily failing, and his death may be expected any day.

The New York Assembly has passed a bill substituting electricity for hanging in the execution of criminals.

Next week Saturday has been designated as Arbor Day by Gov. Ames, who urges citizens of the state to observe the day in accordance with its intent.

President Cleveland is at his old tricks again, rashly vetoing pension bills which appear objectionable, to him, just as though a presidential campaign were not pending.

With Congressmen Whiting, Russell and Hayden positively declining a renomination, and Messrs. Collins and Morse about ready to follow suit, there is a chance for some lively times in the congressional districts next fall.

It would not be strange if the sonorous tones of Gen. Banks's voice were heard again in the halls of Congress. Congressman Hayden is going to retire, anyway, and there is a very kindly feeling for the general in the 5th district, as well as through the state. The whirligig of time brings many stranger things to pass.

Anent the proposition of the Women's Christian Temperance Union to put $800,000 into national headquarters at Chicago, the Boston Record suggests that with all the practical temperance work there is to be accomplished, and the existing misery caused by intemperance, a better and more practical use for the money might be found.

High license accomplishes something in Philadelphia, where it has reduced the number of retail stores from 6500 to 2000. This of course means a immense loss to the wholesalers, as well as to the saloon men who have not obtained licenses, and a determined effort is to be made to secure the repeal of the most obnoxious features of the law.

Secretary Fairchild calls for offerings of 4 or 4½ per cent bonds, in order to dispose of the $105,000,000 surplus funds now in the treasury. The country would be very glad to see this sum restored to business channels, but there is considerable doubt about the ability of the secretary to obtain bonds enough, at a reasonable figure, to enable him to do it

Indiana "White Caps" display very good judgment in some of their pranks. They look sharply after the morals of the community, and the other evening they visited a widow's house near New Albany and gave her three boys a sound thrashing because they are too lazy to work, and let their mother support them. An infusion of White Cap justice wouldn't be amiss in some localities in the East.

Municipal suffrage for women has a very innocent and harmless sound, but the men of Kansas have found a sting to it so soon. They gallantly helped put the women in office in several towns, and now the fair officials have set to work to banish billiard tables from their precincts. With no billiards and no saloons, the state of the male sex in Kansas will be truly deplorable. They may even be forced to spend their evenings at home with their wives ultimately. Sad, indeed, is the fate they have brought upon themselves.

There is a falling out between the New York brewers and their employes because the former will not concede the right of the union to which their men belong to control the hiring and discharge of employes, as well as their pay. The workingmen propose to boycott beer until the brewers yield, and if they only stick to their proposition it will be a good thing for them. The employers will not grant their demands, that is certain, but if the men will boycott beer until they lose their desire for it, it will be to their lasting advantage.

Roscoe Conkling, whose serious illness was announced last week, died at the Hoffman House, New York, at an early hour Wednesday morning. Possessed of a splendid physique, temperate and abstemious in his habits, he had every prospect of attaining a ripe old age, but even his physical resources were not equal to the strain which he endured when battling with the March blizzard, when he walked from his downtown office to his hotel. Mr. Conkling's career is well known. For 20 years he was in Congress, attaining the zenith of his reputation and power during the presidency of Gen. Grant, whose stanch supporter he became. Seven years ago this spring, after the accession of President Garfield, Conkling, with his colleague, "Me Too" Platt, resigned his seat in the Senate, because he could not control the federal patronage as formerly. He has since devoted himself successfully to the acquirement of fame and fortune at the bar. He was a man of commanding intellectual ability, yet lacking the breadth of genuine statesmanship. Mr. Conkling was 59 years of age. He leaves a widow and one daughter.

A man and woman were found on the streets of Portland, Me., yesterday afternoon dead from bullet wounds, and there is no clue to the mystery.

The Bethel Home at St. Louis was burned last night and one life lost. Fifty women escaped by jumping into life-saving nets.

A new pipe line of 210 miles, costing $2,250,000, is to be laid from Lima, O., to Chicago, by the Standard Oil Company.

Every store at Monmouth Center, Me., was burned yesterday afternoon, causing a loss of $75,000.

Matther Arnold died suddenly of heart disease at Liverpool last Sunday.

Dr. Cornelius R. Agnew, the famous New York specialist, died on Wednesday.

Mrs. Garfield has an annual income of over $20,000.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Good tenement to rent—22 Main street.

Quaker Rolled Oats are sold everywhere in two-pound packages, at 12 cents.

F. S. Mason will open his paint and paper hanging store, next to the Journal office, Monday, April 23.

The Sunday-school of the Second Congregational church has appropriated $25 to be expended in the purchase of new books for the library.

Prof. A. A. Rhuland of Boston gave a free lecture upon the manner of controlling and educating horses, at the Weeks House, Tuesday evening.

Dr. O. P. Allen has a number of copies of the state agricultural report for 1887, for free distribution to members of the agricultural society.

Contractor George W. Lyman will finish work on the electric light station to-morrow night. The engines and dynamos will be placed in position next week.

The Palmer Dramatic Club will hold a meeting soon to determine what to do with its scenery and other property. The club also has some money in the treasury.

The electric fire alarm gong has been removed from George B. Kenerson's house on Park street and placed in Chief Engineer Hitchcock's residence on Knox Street.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Second Congregational church will give its pink coffee party and broom drill this evening. Souvenir cups will be given all who take supper.

The suit of William Merriam of this place against the town of Monson, for damages received, will be settled by the selectmen of that town, in whose hands the matter has been placed.

The Palmer Fire Department held a special meeting at the engine house Tuesday evening, Chief Engineer Hitchcock giving the firemen some good points pertaining to the welfare of the district.

George W. Powers of Brimfield has been putting in the cellar this week for a new house on Dewey's hill, which he will erect this spring. Work upon the other house which he is to build will also be begun soon.

Michael Roche of Thorndike and Miss Ellen Scannell of this place were married at St. Thomas' Catholic church Tuesday morning at 8 o'clock by Rev. T. J. Sullivan. The nuptial mass was witnessed by a large number.

The April Practical Mechanic of Worcester gives an interesting sketch of the life of Thomas Blanchard, formerly of Palmer, and the inventor of the lathe for turning gun stocks, as being one of the great inventors of the country.

Proprietor Haradon of the Nassowanno House has made some decided changes in the internal appearance of the house since he assumed the management. The house has been thoroughly renovated and new furniture added in some instances.

Chief Engineer Hitchcock of the Palmer Fire Department contemplates giving the electric fire-alarm a thorough test in the near future, in order that the citizens of the fire district may become better accustomed to the working of the apparatus.

Arrangements have been made whereby express matter for Springfield and points west is now sent at 10.32 a. m., which change the merchants of the place will no doubt appreciate, as formerly no shipment could be made west between 8.09 a. m. and 5.30 p. m.

The petition which was circulated among the business men relative to closing their stores two evenings a week during the summer months, received the names of all but two or three, consequently the stores will remain open according to the custom of former years.

A perspective view and floor plans of the new high school building appear on the first page to-day. The Journal has refrained from publishing the cuts before, as it was not definitely known that this was the building which would be built, the matter being undecided until after the adjourned town meeting.

The Ladies' Society of St. Pauls' Universalist church held an entertainment at the parlors last evening which was in the form of a reception to Rev. Mr. Betts, who has just returned from an extended vacation in the south. A supper was served and a very creditable dramatic entertainment given in conclusion.

A Republican caucus was held at the district court room Tuesday evening, with a small attendance. Judge Robinson was chosen chairman and F. A. Packard secretary. These delegates were elected: State convention—Stephen S. Taft, J. S. Holden and F. A. Packard; twelfth district convention—George Robinson, O. P. Allen and W. C. Greene.

There was a "coon" dance at the house of one of that class in town last Saturday night, and it was attended by a large number, Springfield being well represented. Besides music and dancing there was a bountiful supply of the ardent, brought all the way from Chicopee (?), and quite a number of the revelers became badly paralyzed—for the time being.

The Palmer Wire Manufacturing Company commenced last Saturday to suspend business at 1 o'clock p. m. in order that the operatives in its employ may have a half-holiday throughout the summer. The other industries have also agreed to adopt the half holiday system, begining with May 1st, which is done principally to allow those who wish to attend the ball games on the park.

The funeral of Henry Squiers, who died at Silver street Saturday night, was held at his late residence Tuesday afternoon. The deceased was 56 years of age, his death having been caused by hemorrhage, which was the result of injuries received during the late war. He was a member of company I, 32d regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers, and fought in the battles of Prebble's Farm and the Wilderness.

The barber shop and pool room under the Converse House, which has been kept by C. L. Teague for the past two years, was vacated this week and after May 1 will be opened by C. P. Stone, who will move his bar from its present location in the Converse House to that place, in connection with which he will put in pool and billiard tables. Mr. Teague will open a barber shop at South Framingham.

The concert at St. Paul's Universalist church Tuesday evening by the Apollo Club of North Brookfield was well attended. Miss Marion Sterns, the well-known reader, rendered the "Roman Chariot Race" and a sketch from "The Tramp Abroad" in a pleasing manner, and was obliged to respond to encores. The solos by H. S. Lytle and M. E. Howard were exceptionally well given, both being called out for the second time.

Miss Jessie E. Parks, daughter of W. R. Parks, was married Wednesday afternoon, at the residence of her parents in this place, to John P. Wheeler of Hartford, Ct., treasurer of the Connecticut Trust and Safe Deposit Company. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Howard W. Pope of the Second Congregational church, in the presence of the relatives and a few immediate friends. The presents were numerous and costly. The newly-wedded pair will reside at Hartford, after a brief tour.

The property on Main street belonging to the late Joseph Thompson was sold at auction Wednesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock by George H. Newton of Monson. There were but two bidders, John M. Converse of this place and E. A. Hall of Springfield, the latter claiming to represent Mrs. Thompson. The property on the corner of Main and Thorndike streets was sold to Mr. Hall for $5500, as was also the residence for $1600, both being subject to the widow's right of dower. It is understood that the same property will be sold at auction again shortly.

At the district court Saturday Sidney Kelsey paid fine and costs of $5.43 for an assault upon his daughter, Emma A. Kelsey. The juveniles who were arrested on the charge of breaking and entering the school house at the wire mill recently also had a hearing the same day and pleaded guilty. They were allowed two weeks in which to pay their fines. O. M. Southwick's case will be heard the 28th. He is charged with selling liquor on Fast Day. Henry Hanson had a hearing Wednesday morning for several misdemeanors which he has recently committed. His case was continued to the 28th.

The reading room which has been maintained for some time past for the good of the public, will be closed to-morrow evening, providing immediate financial aid is not rendered. The institution is one that the citizens of the town should encourage and support. There are many operatives employed in the different mills in town who have found the reading room a great source of entertainment and instruction, and its discontinuance will be sincerely regretted. The attendance this month has been larger than any one this year, which goes to show that a reading room is what a community the size of Palmer should not be without.

A base ball meeting was held at the district court Monday evening to elect a manager for the Palmers for the ensuing season. D. F. Holden was unanimously chosen to that position, and the first match game of the season will be played on the park to-morrow afternoon between the Palmers and a local picked nine. The game is called in order that the boys may get some practice. Most of those who played in last season's team will be retained, and with the new battery which the management will try to secure, there is not much doubt but what the local team will win its share of the games. Another special meeting will probably be held next Monday evening.

A Narrow Escape.

A fatal accident was narrowly averted last Friday afternoon on the Boston & Albany Raiload in the vicinity of Blanchardville. A son and daughter of Frank E. Brown, who were riding toward the village in a team, were met near the Tenneyville crossing by the 5.32 express train from Boston. The horse became frightened and the lad alighted to hold him, but he proved unmanageable, and ran down the tracks ahead of the express at a rapid gait for about thirty rods until he came to a culvert, which overturned the vehicle. The girl fortunately escaped with but few slight scratches, while the animal was fatally injured and had to be killed. The engineer of the express stopped the train in time to prevent any accident.

The Town History.

In accordance with the recent vote of the town authorizing the historical committee to have the history of the town put into manuscript, the committee has engaged Rev. J. H. Temple of South Framingham to prepare it, at an expense of $1400. He will commence his work in about two weeks, and hopes to have it ready for the printer during the summer of 1889. In selecting Mr. Temple it is believed that the committee has made the best choice possible, as he has had much experience in this line, the histories of Northfield, North Brookfield and South Framingham being from his pen, and he has an intimate knowledge of the early history of this section, the Indian language, etc., which will greatly facilitate and also add to the value of this work. E. B. Gates, of the committee, has done a vast amount of labor in locating the early settlers of the town, as well as in preparing the genealogical tables, which are very nearly complete, making an admirable basis for the coming history.

Cut Down the Number.

Notice of the applications for liquor licenses will be found in the advertising columns. The applicants are 32 in number, of which 15 are in this village, 4 in Three Rivers, 9 in Thorndike and 4 in Bondsville, several of the number never having applied before. There is a good deal of feeling that the selectmen would do well to cut down the number of licenses issued, especially in the case of new applicants. There are enough of the old ones without taking on any new, and the town certainly does not need 32 places where liquor can be bought. The selectmen have also appointed a time when they will view the places where it is proposed to exercise the licenses asked for, to see "if you are prepared, as the law requires, to receive a license," and it will be strange if they do not find several which are not properly prepared. There are some places which, if granted a license, would become the very worst kind of dens for all night and Sunday selling. Licenses should be refused any who have been convicted of illegal sales within a year, and the past reputation of some of the applicants should be sufficient to shut off a number more. Several were shut out from applying by the raising of the fees, and the selectmen now have an opportunity to continue their good work by refusing a good share of those who have applied.

Town Meeting Business.

The adjourned town meeting was held in the town hall Monday afternoon, but was not very largely attended, and contrary to all expectation, very little discussion was indulged in. The moderator stated that there were vacancies in some of the offices, those elected failing to qualify, and the following were elected to fill their places: Field drivers, John C. Maguire, Horace Bumpstead, George W. Burdick; surveyors of lumber, Julius Stewart, W. A. Squier; measurers of wood and bark, H. C. Norcross, F. E. Williams, L. C. Flynt.

The article relating to the lighting of the streets was the first taken up. The motion that a committee of five, consisting of the selectmen and two others, appointed by the meeting, have full power to act as they saw fit, called out considerable talk. The matter was discussed for some time, and some hard talk was indulged in; then the motion was lost and the matter indefinitely postponed. Regarding the Blanchardville bridge, the chairman of the selectmen said he had conferred with the selectmen of Palmer in regard to it, and that they thought unless the bridge was rebuilt the county commissioners would be called upon, and they would order the bridge rebuilt, on the ground that it was a county road leading thereto, and could not be closed up. It was then moved that the town of Monson rebuild one-half the bridge, and $1000 was appropriated, this amount to include the stone work.

The committee appointed to look into the town farm barn matter was then called upon to make their report, which was to the effect that all the bills, with the exception of about $50, bore the signatures of the selectmen, and notwithstanding the $1411.60 in excess of the appropriation, the report was accepted without a murmur.

The article "to choose all other necessary town officers" was brought up, and the selectmen appointed highway surveyors. D. G. Potter was elected constable in place of C. L. Stiles, who had failed to qualify, after which the meeting dissolved.

The special meeting was then called. A. A. Gage was chosen moderator. The matter of the suit against the town by William Merriam of Palmer, for receiving bodily injury, also damage to team with which he was riding, by the overthrowing of the sleigh on a drift on the Palmer road, $300 damage being claimed, was left in the hands of the selectmen to settle or fight as they saw fit.

The article regarding the (now or former) wife of Abdel L. Calkins was taken up, support being claimed for her by the town of Brimfield, whose agents said they had procured a copy of the divorce bill obtained by said Calkins, and that it was wholly illegal. The matter was left with the boards of selectmen and overseers of the poor and Daniel G. Potter, to act as they saw fit in regard to the suit.

The selectmen were instructed to sell the Shea house on the cemetery lot at public auction to the highest bidder, after which the meeting dissolved.

NOTES.

It is said that J. F. Heery will bring suit against the town to recover the amount expended in setting the electric light poles.

Many persons are indignant because there was not some action taken to light the streets, while others claim they had rather pay out their money for sidewalks, but the fact stands that we shall wait for both another year at least.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Edward N. Anderson is expecting to sail for Europe June 9, to be gone four months.

There will be services until further notice at the Unitarian church at half-past six Sunday evenings.

The great painting of the battle of Gettysburg that was to have been exhibited at the Town Hall the 27th and 28th of this month for the benefit of J. W. Lawton Post, G. A. R., has been accidentally burned.

It is reported that there are to be ten more electric lights put in to light the streets. Hope it is true; those that are running give the best of satisfaction, and with ten more the village would be splendidly lighted.

A large party at Fireman's hall last evening celebrated the 25th anniversary of the marriage of William J. Canavan, foreman of the Oregon steamer company. Edward T. Hampton, in behalf of the firemen, and James E Clark, in behalf of outside friends, presented Mr. Canavan with a watch and chain, a china tea set and a center table. Refreshments were served and dancing enjoyed.

The Kneisel Quartette concert, to be given at the Town Hall next Tuesday evening promises to be the musical event of the season, as this is the finest string quartette in the country. Parties of the highest musical tastes and culture will be sure to be pleased with this concert. Tickets on sale to-day and to-morrow for subscribers, and Monday and Tuesday for general admission.

At a meeting of the East Congregational society Wednesday evening a report of the committee on repairs of the church was heard, and it was voted to make the repairs and changes as indicated on the plans that have been exhibited. It was also voted that this committee devise means to raise money to pay for the repairs, and report at an adjourned meeting next Wednesday evening.

There are 23 applicants for licenses to sell intoxicating liquors the coming year, more than half this number applying for more than one license. The names of the parties are as follows: Frederick C. Blood, Richard B. Yale, John Bousquet, Patrick Collins, Frederick F. Gilmore, James F. Kane, Jane McGrath, Medcalf & Reed, James O'Connor, John O'Rourke, William J. Volk, Patrick J. Crowe, W. A. DeMerritt, Matilda Bouret, Caryl Brothers, Neil Gormley, Arthur Kane, Owen McArdle, Owen F. McMahon, James Neville, Philibert Renaud, Moses Sorrell, Lawton & Buckley.

The officers of the Ware Grange at Ware Center were elected Wednesday evening, and were installed at the same time by Deputy A. C. Stoddard of North Brookfield: Master, Daniel Sanford; overseer, A. S. Jaquith; lecturer, O. C. Buffington; steward, J. H. Fletcher; assistant steward, Francis Fisherdick; chaplain, Miss D. K. Howard; treasurer, N.J. Trench; secretary, F. W. Harwood; gate keeper, P. J. Nelligan; pomona, Mrs. N. J. Trench; flora, Mrs. W. V. Howard; ceres, Mrs. A. S. Jaquith; lady assistant steward, Mrs. Mary Pierce. There were 19 charter members. Meetings are to be held on the first and third Friday evenings of each month at Farmers' Club Hall.

LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

From our Special Correspondent.

Boston, April 18, 1888.

A bill was reported on Thursday from the committee on agriculture which will have much interest for all farmers and market-gardeners. It provides that every package of fertilizer whose retail price is $10 a ton or over shall bear a statement of the weight, name, brand or trade-mark, and address of the manufacturer or importer, and also the chemical analysis. A certified copy of the same shall be filed with the director of the agricultural experiment station, with a sample of the fertilizer. The director shall issue a certificate of his analysis, for which he shall receive a fee of $5. The bill forbids the use of pulverized leather, unless that fact is expressly stated, and imposes a penalty of from $50 to $100.

A report has been made that the question of an inebriate asylum should be referred to the next Legislature.

The liquor committee reported Thursday a bill that suits may be brought in the first place against sureties on the bond of a liquor dealer, as well as against the liquor dealer himself; also one to add the prohibition of sales on election days to the conditions of the license.

The bill in relation to the employment of children was engrossed Thursday by the House without any essential change, after a long debate. It must yet pass the Senate.

One of the genuine surprises which are occasionally experienced in legislation occurred in the House on Friday, when the committee on public health reported unanimously the bill to prevent the coloring of oleo to imitate butter, which was killed a week before in the Senate. It was the identical bill, except that it did not include cheese, as the Senate bill did, and it was made to take effect October 1 instead of September 1. These changes entitle it to be treated as a new bill, and it cannot be ruled out on the point of order that it has once been rejected. But it had not been in the House more than two hours before the chairman of the committee reporting it, Mr. Wilkinson of Cambridge, who seemed to have been absent from the session of the committee, tried to have it recommitted in order that there might be a further hearing on it. But Mr. Smith of Athol said pretty sharply that it was time to stop such tactics. Mr. Quinn of Boston, of the health committee, said the committee on agriculture had heard the matter enough, and so Mr. Wilkinson was defeated by 37 to 77, and the bill remains on the House calendar.

The public charties committee has reported a bill appropriating $200,000 for new buildings for the school for feeble-minded—$50,000 to be spent this year and $150,000 next year.

Another day has been added to those on which liquor selling of all sorts is prohibited, for the House has agreed without debate to the Senate amendment covering Memorial Day, and now the prohibition extends to election days, Fast Day, Memorial Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas. Five week days and all the Sundays make a very good beginning for absolute prohibition, and it would not be surprising if an effort were made next year to include Washington's birthday, Fourth of July and Labor Day.

The latest twist proposed to be put on the liquor sellers, (bills having just been reported to provide that suits in the first place may be brought against sureties on bonds, and that the prohibition of sales on election days must be a condition of the license), is to change the law which makes the penalty fine or imprisonment so that it shall read fine and imprisonment, thus sending the liquor sellers to jail in any event. The liquor committee was unanimous for the bill, and the labor committee was unanimous for a provision which would put liquor saloons under the term "mercantile establishments," in which the hours of labor of women and minors are limited by law. It looks as if somebody laid awake nights to think of new ways to circumvent liquor selling. No doubt they do, and it is for the good of the state, too.

The Senate on Tuesday showed itself to be in favor of the high license bill, and of the bill for turning all liquor license fees into the state treasury. The latter bill was supported in debate by Senators Gleason of Plymouth, Gleason of Worcester, Howland of Bristol and Sleeper of Middlesex, and was opposed by Senators Hathorne of Suffolk, Sullivan of Suffolk, Spellman of Hampden, Walker of Essex, Kimball of Suffolk and Sprague of Suffolk. The vote on the rejection of the bill, as recommended by the committee, was as follows, including pairs:

Yeas: Collins, Crosby, Hathorne, Howard, Howe, Kimball, Roads, Shea, Spellman, Sprague, Sullivan, Clark of Essex, Slattery, McAlpine, Perkins, Dwyer—16.

Nays: Clark of Hampshire, Fletcher, Gleason of Plymouth, Glines, Hartwell, Howland, Keith of the Cape, Kingsley, Marble, Messinger, Palmer, Sleeper, Southworth, Stevens, Towne, Tucker, Wheelock, Cook, Keith of Plymouth, Ladd, Gleason of Worcester, Pike—22.

Senator Gleason of Plymouth made the chief speech for the high license bill, and Senator Howland of Bristol the chief speech against it. The vote on rejection was as follows:

Yeas: Collins, Crosby, Howard, Howland, Roads, Shea, Sullivan, Kimball, Slattery, Spellman, Perkins, Dwyer, Clark of Essex—13.

Nays: Clark of Hampshire, Fletcher, Gleason of Plymouth, Glines, Hartwell, Hathorne, Howe, Keith of the Cape, McAlpine, Messinger, Palmer, Pike, Sleeper, Southworth, Sprague, Stevens, Tucker, Walker, Wheelock, Ladd, Keith of Plymouth, Kingsley, Gleason of Worcester, Marble, Cook—24.

It is proposed to spend $100,000 for new buildings for the Framingham Normal School, and $60,000 for a new building for the Bridgewater workhouse. The resolves have been reported to that effect.

Things took a curious turn in the House on Wednesday afternoon with the liquor bills. In the forenoon Speaker Noyes gave an elaborate ruling against the point of order which Mr. Flynn of Boston had raised against the bill to limit the number of liquor licenses to one in every 1000 people (save to every 500 in Boston). The House also voted without debate in favor of the bill to allow suits to be brought in the first place against sureties on liquor bonds. But when they came to the bill to compel the court to impose both fine and imprisonment for convictions in liquor trials, the fight began in earnest. It was long and sharp, but the temperance men were beaten by a large majority. That led their leader, Mr. Manning of Worcester, to give up as useless the fight on the next bill for putting added restrictions into the licenses, and it was quietly killed. Soon after was reached the bill to prevent liquor sellers from sitting on juries in liquor cases, and it was defeated, after debate, by a large majority. The temperance men were so badly broken up that they could not get the 30 members needed for a roll call.

By vote of 86 to 105, after long debate, the House refused to order to a third reading the bill to limit the hours of women and minors in mercantile establishments.

The committee on agriculture has reported a bill providing that 50 pounds shall be the legal weight of a bushel of apples, and 60 pounds that of a bushel of peas or beans.

A SENSIBLE MAN

Would use Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs. It is curing more cases of Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup and all Throat and Lung troubles than any other medicine. The proprietor has authorized any druggist to give you a sample bottle free to convince you of the merit of this great remedy. Lage bottles 50c and $1.

A GREAT SURPRISE

Is in store for all who use Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs, the great guaranteed remedy. Would you believe that it is sold on its merits and that any druggist is authorized by the proprietor of this wonderful remedy to give you a sample bottle free? It never fails to cure acute or chronic coughs. All druggists sell Kemp's Balsam. Large bottles 50c and $1. 4w ready method in drowning, as to what to do and how to do it, will be found in Dr. Kaufmann's Medical Work; fine colored plates from life. Send three 2 cent stamps, to pay postage, to A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass., and receive a copy free.

MARSHALL HALL'S

WHAT A PITY

that so many otherwise attractive, polite, and particular people afflict their friends by the foul and disagreeable odor of their breath; it is mainly caused by disordered digestion, and can be corrected by removing the cause, by using that pure medicine, Sulphur Bitters.—Health Magazine.

I suffered from acute inflammation in my nose and head; for a week at a time I could not see. I used Ely's Cream Balm and in a few days I was cured. It is wonderful how quick it helped me.—Mrs. Georgie S. Judson, Hartford, Conn.

A cold of unusual severity which I took last autumn developed into a difficulty decidedly catarrhal in all its characteristics, threatening a return of my old chronic malady, catarrh. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm completely eradicated every symptom of that painful and prevailing disorder.—E. W. Warner, 165 Hudson St., Rochester, N. Y.

DON'T EXPERIMENT.

You cannot afford to waste time in experimenting when your lungs are in danger. Consumption always seems, at first, only a cold. Do not permit any dealer to impose upon you with some cheap imitation of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, but be sure you get the genuine. Because he can make more profit he may tell you he has something just as good, or just the same. Don't be deceived, but insist upon getting Dr. King's New Discovery, which is guaranteed to give relief in all Throat, Lung and Chest affections. Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. Large bottles $1. 6

A SOUND LEGAL OPINION.

E. Bainbridge Munday, Esq., County Attorney, Clay County, Texas, says: "Have used Electric Bitters with most happy results. My brother also was very low with malarial fever and jaundice, but was cured by timely use of this medicine. Am satisfied Electric Bitters saved his life."

Mr. D. I. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, saying: He positively believes he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters.

This great remedy will ward off, as well as cure all malarial diseases, and for all kidney, liver and stomach disorders stands unequaled. Price 50c. and $1, at LeGro & Lynde's 6

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by Legro & Lynde. 1y29

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

Some Things Learned by Experience.

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1.00 per bottle. eow7

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and Other Persons Liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Palmer for the Year 1888.

The Assessors of the Town of Palmer hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said Town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that they will receive at the Town House on the first day of May next, the valuation of estates, and all persons liable to be taxed in said Town are hereby notified to bring in to us true and perfect lists of all Polls (males twenty years old and upwards), and schedules and estimates of the Personal and Real Estates for which they are liable to pay taxes in said Town, possessed by them on the first day of May next.

MORTGAGED REAL ESTATE.

Any Mortgagor or Mortgagee of Real Estate situated within this Town may bring in to the undersigned Assessors, within the time above specified, a statement under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such Real Estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest as a Mortgagor or Mortgagee therein. When only a part of the property described in any mortgage is situated within this town, an estimate of the amount of the Mortgagee's interest in such part; or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the Mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement.—[Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882.

CHAPTER ELEVEN OF THE PUBLIC STATUTES.

SECTION 14. "When any person has an interest in taxable real estate, as holder of a duly recorded mortgage, given to secure the payment of money, the amount of which is fixed and certain, the amount of his interest as mortgagee shall be assessed as real estate in the place where the land lies; and the mortgagor shall be assessed only for the value of said real estate after deducting the assessed value of all such mortgagee's interests therein. When such property is situated in two or more places, the amount of the mortgagee's interest to be assessed in each place shall be proportioned to the assessed value in the respective places of the mortgaged real estate, deducting therefrom the taxable amount of prior mortgages, if any, thereon."

SECTION 15. "If any holder of such a mortgage fails to file in the Assessors' office a statement under oath of all his estate liable to taxation under the preceding section, including a statement of the full amount remaining unpaid upon such mortgage and of his interest therein, the amount stated in the mortgage shall be conclusive as to the extent of such interest; but the mortgagee's interest in such real estate shall not be assessed at a greater sum than the fair cash valuation of the land and the structures thereon or affixed thereto; and the amount of a mortgage interest in an estate that has been divided after the creation of such mortgage shall not be required to be apportioned upon the several parts of such estate, except as provided in sections eighty-one to eighty three inclusive."

SECTION 16. "Mortgagors and Mortgagees referred to in the two preceding sections shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed joint owners until the mortgagee takes possession; and until such possession is taken by the first mortgagee, the assessors or the collector of taxes, upon application to any one of them, shall give to any such Mortgagee or Mortgagor a tax bill showing the whole tax on the mortgaged estate and the amount included in the valuation thereof as the interest of each Mortgagee and of the Mortgagor respectively. If the first Mortgagee is in possession he shall be deemed sole owner; and any other Mortgagee in possession shall be deemed joint owner with prior Mortgagees."

When a statement in conformity to the law above quoted is brought in, the Real Estate therein returned will be assessed under Sections 14, 15 and 16 of Chapter eleven of Public Statutes. But in cases where the Mortgagor of the Real Estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, no statement or return is required from either Mortgagee or Mortgagor unless requested by the Assessors in writing.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, SS. PROBATE COURT—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Joseph King, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, greeting.—

Whereas, a certain instrument, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, has been presented to said Court, for Probate, by Thankful A. King of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to her, the executrix therein named, and that she may be exempt from giving a surety on her official bond as such executrix. You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Palmer, in said County of Hampden, on the second Wednesday of May next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the PALMER JOURNAL, published at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, WILLIAM S. SHURTLEFF, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fourth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

TO THE HONORABLE JUSTICES OF THE SUPERIOR COURT, holden at Springfield, within and for the County of Hampden. Humbly shews Mary Decker of Palmer, in said County of Hampden, that she was lawfully married to Charles Decker, then of Altona, Clinton County and State of New York, and now of Brandon, Rutland County and State of Vermont, at Mooers, Clinton County and State of New York, on the tenth day of August A. D. 1872, that they have since lived together as husband and wife in Altona, Shadiga Lake, and Woods Falls, all in the State of New York, in Middleboro', in the State of Vermont, and in said Palmer until September last, since which time they have lived separate and apart from each other, and she has ever conducted towards him as a faithful, chaste and affectionate wife yet the said Charles Decker, regardless of his marriage vows and obligations, has contracted gross and confirmed habits of intoxication. Wherefore she prays that the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between her and the said Charles Decker, may be dissolved, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.

Dated the first day of March, 1888.

are the effects produced by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Sores, Scabs, Glandular Swellings, Boils, Carbuncles, and all kinds of Humors dissappear, as if by magic by the use of this

STANDARD BLOOD-PURIFIER.

F. C. James, of Albany, Greene County, Tenn., writes: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla saved the life of my only child. When three years old her head was covered with Scrofulous Sores. She became almost helpless. Skillful physicians did all they could to relieve her, but failed. At last I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, gave it to her according to directions, and she immediately began to improve. Encouraged by the result, I continued to give her this medicine until the cure was complete."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles $5.

THE ONLY REMEDY
FOR
CONTAGIOUS BLOOD POISON.

Mr. D. B. Adams, Union, South Carolina, writes: "I was afflicted with a terrible case of blood poison for about thirteen months. I was treated by the best physicians, and used various kinds of remedies, but received no substantial relief. I finally tried the Swift Specific, and about four bottles cured me sound and well.

Col. B. H. Keiser, editor and proprietor of the Opelika, Ala., Times, under the date of August 3, 1887, writes: "When I was a young man, through indiscretion, I contracted a disease which has stuck to me for years. Some five or six years since I was troubled with pains, so as to make it difficult to walk. Having advertised the S. S. S., in my paper for several years, I concluded I would try it to see if there was any efficacy in the medicine. I commenced using it according to directions and used half a dozen bottles. I was once at a way station and, getting left, I walked the seven miles and have never felt any return of the old malady. After experiencing the good effects I must say I am satisfied with the result. I am sixty-eight years of age and I feel now like a young man and can go to the case when necessary and set up from six to seven thousand ems without any inconvenience. I send you this without any solicitation.

Mr. F. Woehl, 211 North Avenue, Chicago, under date of June 12, 1887, writes: "I deem it my duty to thank you for the cure I received from your excellent medicine. I contracted a severe case of blood poisoning about two years ago. Hearing of your medicine I went to a drug store, the proprietor of which persuaded me to buy a preparation of his own, which he said was a sure cure. I used six bottles of this stuff and grew worse all the time. At last I got disgusted and dispaired of a cure. I met a friend who told me that your medicine had cured him. I went to the same druggist again and demanded your medicine. He reluctantly sold me 12 bottles, and I am now perfectly cured. I write this for the benefit of sufferers, to prevent their being deceived by false representations. I thank you again for the benefit derived from your medicine."

Dr. J. N. Cheney, a prominent physician, residing in Ellaville, Schley County, Georgia, in a letter recounting the infallible success he has in curing contagious blood poisoning cases in his extensive practice, writes: "Those who know the almost inevitable, permanently dangerous effects of mercury will welcome your discovery of S. S. S. as a boon to humanity. The medical profession, always wary of proprietary medicines, is coming slowly, and in some cases secretly, to the use of S. S. S. in cases of blood disorder. Of course a medicine that cures poisoning in its worst form must purify the blood of every disorder."

MASON & HAMLIN

ORGANS. $22 TO $900. The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer. as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. GRAND AND UPRIGHT. Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinay claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON AND HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.

A circular containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

A Retrospect.

My mind goes back before I wed,
When first caressing her dear head,
With rapid beating heart I said—
My Queen.

Her sweet reply came back to me,
Her downcast looks I still can see,
Her whispered words with these agree—
My King.

What loss of friends and loss of store
Distress her mind and grieved her sore
Who fought and toiled for her the more?
Her Knight.

Who joined our hands and called us one,
Putting the holy seal upon
What was but one in time past gone?
The Bishop.

Now safely housed in this dear land,
We often, clasping hand in hand,
Talk of old times when first we planned—
Our Castle.

And coursing round my knee there speed,
Eight sturdy imps, who me impede,
Yet are "the soul of life" indeed—
My Pawns.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

Second Gushing Female Philanthropist (with tray of delicacies)—"If it had been even a month later I could have found ever so much nicer fruits and early vegetables than these. It does seem as if he might have been more thoughtful."—Chicago Tribune.

"I'm feelin' awful cross," said old Mrs. Burdock, as she appeared at her new neighbor's door, "an' so I came around without my bonnet—I'm just that down an' worrited. A critter gets dretful lonesome, livin' the way I do. You see, my sons is all growed up an' gone West, my old man's dead, my eldest darter's paralyzed an' bedrid, an' no more good to me, you might say, 'n if she wa'n't there, an' my youngest darter's up to her gran'ther's, keepin' house f' the old lady, an' I kinder get all riled up with lonesomeness, an' I came around jest to see if you wouldn't lend me one of your children to spank."—Puck.

DON'T WHINE.

Don't be whining about not having a fair chance. Throw a sensible man out of a window, he'll fall on his feet and ask the nearest way to his work. The more you have to begin with, the less you will have in the end. Money you earn yourself is much brighter than any you can get out of dead men's wallets. A scant breakfast in the morning of life whets the appetite for a feast later in the day. He who has tasted a sour apple will have the more relish for a sweet one. Your present want will make prosperity all the sweeter. Eighteen pence has set up many a peddler in business, and he has turned it over until he has kept his carriage. As for the place you are cast in, don't find fault with that; you need not be a horse because you were born in a stable. If a bull tossed a man of mettle sky high he would drop down in a good place. A hard-working young man with his wits about him will make money while others will do nothing but lose it.

Who loves his work, and knows how to spare,
May live and flourish anywhere.

As to a little trouble, who expects to find cherries without stones or roses without thorns? Who would win must learn to bear. Idleness lies in bed sick of the mulligrubs while industry finds health and wealth. The dog in the kennel barks at fleas; the hunting dog does not even know that they are there. Laziness waits till the river is dry and never gets to market. "Try" swims in and makes all the trade. "Can't do it" would not eat the bread set before him, but "Try" made meat out of mushrooms.—John Plowman.

Make No Mistake.

If you have made up you mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to take any other. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a peculiar medicine, possessing by virtue of its peculiar combination, proportion and preparation curative power superior o any other article of the kind before the people. Be sure to get Hood's.

"In one store the clerk tried to induce me to buy their own instead of Hood's Sarsaparilla. But he could not prevail on me to change. I told him I knew what Hood's Sarsaparilla was, I had taken it, was perfectly satisfied with it, and did not want any other."—Mrs. Ella A. Goff, 61 Terrace street, Boston, Mass.

"My wife suffered from sick headache and neuralgia. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla she was much relieved."—W. R. Babb, Wilmington, Ohio.

Farewell, self of long ago;
In the old familiar place
Time sped on in slower pace—
Past recall indeed you lie,
Days, and months and years gone by,
Now the old familiar door
Shuts us out forevermore!

Farewell, house—no more our home!
Others, in the years to come,
Hither homeward will return—
On the hearth the fires will burn;
Children that we do not know
Gather round the blithesome glow;
Other feet will tread the stair,
Other guests be welcomed there,
We, whose home it was before,
Shall be strangers evermore.

May be, in the years to come,
Past the house our feet may roam—
Over all a subtle change
Will have stole and made it strange,
And the house we leave to-day
Will have vanished quite away.
In this house's joy and care
We shall have no lot nor share;
All our life herein will seem
Like a half forgotten dream,
We shall be as ghosts that come
Ling'ring round their ancient home,
If our feet pass evermore
Near the old familiar door.

Farewell, days, and months and years;
Farewell, buried hopes and fears!
Wheresoe'er our footsteps stray,
Whether long or brief our stay,
Whatsoever good we find,
Many graves we leave behind.
So, farewell, old joy and pain,
We shall never know again!
Farewell, all things that we leave!—
Surely, life and warmth must cleave
To the house, when we are gone,
Can it empty seem, and lone,
When the echoes of the years,
Hopes and joys, and griefs and fears,
Scarce have died from roof and wall?
Surely, ghostly steps will fall
On the bare dismant'led floors,
Gilding in at open doors,
Flitting up and down the stair,
Will not shadows wander there—
Shades more vague than shadows are,
Or than ghosts that break death's bar?
Sure our wraiths, when we are gone,
Oft will haunt the chambers lone—
Come to seek (ah, ne'er to find!)
All the years we leave behind?
Farewell, old familiar door!
Farewell, home—yet no, not so—
Homes go with us where we go!

THE BANK FAILURE.

"An' so you've sold your farm, Belindy?"

"Yes, an' I must say I'm glad of it. A lone woman ain't got no business to farm, no way. Though I must say I've made out pretty well this year. I cleared $600 on the wheat, over and above payin' for the harvestin', thrashin' an' the like. An' I've sold the hay, clover an' timothy mixed fur about $300 more. But it's awful wearin' on a woman, a-tendin' to things an' watchin' that the hands don't shirk nor nothin'. As I was a-sayin', a lone woman ain't got no business with a farm. 'Twas different before Aaron died," and Mrs. Belinda Blossom gave a regretful sigh for the dead and gone Aaron.

"You needn't be a lone woman no longer than you want to be, Belindy," quietly observed her sister, Mrs. Jemima Hatch. "There's Deacon Gibbs, now, would give his eyes to—"

"Don't say Deacon Gibbs to me," retorted the widow. "Don't I know what he's after? Don't he know as well as I do, that I've got $8000 put away safe an' snug in the Bluegrass bank? I haven't a doubt he'd like to git the handlin' of it, but he never will, I kin tell him that."

"Sho, now, Belindy," remonstrated Mrs. Hatch, "what's the use o' makin' the poor man out wuss'n he is? I don't know as he's any likelier to be after the money than Lawyer Greene."

"Lawyer Greene's got money himself, an' it stands to reason 'taint so much of an object to him. Besides I ain't said—"

"Oh, no, you ain't said, I know, but a body kin put two an' two together, I reck'n. Well, all I've got to say is, I'd ruther have Deacon Gibbs any day, if 'twas me, than that smooth spoke, iley lookin' lawyer. But I must be a-gittin' home; Bijah'll want his supper time it's ready," and Mrs. Hatch rolled up her knitting, wrapped it carefully in a cloth and put on her black sun-bonnet and her blue yarn "half-hands."

"You might have stayed to supper, Jemima," said the widow, reproachfully. "I was goin' to have cream cookies and some of them Lawton blackberry preserves you're so fond of."

"Wal, I'd like mighty well to stay, Belinda, but Bijah he'll be a-lookin' fur me to hev supper ready when he comes in from the field. He's allus as hungry as a beaver at night, an' I ain't left nothin' cooked so he could get himself a bite. I rickon I better go. You goin' to Miss Larcom's quiltin' next week?"

"Oh, I s'pose so. Miss Larcom would get miffed if I didn't," and after another five or ten minutes of conversation Mrs. Hatch got started for home.

Mrs. Belinda Blossom was a typical widow—fair, fat, and not quite 40, and was known as the best housekeeper in and around the neighborhood where she lived.

With even less personal attractions and good qualities than she possessed, she might have exchanged her widow's weeds for bridal attire long ago, had she so desired. However, for some reason best known to herself, she had preferred to remain a "lone woman," as she called it, so far. Whether she would remain so much longer was a question which puzzled herself quite as much as it did some other parties.

* * * * * *

It was the day of Miss Larcom's quilting and the supper was almost ready. The quilt was already out, and by a little preconcerted manœuvre on the part of the fun-loving girls, it was thrown over the widow's head when it was taken out of the frame, a piece of mischief which afforded no little amusement, as, according to time-honored tradition, whoever the quilt is first thrown over is soon to become a bride.

Mrs. Blossom wore her honors blushingly, and her cheeks were still covered with crimson when the gentlemen began to drop in, just before super.

Lawyer Greene, who was among the first to arrive, was profuse in his attentions to the blooming widow, much to the discomfiture of his less fortunate rival, who could only sit in a corner and cast despairing glances at the object of his affections.

"Just look at Deacon Gibbs," whispered Mahala Williams to Dorcas Lamb. "He looks like a hen on a hot griddle, while Lawyer Greene is a-courtin' the widow."

Dorcas tittered out loud, whereupon the deacon grew red in the face, as if aware that he was the object of their mirth.

"Wal, I reckon I'll be a-goin', Miss Larcom," he announced, approaching the hostess a short time later. "I only just dropped in to see how you was all a-gittin' along."

"Oh, you must stay to supper, deacon; it's a'most ready now, an' I can't let you go before that," declared the hostess, determinedly. But the deacon was equally determined, and go he did.

"Deacon Gibbs! Deacon Gibbs! stop a minute, I want to speak to you," cried Mrs. Hatch, rushing out to the porch where he stood, looking a little bewildered at the unexpected summons.

"I want you to come over the day after to-morrow—Thanksgiving Day, you know—and eat dinner with us. Now don't say no; there won't be anybody there only Belindy and our own folks. Say you'll come!"

"Wal, I dunno, Miss Hatch," said the deacon, uneasily. "I thank you kindly for the invite, but I've been a-feelin' kind of blue for a good spell now, an' I don't know as I'd be fittin' company to go an' eat Thanksgiving dinners with folks when I'm blue."

"Sho! that's all nonsense, deacon. You must come now, an' I shall be a-lookin' fur you."

And good-hearted little Mrs. Hatch ran back into the house before Deacon Gibbs could make any further protest.

If Mrs. Blossom noticed the deacon's departure she betrayed no consciousness of the fact, but demurely continued her flirtation with the lawyer.

Supper, the great event of the day, was ready at last, and the guests were doing ample justice to the plentiful array of viands set before them. Boiled ham, chicken pot-pie, mashed potatoes and turnips, hot slaw, apple sauce, squash pie, custard pie, jelly cake, cookies and doughnuts, all were placed on the table together, and the guests invited to help themselves, which they did with a will.

The meal was well under way, and conversation had flagged considerably, for with hungry people eating and talking are not to be carried on together, when a new arrival came, in the person of Hiram Prim, the storekeeper's clerk.

Hiram was soon seated at the table, helping himself right and left to the still abundant substantials and luxuries on the board.

"Heard the news?" he asked, looking around after partaking of a few mouthfuls. "Hain't? Wal, the Bluegrass bank has busted—smashed clean up. Creditors won't git five cents on the dollar."

Exclamations of surprise greeted the unexpected tidings from all sides.

The Widow Blossom turned pale, and gazed wildly at the speaker.

Lawyer Greene also changed countenance as he glanced furtively at Mrs. Blossom's face.

"Is that really so, Hiram?" he asked anxiously.

"It's really so," declared Hiram. "It'll be in the papers to-morrow morning. Why, Lawyer Greene, you hain't got money there, hev you?"

"Oh, certainly not. My funds are secured on real estate. I don't trust to banks," responded the lawyer, complacently.

"Wal, I'm thankful to say my money ain't there, either," said Hiram, gravely, thereby causing a general laugh, as it was a well-known fact that Hiram spent his wages as fast as he earned them.

No one noticed the widow's changed demeanor, though she still looked pale and declined a second piece of squash pie.

But Lawyer Greene seemed suddenly to have changed his tactics, and was now evidently bent on getting up a flirtation with Mahala Williams.

The widow's money affairs were not generally known among her acquaintances, consequently she escaped their condolences. Jemima Hatch, though, did manage to whisper a few words of sympathy in her ear.

"Don't worry about it, Belindy," she urged; "I'll come over an' see you to-morrow an' we'll talk it over." But Mrs. Blossom did not recover her spirits.

Lawyer Greene did not appear to notice when the widow rose to leave, compelling her to accept the protection of half-grown Tom Larcom, much to the surprise of all who noticed the circumstance.

"He was awful sweet on the widder at first," they whispered. "She must have give him the mitten," and the next day it was currently reported that Lawyer Greene had proposed to the Widow Blossom and been rejected. So much for the truth of what "they say."

Jemima paid the promised visit bright and early the next morning. She found her sister looking pale and dejected.

"How bad is it, Berindy?" she asked. "Did you put all your money in the bank?"

"All—every cent of it," groaned the widow.

"Wal, it is too bad, but never mind; you don't have to give up the house right away, do you?"

"No; not till March."

"So much the better, then; though, of course, you could have had a home with us right away. But there's your cows an' chickens an' such things; they'll bring a better price after you've wintered 'em, an' you can sell 'em in the spring, an' there'll be so much gained."

After considerable more conversation on the subject, the widow seemed to brighten up a little, and her sister prepared to take her leave.

"Now you'll be sure to come up and eat a Thanksgiving dinner with us, won't you, Belindy?" she urged, and Belinda promised.

Jemima's footsteps had died away, and the widow was still sitting, forlorn and despondent, when her reverie was disturbed again.

"Morning, Miss—Miss Blossom," said a hesitating voice, and there stood Deacon Gibbs, nervously twisting his hat in his hands.

The widow placed a chair for her visitor, who sat down looking more nervous and embarrassed than ever.

"I—I've just heerd," he began, "that you—that the Bluegrass bank has busted, an' you've lost all your money, an'—an' I—Oh, Belindy, won't you have me? Say you will, an' you shan't want fur nothin'! I know I ain't rich, but my farm is a good one, an' I've got it all in medder and pastur' now, an' kin raise right smart o' stock, an' you shouldn't never know you'd lost a cent. Will you, Miss Blos—Belindy?"

And this was the man she suspected of wanting her money! The widow hid her face in her hands and cried.

Mrs. Jemima was in her element, cooking the Thanksgiving dinner, next day. But in the pauses, between basting the turkey and turning the pumpkin pies, she made frequent trips to the door, shading her eyes with her hand and gazing far down the winding country road.

"I wonder if nary one of 'em ain't a-comin', after all," she muttered more than once in tones of vexation.

The turkey was roasted at last, the pies were done, and the table set, when, on looking down the road again, she was rewarded by a discovery.

"That's the deacon's shay, now," she cried, "an' Belindy not here. Dear me, I wonder if she ain't a-comin' at all? I've a notion to send Bijah over to see."

Then she took another look.

"There's somebody with him—why, if it ain't Belindy herself! I'm so glad. They'll make a match yet, I jest do believe," and she ran to open the front door.

"Come in, Belindy? Deacon, walk right in. So you did conclude to come, after all?"

The deacon smiled complacently.

"Wal, yes; you see I ain't so blue as I was, Miss Hatch. An' then, I've got somethin' to be thankful fur now. We'd have got here sooner, only we've been to a weddin'."

"A wedding!" Mrs. Hatch opened her eyes in wonder. "Whose was it?" she demanded.

"Our own, to be sure," smiled the deacon, with a loving glance at Belinda. "Delay is dangerous, you know. So we jest drove around to the parson's and had the preacher jine us right off. An' now your Thanksgivin' is turned into a weddin' dinner, Jemima."

Mrs. Hatch was as much pleased as surprised, and her roast turkey and pumpkin pies with the other concomitants of a Thanksgiving dinner, answered quite as well for a wedding feast.

But it was not until dinner was over and Belinda had helped to wash up the dishes, that she confessed to her auditors a little secret which they had not suspected, namely, that she had drawn all her money out of the Bluegrass bank the day before it broke; the lawyer's instant change of base on hearing the news of the failure inducing her to preserve silence on the subject.

"I meant to invest it some other way," she explained, "and I was awfully shocked when I heard the bank had broke. I couldn't help thinking what a narrow escape I'd had."

Deacon Gibbs had no reason to quarrel with his wife for keeping the secret, since it had saved her from his rival. And Mrs. Deacon Gibbs has never regretted the occurrence which decided her fate.

As for the lawyer, his chagrin upon learning the truth of the matter may be better imagined than described.

A SHARP SCHEME.

They had been talking of the sharp games played on innocent people by sharp men, when Green looked up and said:

"Gentlemen, I don't brag about my wife being sharper than a razor, but I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll write a note, sign it with my own name, and ask her to deliver my Sunday suit to bearer for repairs. You may send it up to the house, and I'll bet you five dollars she'll be too sharp to let the clothes go."

"We'll take that bet," called two or three voices, and, there being five of them, they chipped in a dollar apiece.

The note was written and signed, and despatched by a messenger boy. In half an hour he returned, empty-handed as to clothes, but having a note which read:

"Come off the perch! All the clothes you have in the world are on your back."

"Gentlemen," said the winner, as he pocketed his fiver, "let me recommend it to you as something which always wins, and as I must meet a man at three o'clock, I must now bid you good day."—Detroit Free Press.

PA DECLAIMS ALSO.

A Connecticut boy retired to the barn the other day to practice a declamation, and while he was pouring fourth Hiawatha's impassioned appeal in the hay-loft, his father's wondering countenance appeared through the trap door.

"Who are are you talking to, Jacob?" he inquired.

"Nobody, pa, I'm speakin'."

"I should think you was. You've got a sharp voice enough to cut hay. It's about scared the life out of the old red cow. Better stop now and give her a show. Gitche Manitou the Mighty, hey? Gitche Gone. Come down out of that hay-mow, Jacob, and when you want to yell again get the cowhide and come to your pa."—New York Tribune.

Remembered Minutes.

"Did you ever know five minutes," said the misanthrope to me,
"Five minutes in your life, sir, when from trouble you were free,
Five minutes of true happiness, of pleasure unalloyed,
In which within your heart you did not feel an aching void?"
"Oh, yes, I've known five minutes, sir, of happiness in life,
Five minutes when I quite forgot all trouble and all strife;
'Twas when a maiden said to me while driving in a sleigh,
'I'll give you just five minutes, John, to take your arm away.'"

TRAVELING AGENTS.

"About this time," as the almanacs say, look out for traveling agents, who go up and down the land offering for sale seeds, trees, plows, cultivators, mowing machines and all sorts of agricultural tools and machinery. Those who manufacture, raise or sell the best of these articles advertise them in the leading agricultural newspapers, but the second grade, not announced, is placed in the hands of these traveling agents, who work them off on the most advantageous terms.

Then there are the venders of patent drive wells, lightning rods, stump extractors, hay pitchers, etc., with their cunningly drawn up forms of agreement, the innocent signers of which find months afterward that instead of signing an obligation to take a patent machine, they signed a negotiable note of hand, which had been transferred with others to some skinflint Shylock, who has deposited it in a bank for collection. The only way to avoid being bitten by these leeches is never to buy or have any transaction with one, but to deal with the well established warehouses.

These traveling swindlers all have "credentials," and they exhibit letters commending them and their wares in the highest terms. Some of these recommendations remind me of a wonderful "balsam," which every farmer should buy and use. It read as follows: "Dear Sir—The land composing this farm has hitherto been so poor that a Scotchman could not get a living off it, and so stony that we had to slice our potatoes and plant them edgewise; but hearing of your balsam, I put some on the the corner of a ten-acre field surrounded by a rail fence and in the morning I found that the rocks had entirely disappeared, a neat stone wall encircled the field and the rails were split into firewood and piled symmetrically in my back yard. I put half an ounce in the middle of a huckleberry swamp, and in two days it was cleared off, planted with corn and pumpkins, and a row of peach trees in full blossom through the middle. As an evidence of its tremendous strength, I would say that it drew a striking likeness of my eldest son out of a mill-pond, drew a blister all over his stomach, drew a load of potatoes five miles to market, and eventually drew a prize of $90 in the lottery."—Ben: Perley Poore.

NO FRILLS FOR HIM.

A tall old man, with a rather vacant look and hesitating air, ventured slowly into the dining hall of a large up-town hotel the other evening in New York. It was the usual dinner hour, and the long room was filled with guests. The old man paused, scrutinized his cuffs and his waistcoat, and after making what seemed to be a helpless effort to see the back of his neck, he beckoned to the head waiter. That functionary hastened up, and the old man said anxiously:

"Waiter, do I look all right, tidy, you know?"

The waiter inspected the venerable guest critically for a moment, and then assured him that all was in order.

"Necktie all right?"

"Yes, sir."

"Collar button show?"

"Not at all, sir."

"No spots on my coat?"

"Not a spot."

"The general effect is pretty slick, is it?"

"Very, sir."

"Well, you see, waiter," said the old man, confidentially, "I came down to breakfast one day last week without any collar, and my son James was very angry; so yesterday when I came into lunch with my necktie under my left ear, he said if anything happened like that again he would have my meals served upstairs. Do you know my son James, waiter?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is he here at dinner now?"

"No, sir; he finished about ten minutes ago."

"Are you sure?"

"Perfectly, sir."

"Well, then, waiter," said the old man in relieved tones, "if you're certain of it, you tell the man at our table to hustle in some corned beef and cabbage, and not to play any of his French business on me, or I'll break his neck."

JACK'S LIMITED CAPACITY.

Mrs. West was writing and at the same time attempting to reply to the questions of her five-year-old daughter, a task which in itself might have demanded all the energies of at least one person.

"Mamma," demanded the small damsel at length, "where is God?"

"He is everywhere," her mother replied, hastily, writing faster to be sure that her letters were ready by mail time.

"Everywhere?" repeated the child. "Is He inside of me?"

"Yes."

"And of Jack?"

"Yes, He is everywhere."

The minute damsel gazed at her baby brother Jack, a tiny morsel of humanity of very little age, and small at that, and reflected a moment in silence.

"Well," she observed at length, "I don't believe there's much God in Jack. He couldn't hold a great deal."—Boston Courier.

SHE EVERLASTINGLY HAD HIM.

"Are you in earnest, Mr. Hankinson?"

The lovely girl who asked this question of Marcellus Hankinson sat behind the centre table with her hands in her lap, and regarded the young man intently.

"In earnest, Irene!" he exclaimed, pale with emotion and chronic dyspepsia, "the whole happiness of my life is wrapped up in your answer to the question I have asked. If you will trust your future to my hands, my life shall be devoted to the task of making you happy. It will be my sole aim to shield you from the rude blasts of all adversity, to smooth your pathway through the world, to interpose my right arm between you and every danger that threatens to disturb your peace, and—"

"If I listen to your suit, Mr. Hankinson," interrupted the young lady, casting her eyes upon the floor in some confusion, "you may regret it some day. You would find me ignorant of the practical duties of housekeeping, and without—"

"Practical duties of housekeeping!" broke in the enthusiastic youth; "you will have no practical duties of that kind. As my wife you shall not be a drudge. You shall be the queen of my home. You consent, do you not, my dar—"

"Wait a moment, my dear Mr. Hankinson. I am afraid you would find me extravagant and thoughtless in a great many things."

"Extravagant! Irene, it will be the joy of my life to provide you with whatever may gratify your slightest whim. You can never make a request of me that I should not rejoice to anticipate and grant beforehand."

"And you would be willing to spend all your evenings at home?"

"My angel, I would never want to spend them anywhere else."

"And you would never break my heart by joining a club or becoming a drinking man?"

"Hear me, Irene! I promise never to do either!"

"Let me see," said the young lady, meditatively, "I think that is all—oh! you agree to have the work 'obey' left out of my part of the marriage service, do you, Mr. Hankson?"

"Obey! Ha! ha! Why, my own, certainly. I am even willing to promise to obey you!"

"Then, Marcellus," said the lovely girl, as she lifted a full-grown phonograph off her lap, locked it carefully in the drawer of a secretary that stood against the wall, turned up the gas, and beamed in a sweet but business-like manner upon the terror-stricken young man, "I am yours!"

ADVICE TO A YOUNG MAN.

And then remember, my son, you have to work. Whether you handle a pick or a pen, a wheelbarrow or a set of books, digging ditches or editing a paper, ringing an auction bell or writing funny things, you must work. If you look around you, son, you will see that the men who are the most able to live the rest of their days without work are the men that work the hardest. Don't be afraid of killing yourself with work, son. It is beyond your power to do that. Men cannot work so hard as that on the shady side of thirty. They die sometimes, but it's because they quit work at 6 p. m. and don't go home till 2 a m. It's the interval that kills. Work gives an appetite for meals; it lends solidity to your slumber; it gives the appreciation of a holiday.

There are young men that do not work, my son, but the world is not proud of them. It does not even know their names; it simply speaks of them as old So-and-So's boys. Nobody likes them; nobody hates them; the great busy world doesn't even know that they are there. So find out what you want to be and do, son, and take off your coat and make a dust in the world. The busier you are the less deviltry you are apt to get into, the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter and happier your holidays, and the better satisfied will be the world with you.—Burdette.

THE NEXT BEST THING.—Omaha dame—"I see you preferred being an old man's darling to a young man's slave."

Young widow—"Yes, my husband was very kind to the day of his death."

"He left you, I understand, over five million dollars."

"Yes."

"What do you intend to do with yourself now, dear?"

"Well, I'm thinking of becoming a young man's slave."—Omaha World.

A CHOICE LOCALITY.—House-owner—"How many children have you, madame?"

House-hunter—"Five."

House-owner—"That alters the case. I can't let you have the house."

House-hunter—"You are more particular and exclusive, sir, than the kingdom of heaven."

House-owner—"Possibly, madame, possibly. This house fronts on Prairie avenue. Good morning."—Chicago Tribune.

A grocery firm of Kirksville, Mo., issues the following advertisement: "Any man who drinks two drams of whisky per day for a year, and pays ten cents a drink for it, can have at our store 30 sacks of flour, 220 pounds of granulated sugar, and 72 pounds of good green coffee for the same money, and get $2.50 premium for making the change in his expenditures."

Clerk (to young lady who has purchased a pair of gold sleeve buttons for her fiance)—"Any initials, Miss?" Young Lady—"Oh, yes, I forgot; engrave the letter U, his first name." Clerk—"Ah, may I ask, miss, is it Uriah or Ulysses? names with U are very rare." Young Lady (proudly)—"His name is Eugene."—Philadelphia Times.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 27, 1888.

The president of the new Clark University at Worcester is to be Prof. G. Stanley Hall, of Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore.

Delaware expects the biggest peach crop this year since 1875. But just wait a bit and see how the late frosts will nip the buds and advance the prices.

The Northampton Gazette comes out in favor of Col. Myron P. Walker of Belchertown as successor to Congressman Whiting in the 11th district. The "drummer boy" wins friends easily, in political as well as in military life.

That little presidential boom which Gov. Hill of New York is nursing so carefully is being chilled by an investigation into New York city affairs, which indicates an unpleasantly close connection between the governor and certain contractors.

Rev. Dr. Thomas Armitage of New York, an eminent Baptist divine, celebrated last Sunday the 40th anniversary of his pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Baptist church, and has tendered his resignation, on account of declining years. He will be retained as pastor emeritus.

A Sorry case of fanaticism at Medford has resulted in the arrest, for manslaughter, of Mrs. Abby S. Connor, a Christian scientist, who endeavored to carry her daughter through child-birth by her "treatment," refusing her request for a physician. Daughter and child died.

The Boston Journal calls upon Mr. Blaine to let it be known if he has any lurking idea of accepting the Republican nomination if it should chance to be offered him in spite of his declination. Perhaps a second negative would not be accepted as any more conclusive than the first one.

The Ohio habitual criminal law has been pronounced unconstitutional by the supreme court of that state. Massachusetts has a law of the same name, and there will be considerable interest to see whether there is anything about it which will not stand the scrutiny of our supreme court.

Mr. Cleveland may find food for reflection rather than encouragement in the fact that only once in the past fifty years has a Democratic president been renominated. That was Van Buren, and he "got left" badly. Very likely the present chief magistrate will cheer himself with the thought that it is a long lane which has no turn.

Senator Sherman's friends figure out 312 votes as certain for their favorite at the approaching Republican national convention. We wouldn't be sorry to see many more than that number cast for him, but it may be well to keep in mind the old adage about enumerating eggs before their period of incubation is fully accomplished.

During 1887 the losses by fire in the United States were nearly $120,000.000, an increase of 13 per cent over the previous year, this increase being largely in the South and West. More lives were lost by fire than any previous year on record. More practical means of escape from the upper stories of burning buildings are plainly needed, and should be required by law.

Louisiana Democrats must be a bad lot. Republican newspapers have intimated as much a good many times, only to be charged with waving the bloody shirt, and so on, but now the truly good and faithful New York World says of the result of the recent election: "In some of the up-country parishes there is an excess of votes and of Democratic majorities that is decidedly suspicious. If Rapides parish, with not above 25,000 population, returned 7000 votes, nearly every one Democratic, the circumstance certainly demands examination. To falsify the suffrage is to strike a deadly blow at the foundations of republican government."

The Republican state convention at Boston Wednesday was attended by about 1000 delegates, and these delegates-at-large to the national convention were chosen: Senator George F. Hoar of Worcester, Frederick L. Burden of North Attleboro, Henry S. Hyde of Springfield, and Alanson W. Beard of Boston. The alternates are Col. B. S. Lovell of Weymouth, ex-Representative J. C. Chappelle (colored) of Boston, F. H. Williams of Foxboro and C. N. Yeamans of Westfield. The delegates are uninstructed, but the convention had quite a Blaineish atmosphere. Congressman Cogswell's address was warmly received, and the resolutions are thus summed up in the closing paragraph:

> "In short—because by the Democratic party the doctrine of equal rights is still opposed; honest elections are denied; the principle of protection is assailed; the abolition of the most burdensome of war taxes is refused; the dangerous surplus in the treasury is not reduced; the suffering defender of the Union is deprived of relief; civil service reform is made a farce; our foreign policy is weak and contemptible; every function of government is made subordinate to partisan considerations; and there is neither honesty of purpose nor efficiency of administration, we ask the people to take from that party the trust it has abused, and return it to the organization under which the country was so well governed and prosperous."

The first trailing arbutus of the season has been handed in this week by Mrs. Otto R. Smith.

The highway surveyors are making an improvement in the condition of the roads about town.

The small boy is now busily engaged making May baskets for his "best girl," and vice versa.

The selectmen have been unusually busy this month, it being necessary to hold sessions almost daily.

Rev. Mr. Emerson of Monson addressed the children at the state primary school last Sunday morning.

LeGro & Lynde, the druggists, have put up their soda fountain this week, in readiness for the summer trade.

Four candidates will be received to membership in the Second Baptist church by baptism next Sunday morning.

The selectmen have been inspecting the places to-day of those who recently made application for liquor licenses.

The poverty party at the Second Baptist church Wednesday evening was a novel affair, and quite well attended.

The body of Miss Florence Sherman, who died at Ware this week, was brought to this place Monday for interment.

Many of the stores and business places have been wired this week for the incandescent system of electric lights.

The selectmen have ordered the authorities to keep all persons from congregating on the sidewalks on the Lord's day.

Engineer Chilson of the Ware River Railroad contemplates building a house on his vacant lot on Knox avenue this season.

Frank Merriam has bought a building lot on the carpet mill road of H. A. Northrop, and contemplates erecting a house thereon.

George W. Randall sells a number of cows and other stock at the residence of John Sullivan in Belchertown next Monday.

Charles A. LeGro has purchased a house on Converse avenue of H. P. & J. S. Holden, for about $2000, through D. F. Holden's agency.

F. D. Barton has given the contract for building his new residence on the corner of Squier street and Highland avenue to George W. Lyman.

Quite a large number from this village attended the concert at Three Rivers last Saturday evening, given by the Springfield Banjo Club.

The Betts Fencing Company has just closed a contract with the Connecticut River Railroad Company for a large quantity of fencing.

The Florida exposition car, which has been side tracked this week near C. D. Holbrook's grain store, attracted a large number of visitors.

O. P. Allen has received a lot of seeds from Washington for free distribution among the members of the Eastern Hampden agricultural society.

Some of the members of Thomas Lodge, F. & A. M., went to Greenfield Wednesday to witness the exemplification of the chapter work by the lodge of that place.

A. H. Stockwell, superintendent of the Palmer Wire Company, has this week moved into the tenement on Main street recently vacated by J. A. Hawkes.

George A. Griffin has been awarded the contract to do the excavating for the new high school building, and expects to have the job completed in a few weeks.

Charles E. Fuller is making extensive repairs and improvements upon his South Main street residence. He is also grading the ground and laying out new walks.

The ball game which had been arranged for Saturday afternoon on the park was postponed until to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, on account of the unfavorable weather.

The Daughters of Rebekah have invited the members of Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F., to attend a whist party to-morrow evening in Odd Fellows' hall. A supper will also be served.

The proposition to form a drum corps apparently meets with favor, and an organization of that sort will doubtless be in readiness for the forthcoming presidential campaign.

The ladies of the Congregational church will give their annual May breakfast and dinner next Tuesday, and their past reputation will no doubt ensure them a large attendance.

S. S. Taft of this place and Col. Walker of Belchertown were two of the three selected to lead Congressman Cogswell before the Republican state convention at Boston Wednesday.

At the district court last Saturday this civil entry was made: William Gokey vs. Frederick Martin of Three Rivers, for an action of contract. Gardner for plaintiff; defendant defaulted.

A large party from here will go to Springfield this evening to witness "The Old Homestead," as presented by Denman Thompson. A special train will be provided for the return trip.

Locomotives "Robert Coit, Jr.," and "Benj. J. Stark" accidentally collided in the yard of the New London Northern Railroad here Tuesday afternoon, the latter being somewhat damaged.

Some miscreants amused themselves Wednesday night by removing signs from several business places on Main street and placing them upon private residences and other structures in the village.

The Patterson Club will be entertained at the residence of Mrs. F. R. Lawton on Park street next Tuesday evening. A very enjoyable programme has been arranged by the committee on entertainment.

Thomas D. Chamberlin, an invalid who has been boarding at the Weeks House for some time past, died Tuesday morning of consumption at the age of 56. His remains were taken to Templeton for burial.

The Palmer Dramatic Club met at the Converse House parlors Friday evening and voted to donate the scenery to L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R. Another meeting will be called soon to consider other important matters.

Mrs. W. T. Hickok, who will be remembered by many Palmer people, died of apoplexy at Austin, Ill., Wednesday at about 50 years of age. She was a niece of Mrs. Maj. Morgan of this place, and leaves five children. The funeral occurs to-morrow at her late residence.

Active arrangements are being made for organizing the proposed lawn tennis club, and there is a probability that the first game will be played soon after May 1. A committee has already been chosen to see that the grounds that have been secured are put in proper condition for the court.

Rev. F. W. Betts resumed his pastorate at St. Paul's Universalist church last Sunday morning. The house was crowded at the morning service, and besides the floral decorations about the altar there was an artistic motto, bearing the words: "Welcome Home."

Very little business has been transacted at the district court this week. Michael Butler of Belfast, Me., had a hearing yesterday morning for evading fare on the Boston & Albany road, and in default of $10 and costs he was committed. Jerry Hannifin of Bondsville also had a hearing for a "simple drunk."

An alarm was rung in from box 57 Tuesday morning about 10.45 o'clock, for a forest fire near the Point of Rocks, on land belonging to Dr. William Holbrook and the Knox estate. The fire department responded promptly with hoes and shovels, and comparatively little damage was done, though a large territory was burned over.

H. W. Tracy of Springfield has bought the confectionery store in Caryl Brothers' block of Barlow & Clark, and took possession Wednesday morning. He contemplates fitting up an ice-cream parlor next month, besides putting in a stock of fruit and nuts. Barlow & Clark will open their new store at Chicopee next week, and will supply the local dealer with confectionery.

Palmer Hook and Ladder Company No. 1 were out Tuesday evening for practice. The large extension ladder was taken from the truck and adjusted, and it was found that it would reach higher than the top stories of either the Converse or Nassowanno houses, which are the tallest buildings in town where the extension ladder would be of any use in case of fire.

John Griffin of Belchertown had a narrow escape from a serious accident on Church street last Saturday. The horse started as Mr. Griffin was getting into the buggy, and he fell backward, and, catching one foot on the axle of the forward wheel, was dragged with his head on the ground from the bank block to Pleasant street before the horse was stopped by F. C. Allen.

Mrs. E. Converse, an estimable lady well known locally, died last Saturday evening after a prolonged illness, at the age of 84. The funeral was held at her late residence on Thorndike street Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the remains being conveyed to Needham the following day for interment. Rev. B. M. Fullerton of Waltham conducted the service, assisted by Rev. H. W. Pope of the Congregational church.

The Brimfield selectmen, and presumably many citizens in the center of the town, want to save the expense of rebuilding the bridge over the Quaboag near John Farrell's, and it is intimated that they will petition the county commissioners to discontinue the road for that purpose. But people in the vicinity of the bridge will actively oppose such a disposition of the matter, as well as many others who use the bridge more or less.

A large number attended the entertainment and social dance given last evening by Palmer Lodge I. O. O. F., in commemoration of the 69th anniversary of the institution of Odd Fellowship in the United States. Supper was served at an early hour, after which tables were provided and games of whist were indulged in until the time for dancing arrived. The Palmer Orchestra furnished good music, and Charles A. Stewart of Springfield acted as prompter.

George W. Catlin, a deaf and dumb person, was struck by the train due here at 4.32, while walking on the Boston and Albany Railroad track near North Wilbraham Wednesday afternoon. He was conveyed to this place, where his wounds were dressed by Dr. G. H. Wilkins, who, after an examination, found that he was severely injured about the head, but the skull had not been fractured. He now lies in a critical condition at the Converse House, although there is a chance for his recovery. He is about thirty years of age, and lives at Winchester, N. H.

The following petition has been presented to the selectmen: "We, the undersigned, respectfully request that you will not grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors in this town during the ensuing year, to any person who has been convicted of selling liquor illegally the past year." Over 230 names are attached to the petition, among them being a large number of the leading citizens of the town. It is earnestly hoped that the selectmen will grant the prayer of the petitioners, and furthermore that they will follow the letter and intent of the law by refusing licenses to others than druggists and hotels, and bona fide common victuallers.

Shall the Reading Room be Kept Open?

The article in the last issue of the Journal appealing for financial aid for the reading-room was quickly responded to by two enterprising citizens, who willingly offered to assist in maintaining such an institution, providing there are others who will do likewise. The clergymen of the several churches also made an appeal for aid last Sunday, and it has been decided to hold a union meeting probably at the Congregational church, next Sunday evening, to devise some course of action looking to the establishing of a reading-room upon a firm and permanent basis. To this end it will very likely be found desirable to form a reading room association, with a board of officers to assume the responsibilities which have heretofore been borne by two or three enterprising citizens, notably Dr. Stowe and O. P. Allen, to whose devoted labors is due the measure of success which has already attended the enterprise. The room should be maintained at all hazards, and our citizens will unquestionably respond promptly and generously to the call for assistance, as soon as they understand the necessities of the case. It may be possible, eventually, to enlarge its scope, put the room on Main street, and add a recreation room, where innocent and healthful amusements may be indulged in.

The Local Base Ball Outlook.

The local base ball season will open Saturday, May 5, and there is every reason to believe that prosperity will attend the team and the games that are to be played on the park. Matters have changed materially during the past two weeks, and the outlook for a first-class amateur team to represent this village is encouraging. The members of the nine have gone into practice, and as it has been previously stated, most of those that played last year will be retained and play in their old positions. Cotter and Kane, the well-known Thompsonville battery, have been engaged, and will be here some time next week. The Thompsonvilles secured the championship in the Connecticut State League, composed of the Hartfords, Meridens and other able teams, last year, and as the new acquisitions are thorough base ball men, they will greatly strengthen the home nine. With Cotter, Rooney and Kee, the Palmers will have three as good pitchers as any amateur team need ask for, while another catcher beside Kane will be engaged. D. F. Holden, who was elected manager of the nine, has declined to serve, and Thomas W. Kenefick has been chosen to the position, and will have the assistance of the former. The diamond on the park is soon to be rolled, graded and put in condition, and it is now proposed to make the admission twenty-five cents, in order to meet all expenses. A paper will soon be circulated to obtain money to purchase new uniforms for the club.

Personal.

Fred Winter of Boston was in town this week.

M. E. Holdsworth of Turners Falls spent Sunday in town with relatives.

H. P. French of Albany, N. Y., spent last Saturday with Dr. W. H. Stowe.

Mrs. H. A. Northrop and daughter are enjoying a two weeks' stay at Milford, N. H.

Dentist Andrews of Monson visits Wales every week and has rooms at the hotel.

C. M. Thompson has purchased a valuable trotting mare. and thinks he can lead the van.

Rev. H. P. Smith made a flying visit this week to look after his farm. He expects to spend a part of next week in town.

George Shaw, formerly of Wales, but recently of Holyoke, has secured board for his family at Royce's Hotel for the summer, while he goes South to spend a few months.

THREE RIVERS.

George A. Dalrymple is sick with measles.

Rev. William H. Woodwell of Newburyport will preach at the Union church Sunday morning and evening.

The ladies of the Baptist church will have a May dinner in the vestry May 1st, to which all are invited. Dinner 20 cents.

Columbus Shearer, who has for the past five years been employed by John F. Twiss as hostler, was found Wednesday afternoon asleep behind the New London Northern depot, and an effort was made to awaken him. He was taken to Mr. Twiss's barn and Dr. Davis called, but he died shortly after his arrival, never becoming conscious. He was born in this town fifty years ago and he will be missed by a great many, especially traveling men, being good-natured and always doing a kindness when he could. Examination shows that his death was caused by paralysis of the heart.

WILBRAHAM.

The parsonage aid society of the Methodist church met at Rev. Mr. Cushing's Tuesday evening.

Joseph Gill of Portland, with his son, of Middletown college, have been spending a few days with Prof. Benjamin Gill.

Mrs. Rockwell of North Adams has been spending a few days with her son, Prof. Rockwell of the academy, the past week.

The ladies of the Methodist church will hold a kettle drum at the residence of Mrs. Horn on Faculty street next Monday evening.

The Willing Workers' Home Missionary Society of the Congregational church met at the parsonage yesterday afternoon and evening.

At the Republican caucus W. A. Day and Henry Clark were chosen delegates to the state convention, and C. M. Pease and C. E. Peck to the district convention.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The boys of the north end are trying to arrange a ball game with the Wesleyans.

The lecture room of Grace church has been newly painted, and is much improved thereby.

D. N. Haskell has sold his place on the mountain to Thomas Lyons, and will remove at once to Mittineague.

The Sunday school class of M. H. Cooley has started a temperance society, and quite a number of boys and girls have joined it. They have weekly meetings at the houses of the members.

The veteran soldiers of the town have had a meeting to arrange for Memorial Day. They chose E. N. Keyes marshal, and appointed a committee to arrange for an address and make all other necessary arrangements. The graves at Glendale and Butlerville will be decorated Sunday, May 27, at the close of the service in the churches, instead of the 30th, as usually no one attends Memorial Day except the two or three who carry the flowers.

WEST WARREN.

The ladies of the Congregational society gave a supper in the church last night.

The Good Templars will give a May supper in Crossman's Hall next Tuesday night.

The well-known Guy Brothers' minstrels will appear in Washington hall to-morrow night.

The ladies of the Methodist society gave a supper and entertainment in the church Wednesday night.

The prospects for a ball team here this summer are rather slim at present. The grounds the boys have usually engaged have been rented to other parties, and there are no other grounds suitable that can be secured.

Louis Cyr of Montreal, "the modern Sampson," gave an exhibition of his strength in Washington Hall Wednesday night, accompanied by some acrobatic artists. He gave a free exhibition to the Brookfield officers Tuesday night, and "raised the wind" to their perfect satisfaction.

WARREN.

The mumps are very prevalent, some schools having a large number of scholars out sick with them.

Arbor day will be observed by the teachers and scholars in the high school building, some schools planting trees, and others ivy and woodbine.

Mr. MacDuff, who has been employed at the pump works for a long time, has accepted a position West, and will soon remove his family.

THORNDIKE.

A social dance was held at Union Hall Friday evening last.

Another addition is being built on to the dye house at No. 2 mill.

The blocks in row 5 are being newly painted, which adds much to their fine appearance.

The new schedule of working hours will go into effect Monday in regard the Saturday half-holiday.

The American Express agency has been changed again, and is now at the office of the Thorndike Co.

Richard Shean of West Warren bought Michael Roche's fast horse Monday, paying $250 therefor.

Scarlet fever has made its appearance in the neighborhood, and several cases are reported, one proving fatal.

Mrs. William Hastings has sold her property on Commercial street to William Metcalf, of the firm of Lawton & Metcalf.

Leonard's mass in E flat will be sung at the Catholic church on Sunday for the second time. Vespers have been changed from 3 to 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

The weather being so cold last Saturday, only a few innings were played by the local base ball clubs. The club has been practicing hard the past week, and will probably open the season May 5th.

Michael Fleming, Jr., who died last week and was buried Monday, was a young man liked by all, and will be missed by his many friends, who sympathize with his parents and relatives in their deep affliction.

The base ball dance takes place this evening, and the committee of arrangements have made every effort to make it a success. There will be a large attendance present, no doubt, as many of the clubs in the neighboring villages have been invited to attend. Lyons & Luman's orchestra will furnish music, and Gharles W. Stuart of Springfield will prompt.

The Guy Brother's Minstrels, which occupied Union Hall Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, were given good houses. The company is first-class and give a pleasing and clean entertainment, introducing many new features in the minstrel line which have never been seen here. The base ball march and clog received rounds of applause. Should they come to this place again they will receive a crowded house.

MONSON.

Gilbert Perkins of Warren spent Sunday with friends here.

Fred King of Boston spent Sunday with his father, William King.

The members of the Windsor Club are indulging in a pool tournament.

The streets are very dusty and the watering cart ought to be brought out.

George H. Newton has improved his residence by adding two bay windows.

Geo. L. Jenks, the Monson clothier, is in Wales this week supplying the wants of his patrons there.

The next lecture in the academy, course which was to be given to-night in the Academy Hall is postponed.

Professor A. A. Rhuland has been giving lectures in town the past week, explaining how to handle vicious horses.

The young people of the Congregational society are arranging for an entertainment to be given some time next month.

The W. N. Flynt Company has commenced laying the stone wall in the rear of St. Patrick's church on Main street.

The firemen will probably be called upon to practice this summer, so in case they should be called out they would know how to handle the apparatus.

Muir, Mitchell & Russell, of Springfield, have commenced operations on Arba Squier's Granite Hill quarry, and will do a large business the coming season.

A freight engine set fire to the woods back of A. Squier & Son's lumber yard Tuesday morning, and it took a large gang of men about two hours of hard fighting to put out the flames.

A Pleasant Wedding Anniversary.

Rev. E. Hitchcock and wife of the Methodist church were given a pleasant surprise reception at the vestry of the church last Friday evening, it being the thirteenth aniversay of their marriage. They were called for at the house of one of his parishioners (where they had been spending the afternoon) early in the evening, but instead of driving to the parsonage they were taken to the church, where the vestry and parlors were well filled with members of the society and invited guests. Rev. B. V. Stevenson, in a few happy remarks, re-married the couple and gave them some good advice for their future happiness; and later in the evening gave a brief address to the people as to how they should treat their pastor to get the most good out of his ministrations. Brief addresses were also made by Rev. Mr. Pennock of the Unitarian church, and Rev. T. A. Dorion of the French Protestant church, and a poem written for the occasion, containing some personal hits, was read by Charles W. Eddy. By this time the pastor and his lady were getting composed from the first surprise of the evening, when H. P. Cummings, master of ceremonies, again called them to the front and with a few tender words, speaking of the great love the people had for their pastor, presented him as a token of this love with a fine gold watch, and Mrs. Hitchcock a set of silver spoons and a silver butter dish. Mr. Hitchcock responded in a happy manner, alluding to his first coming among this people, the high esteem in which he held them, and expressing a desire that much more good might be done this year than ever before. At the conclusion of his remarks Mr. Stevenson, who was watching for an opportunity, made a few more well-timed remarks. A bountiful collation followed, and with music by the orchestra and a social hour, made up an evening of enjoyment that will long be remembered by those present.

SPRINGFIELD LETTER.

Springfield, April 26, 1888.

Breach of promise cases in our courts are so rare, the one on the boards last week drew full houses and became the street corner theme. The male actor in the drama is a red-headed Irish youth of 37, and the spunky maiden a lass of 23, of the same extraction. The court decided that Jimmy must pay Josie $5000 for trifling with her affections, and he is trying to devise ways and means to get rid of paying it. He has put his property out of his hands and says the Josie he once called "my darling" shall never have a dollar of it if he can prevent it. Meantime Josie smiles and says Jimmy must come to time; that she shall never give up the chase until she feels the gold in her palm. Public sentiment settles toward Josie; it apparently believes that Jimmy promised to love and protect her, and afterward cooled and packed his effects and went West to grow up with the country in single blessedness, hoping that Josie would again join in the mazy dance of life and forget his cooing. But it was no go; she followed him with the law, and hence the result. James has showed his fickleness before, but not in the same way. He started in life with the honorable ambition of becoming a priest, and was educated with that in view; he next took up law, but this evidently did not meet his expectation, and he became a tea merchant. It is thought that his going back on Josie was the result of reflection; that when he seriously thought of the possibilities of life, the fact that he was joined in wedlock with an ordinary domestic might cool his aspirations and make him less a man than nature intended. There is an impression in the air that he will move for a new trial, or get a stay of proceedings with his exceptions, and meantime renew negotiations with Josie with a view of keeping the $5000 in the family.

The prospect is that our Democratic city administration is to give the tax-payers a higher rate of taxation this year than they have had for some time past. The marvellous growth and increase of valuation in the city has not kept pace with the expenditures, and the rate must go up, they say, a dollar or more on the thousand; which will cause some squirming when the tax bills are presented. There are at least two items of expenditure under consideration that ought to have a set back for the present,—the using of $10,000 to re-grade and beautify Court square, and $3000 for a public bath-house,—neither of which are needed. Both of these things might be well enough if the city had a surplus it was devising ways to reduce, but neither will suffer by delay. A few hundred dollars to level up the public square, and as much more to keep the plantain and weeds out, is all the city ought to appropriate this year, and the bath-house building can be postponed for some time without material inconvenience.

This season of the year, between hay and grass, always brings apathy and a general tired feeling to the human family, which no doubt accounts for the fact that nothing is being done about the contemplated new depot. When the thermometer stood at 10 below, with some two feet of frost in the ground, and everybody felt brisk and as though they must do something or freeze, there was great activity in the matter of a new union station, and one might have supposed that before this the corner stone would have been laid; but there is no procession in sight. Meantime we are getting along very well with the old depot and grade crossing; the public does not suffer particularly, and would never have known how badly it was being treated but for the newspapers.

The vicinity of the late Union fire is being greatly beautified by the improvements making in rebuilding. The block has a new and handsome front, and most of the building will be as good as new; which, with the adjoining block Mr. Wight is building on Worthington street, will materially change the aspect of the whole locality. This improvement, with the block Mr. Fuller is building below, entirely fills the space on the east side of Main street between the depot and State street. A few years ago anything larger than a peanut stand was not thought of on the east side of the street; now there is as much pedestrian travel and retail trade on the east as the west side, and when the new depot is done there will be more.

LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

From our Special Correspondent.

Boston, April 25, 1888.

A reverse was sustained by the temperance men in the Senate Thursday in the defeat of the bill to require all liquor license fees to be turned into the state treasury. Senator Hartwell of Worcester favored the adoption of an amendment by which one-half of the fees were to go to the state, and the other half to the counties. But by 18 to 20, counting pairs, the Senate refused to give the bill a third reading. The vote was as follows:

Yeas—Clark of Hampshire, Cook, Fletcher, Gleason of Worcester, Gleason of Plymouth, Glines, Hartwell, Howland, Kingsley, Ladd, Messinger, Palmer, Sleeper, Towne, Tucker, Pike, Keith of Plymouth—18.

Nays—Clark of Essex, Collins, Crosby, Hathorne, Howard, Howe, Keith of the Cape, Kimball, Marble, McAlpine, Roads, Shea, Spellman, Sprague, Stevens, Sullivan, Walker, Dwyer, Slattery—20.

On Friday another turn was taken on the bill. Senator Marble of Worcester, who voted against it on Thursday, was willing to give it further consideration, and a motion to reconsider the rejection of the bill was carried by 17 to 16. Then they tried to reconsider the amendment to divide the fees equally between the state and the counties, but it failed, 15 to 18, and the bill was carried to a third reading, 17 to 16.

On Monday came the final act on the bill. It had been advanced one stage after it had once been killed and brought to life again, and now the question was on passing it to be engrossed. The vote was 13 yeas to 14 nays. This killed it finally for this session. The one senator whose vote was decisive was Senator Marble of Worcester. He was not decided at first against the bill, and so voted for its reconsideration on the previous stage. But he could not see sufficient reason for voting for it, and his opposition to it—for he was the only man who changed sides at all, even nominally—caused its final defeat.

The Senate defeated 16 to 17 on Thursday the bill to limit to 58 hours a week the hours of labor of women and minors in manufacturing establishments.

A bill from the committee on manufactures permits the manufacture of water gas in Athol, Spencer and Amesbury, with authority to the supreme court to issue an injunction if the gas prove injurious.

By 41 to 105 the Senate voted down on Thursday a bill to exempt laborers in cities from the civil service law.

The House, by 104 to 40, on Friday engrossed the bill to limit liquor licenses to one for every thousand of population, with one for every 500 in Boston, and it must now go to the Senate for concurrence.

The Senate adopted on Friday a resolution with a memorial to Congress asking for laws to prevent the immigration of convicts and paupers from the old countries.

The substitute bill which is proposed in place of the plan to extend the state house backward by taking the reservoir lot, contemplates taking land both to the east and west of the state house, so as to keep the structure wholly on the crest of Beacon Hill.

A decided vote was given in the Senate against the House bill to impose a heavy penalty for carelessness in the delivery of telegraph messages.

A bill came into the House on Monday from the committee on cities, to provide that any city may pay all of its officers a salary which shall be a full compensation for their services, and that all fees which they receive shall be turned into the city treasury. This is in line with some other legislation which has been enacted in recent years, showing a tendency to abolish all fees, with their possibilities of overcharge or unjust imposition, and to put all public service on the basis of sufficient pay for the work actually performed, without allowing any official an opportunity to take money from the people for which he is not required to make a strict public accounting.

Some important matters have been fixed by the House for debate several days ahead. Discussion on the oleo bill will occur May 1; the bill to allow the towns of Spencer, Athol and Amesbury to license the manufacture of water gas is put down for May 2; the adverse report on the petition of tour-workers in paper mills, that their hours of labor be limited to 65½ a week, is assigned to May 8; and the adverse report on the petition of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology for $100,000 of state aid, to May 9. These assignments, with the other important matters which are pending, make it look as if the session would extend well toward June.

The House had on Monday a lively debate over the shooting of woodcock and partridge. It appeared that sportsmen who went gunning for woodcock often took the opportunity to shoot partridges. So the House, for its part, settled the matter by making the open season for both kinds of birds consist of the three months of September, October and November.

It was a Waterloo for municipal woman suffrage in the House Monday. The opponents of the bill did not care to debate it at all, and after its friends had made two very brief appeals for the women, the roll was called, resulting in 46 yeas to 107 nays, and 14 pairs. It was the worst defeat of the suffragists for a long time.

The House has defeated, 46 to 67, a bill to prevent minors in churches and religious societies from voting on the management of affairs. The friends of the bill urged the inexpediency of allowing children of ten and twelve years to vote on such matters as the settlement of ministers or the financial matters of a church, but its opponents argued that any person old enough to join a church was old enough to vote on any business which came before a church.

The state house committee has reported a resolve appropriating $20,900, most of which is for painting the state house and regilding the dome.

It is proposed to add four new members to the board of control at the agricultural experiment station,—one from the Massachusetts state grange, one from the Massachusetts horticultural society, the director of the station and the secretary of the state board of agriculture.

The committee on military affairs has reported a bill to provide for a naval contingent in the militia, to consist of four companies. Detailed provision is made in the bill for the officering and uniforming of the companies and their drill. The same committee has also reported a resolve for a special commission to sit during the recess to revise and make perfect the records of the state in its service in the war of the rebellion.

LET ME SHOW YOU

what a saving I have made during the last year by being my own doctor. Last year I paid $96.25 for doctors and medicine; this year I paid $5 for six bottles of Sulphur Bitters, and they have kept health in my whole family. They are the best and purest medicine ever made.—Charles King, 60 Temple street, Boston, Mass.

MANY NEW IDEAS

in the home cure of diseases, accidents, and how to treat them, and many hints of value to the sick will be found in Dr. Kaufmann's great medical work; elegant illustrations. Send 3 2-cent stamps to A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass., and receive a copy free.

I have been troubled with catarrh for the past ten years and have tried a number of remedies, but found no relief until I purchased a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. I consider it the most reliable preparation for catarrh and cold in the head.—Geo. E. Crandall, P. M., Quonochawntaug, R. I.

I was troubled with catarrh for seven years previous to commencing the use of Ely's Cream Balm, some five months ago. It has done for me what other so-called cures failed to do—cured me. The effect of the Balm seemed magical.—Clarence L. Huff, Biddeford, Me.

THE HANDSOMEST LADY IN PALMER

Remarked to a friend the other day that she knew Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs was a superior remedy, as it stopped her cough instantly when other cough remedies had no effect whatever. So to prove this and convince you of its merit, any druggist will give you a sample bottle free. Large size 50 cents and $1.

THE POPULATION OF PALMER

is about 6000, and we would say at least one-half are troubled with some affection of the throat and lungs, as those complaints, according to statistics, more numerous than others. We would advise all our readers not to neglect the opportunity to call on their druggist and get a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs. Trial size free. Large bottles 50 cents and $1. Sold by all druggists. (4w4)

WORTH KNOWING.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, merchant, Lake City. Fla., was taken with a severe Cold, attended with a distressing Cough and running into Consumption in its first stages. He tried many so-called popular cough remedies and steadily grew worse. Was reduced in flesh, had difficulty in breathing and was unable to sleep. Finally tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and found immediate relief, and after using about half a dozen bottles found himself well and has had no return of the disease. No other remedy can show so grand a record of cures, as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption Guaranteed to do just what is claimed for it.—Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 4

RENEWS HER YOUTH.

Mrs. Phœbe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." Try a bottle, 50c. and $1, at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 4

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and Other Persons Liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Palmer for the Year 1888.

The Assessors of the Town of Palmer hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said Town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that they will receive at the Town House on the first day of May next, the valuation of estates, and all persons liable to be taxed in said Town are hereby notified to bring in to us true and perfect lists of all Polls (males twenty years old and upwards), and schedules and estimates of the Personal and Real Estates for which they are liable to pay taxes in said Town, possessed by them on the first day of May next.

MORTGAGED REAL ESTATE.

Any Mortgagor or Mortgagee of Real Estate situated within this Town may bring in to the undersigned Assessors, within the time above specified, a statement under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such Real Estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest as a Mortgagor or Mortgagee therein. When only a part of the property described in any mortgage is situated within this town, an estimate of the amount of the Mortgagee's interest in such part; or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the Mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement.—[Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882.

CHAPTER ELEVEN OF THE PUBLIC STATUTES.

SECTION 14. "When any person has an interest in taxable real estate, as holder of a duly recorded mortgage, given to secure the payment of money, the amount of which is fixed and certain, the amount of his interest as mortgagee shall be assessed as real estate in the place where the land lies; and the mortgagor shall be assessed only for the value of said real estate after deducting the assessed value of all such mortgagee's interests therein. When such property is situated in two or more places, the amount of the mortgagee's interest to be assessed in each place shall be proportioned to the assessed value in the respective places of the mortgaged real estate, deducting therefrom the taxable amount of prior mortgages, if any, thereon."

SECTION 15. "If any holder of such a mortgage fails to file in the Assessors' office a statement under oath of all his estate liable to taxation under the preceding section, including a statement of the full amount remaining unpaid upon such mortgage and of his interest therein, the amount stated in the mortgage shall be conclusive as to the extent of such interest; but the mortgagee's interest in such real estate shall not be assessed at a greater sum than the fair cash valuation of the land and the structures thereon or affixed thereto; and the amount of a mortgage interest in an estate that has been divided after the creation of such mortgage shall not be required to be apportioned upon the several parts of such estate, except as provided in sections eighty-one to eighty three inclusive."

SECTION 16. "Mortgagors and Mortgagees referred to in the two preceding sections shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed joint owners until the mortgagee takes possession; and until such possession is taken by the first mortgagee, the assessors or the collector of taxes, upon application to any one of them, shall give to any such Mortgagee or Mortgagor a tax bill showing the whole tax on the mortgaged estate and the amount included in the valuation thereof as the interest of each Mortgagee and of the Mortgagor respectively. If the first Mortgagee is in possession he shall be deemed sole owner; and any other Mortgagee in possession shall be deemed joint owner with prior Mortgagees."

When a statement in conformity to the law above quoted is brought in, the Real Estate therein returned will be assessed under Sections 14, 15 and 16 of Chapter eleven of Public Statutes. But in cases where the Mortgagor of the Real Estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, no statement or return is required from either Mortgagee or Mortgagor unless requested by the Assessors in writing.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, SS. PROBATE COURT—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Joseph King, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, greeting.—

Whereas, a certain instrument, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, has been presented to said Court, for Probate, by Thankful A. King of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to her, the executrix therein named, and that she may be exempt from giving a surety on her official bond as such executrix. You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Palmer, in said County of Hampden, on the second Wednesday of May next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the PALMER JOURNAL, published at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, WILLIAM S. SHURTLEFF, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fourth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

TO RENT, on Maple street, small tenement, with or without barn. Inquire of 42tf Mrs. L. M. BURLEIGH, Main street.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.—By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Alonzo V. Blanchard, John D. Blanchard and Franklin Blanchard, late copartners in business, under the firm name of A. V. Blanchard & Company, to the Hampden Savings Bank, a corporation duly established by law and having its usual place of business at Springfield, Hampden County, Massachusetts, dated August 19th, 1868, and recorded in the Registry of Deeds for the County of Hampden, libro 256, folio 574; will be sold at public auction in front of the office building, on the premises first hereinafter described, on Saturday, the twelfth day of May, 1888, at two o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, and not heretofore released by the mortgagee; to wit: A tract of land with the buildings thereon, situate in Blanchardville, in Palmer, in said County, and bounded northerly by the highway leading past residence of said A. V. Blanchard and land of said A. V. Blanchard, easterly by land formerly of J. T. Fay and Company; southerly by the Quaboag river, and westerly by land of James S. Loomis, land of William B. Bennett and land of A. V. Blanchard; said tract contains about two acres of land.

Also a certain other tract situate in the town of Monson, in said County, and bounded northerly by said Quaboag river, and land formerly of J. T. Fay and Company; easterly by land of Jerry Rourke; southerly by the highway leading from near the residence of A. H. Tanner to Brimfield, and westerly by land of J. H. ### The Great Secret

Of exceptionally long and abundant hair may never be solved; but that Ayer's Hair Vigor preserves the hair in all its beauty and luxuriance, and even restores it, when thin and gray, is

WELL KNOWN.

P. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., writes: "My father, at the age of fifty, lost all the hair on the top of his his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor, the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."

J. T. Gibson, 96 Hope-st, Huntley, Staffordshire, Eng., writes "I have seen young men in South Australia quite gray, whose hair has been restored to its natural color after using but one bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor."

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles $5.

SULPHUR BITTERS

THE BEST AND PUREST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

TRUTHS FOR THE SICK.

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those Pimples and Blotches which mar your beauty are caused by impure blood, and can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS.

DON'T GIVE UP! What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle, soothing tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. Sulphur Bitters is NOT a cheap rum or poor whisky drink, to be taken by the glass, like other preparations, which stimulate only to destroy. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible headache? Why lay and toss on that bed of pain with rheumatism?

If you have failed to receive any benefit from other medicines or doctors, do not despair. Use Sulphur Bitters. They will cure you when all others fail. No person can remain long sick who uses SULPHUR BITTERS.

The dose is small—only a teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied. Get it of your druggist. Don't wait, get it at once. If you are suffering from Kidney Disease, and wish to live to old age, use Sulphur Bitters. They never fail to cure. SULPHUR BITTERS.

Send three 2-cent stamps to A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass., for best medical work published, finely illustrated with colored plates from life.

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR CONTAGIOUS BLOOD POISON.

Mr. D. B. Adams, Union, South Carolina, writes: "I was afflicted with a terrible case of blood poison for about thirteen months. I was treated by the best physicians, and used various kinds of remedies, but received no substantial relief. I finally tried the Swift Specific, and about four bottles cured me sound and well.

Col. B. H. Keiser, editor and proprietor of the Opelika, Ala., Times, under the date of August 3, 1887, writes: "When I was a young man, through indiscretion, I contracted a disease which has stuck to me for years. Some five or six years since I was troubled with pains, so as to make it difficult to walk. Having advertised the S. S. S., in my paper for several years, I concluded I would try it to see if there was any efficacy in the medicine. I commenced using it according to directions and used half a dozen bottles. I was once at a way station and, getting left, I walked the seven miles and have never felt any return of the old malady. After experiencing the good effects I must say I am satisfied with the result. I am sixty-eight years of age and I feel now like a young man and can go to the case when necessary and set up from six to seven thousand ems without any inconvenience. I send you this without any solicitation.

Mr. F. Woehl, 211 North Avenue, Chicago, under date of June 12, 1887, writes: "I deem it my duty to thank you for the cure I received from your excellent medicine. I contracted a severe case of blood poisoning about two years ago. Hearing of your medicine I went to a drug store, the proprietor of which persuaded me to buy a preparation of his own, which he said was a sure cure. I used six bottles of this stuff and grew worse all the time. At last I got disgusted and dispaired of a cure. I met a friend who told me that your medicine had cured him. I went to the same druggist again and demanded your medicine. He reluctantly sold me 12 bottles, and I am now perfectly cured. I write this for the benefit of sufferers, to prevent their being deceived by false representations. I thank you again for the benefit derived from your medicine."

Dr. J. N. Cheney, a prominent physician, residing in Ellaville, Schley County, Georgia, in a letter recounting the infallible success he has in curing contagious blood poisoning cases in his extensive practice, writes: "Those who know the almost inevitable, permanently dangerous effects of mercury will welcome your discovery of S. S. S. as a boon to humanity. The medical profession, always wary of proprietary medicines, is coming slowly, and in some cases secretly, to the use of S. S. S. in cases of blood disorder. Of course a medicine that cures poisoning in its worst form must purify the blood of every disorder."

MASON & HAMLIN

ORGANS. $22 TO $900. The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. GRAND AND UPRIGHT. Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinay claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON AND HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.

A circular containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

Newspaper Fun.

We will gather at the river;
Yes, we'll gather at the river.
We'll resume our fishing b and by;
With hopeful hearts we'll cast our bait,
Through sunny hours together wait,
Then homeward go with languid gait—
And, oh! how we'll lie!
Hades-risking lies we'll tell—
Lies of perch and pickerel;
Lies of bullheads, lies of bass,
And the awful lies which pass
Of the losses of the day,
Of "the fish that got away"—
Fish so big it towed a boat,
Swallowed hook and line and float!
Oh! how we'll lie!

* * * * *

Will our souls all forfeit be?
Is there hope for such as we?
Can we liars pass the gate
Peter guards in solemn state—
Guards so grimly, guards so well?
We may do it—who can tell?
There's at least a hope we can,
For you see,
Peter was a fisherman!
Fished for sport and fished for pelf;
Peter was a fisherman!
He knows how it is himself!

A NEW VERSION.

John Chinaman, my jo, John,
When we were first acquaint
I always paid you weekly,
And paid you ev'ry cent;
But now that I am wed, John,
To make my salary go
I'll have to skip you if I can,
John Chinaman, my jo.

John Chinaman, my jo, John,
You've washed me oft a collar,
And if you were to sue me, John,
I'd pay you ev'ry dollar;
But that would clean me out, John,
And while 'tis wrong, I know,
I'll let you whistle for your bill,

Chicago is full of dangerously thoughtful and mature children.

"Mamma," said one of them, a five-year-old, the other day, "ain't there any other senses 'cept seeing, hearing, feeling, tasting and smelling?"

"No, my child," answered the mother; it is usually considered that those five are enough."

"Well," said the little one, with an air of deep conviction, "I suppose talking would be called sense if there wasn't so much nonsense about it.—Chicago Tribune.

Carelessness with gunpowder. Racer—"Well, old man, how is your horse? I just heard he had been taken sick." Pacer—"Gone! Blown up! Not a thing left, not even the shoes!" Racer—"My gracious! You're stifling me. What do you mean?" Pacer—"Just what I say. You see, a friend of mine told me to give him saltpetre, some one else told me to dose him with sulphur, and another fellow recommended feeding charcoal. I tried all three of them, and everything was going all right until an hour ago, when I happened to look down his throat with a lighted cigar in my mouth. Mighty narrow escape for me, too, I can tell you."—The Idea.

I Was Astonished.

Children often suffer greatly from impure blood until a good medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla, is taken to expel impurities and give vitality.

READ THIS:

"I think it my duty to tell how much good Hood's Sarsaparilla did my little girl. She was from birth puny, pale and sickly, and did not gain strength as she grew older Even when three years of age she could not stand alone She ate hardly anything, and seemed to be weak constitutionally; but was doubtless kept back by impure blood, which caused her much discomfort and suffering. She had scald head terribly, her head being covered with one sore. I decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I was astonished at the effect the first bottle had on her. Her appetite began to pick up, and soon we could hardly give her enough to eat She also gained strength, could stand alone, and the sore on her head began to grow less. We soon healed that up with Hood's Olive ointment, and when she had taken three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla she could run about the house as smart as any child. She has been bright and hearty ever since. I write this out of pure gratitude to Hood's Sarsaparilla." E. T. Alexander, 28 Cleaves street, Portland, Me.

METCALF & LUTHER.

MORE THAN
FORTY YEARS AGO
D. H. BRIGHAM & CO.
OF SPRINGFIELD, MASS.,

Introduced READY-MADE CLOTHING in Western Massachusetts, and have always led all competitors in this line. The taste displayed in all matters pertaining to Artistic Dress has compelled them to enlarge their stock from year to year to such an extent that a division of the business is necessary, consequently the D. H. BRIGHAM COMPANY continue the trade of Clothiers, Hatters and Outfitters on the first floor and basement of building, Nos. 397 and 401 Main street, while D. H. BRIGHAM & CO. occupy the second, third and fourth floors, exclusively, for the manufacture and sale of

Fur Goods, Top Garments and Suits

of the highest grade, for ladies, misses and young children. The entrance to their salesroom is through the store of the D. H. BRIGHAM CO., and up an easy flight of stairs. The will please remember that hereafter we shall give our undivided attention to making and selling a stock unlike that usually kept at dress goods stores or any place outside the largest cities.

Ladies of New England

We Discover

The same demand for ladies', misses' and little girl's ready-made outfits that there is for men's and boys' suits, and the goods which we offer will not come into competition with those which are the handiwork of ordinary dress and cloak makers.

Journeyman Tailors

will be employed on our ladies' suits and top garments, and we guarantee artistic clothing, in all sizes, from 2 years up to 48 and 50, bust measure. Extra sizes a specialty.

You Can Afford

These elegant tailor-made goods, because our forty years' experience in making men's clothing enables us to supply fine goods for ladies and misses, in quality and style to suit, without extra cost.

About May 10th

We shall exhibit ladies', Misses' and children's white suits and wrappers and all other strictly summer goods. Our fur, repair and manufacturing rooms will be kept open through the summer. Garments and furs of all kinds stored and insured against fire, moths and carpet bugs.

Ladies, Call if You Can!

But if not, write for blank measures, and state your wants. Outfits of every kind sent to customers on approval and all letters of inquiry promptly answered.

The Grumbler.

HIS YOUTH.

His cap was too thick and his coat was too thin;
He couldn't be quiet, he hated a din;
He hated to write and he hated to read;
He was certainly very much injured indeed!
He must study and toil, overwork he detested;
His parents were strict and he never was rested;
He knew he was wretched, as wretched could be,
There was no one so wretchedly wretched as he.

HIS MANHOOD.

His farm was too small and his taxes too big;
He was selfish and lazy and cross as a pig;
His wife was too silly, his children too rude,
And just because he was uncommonly good!
He hadn't got money enough to spare;
He had nothing at all fit to eat or to wear;
He knew he was wretched, as wretched could be,
There was no one so wretchedly wretched as he.

HIS OLD AGE.

He finds he has sorrows more deep than his fears;
He grumbles to think he has grumbled for years;
He grumbles to think he has grumbled away
His home and his children, his life's little day.
But alas! 'tis too late! it is no use to say
That his eyes are too dim and his hair is too gray;
He knows he is wretched, as wretched can be,
There is no one so wretchedly wretched as he.

THE LEGEND OF CUPPACUMMUCK.

Spain long since ceased to exert any controlling influence upon the affairs of the world. For more than three centuries she has emerged from her obscurity only to become a bone of contention in the European kennel. The bloodiest wars of modern times have been fought over her decaying carcass. Neither does time bring any improvement in the condition of the Castilian race; the world moves on without them. Small type, small space and less attention are given to the Madrid dispatches of the day. The Sandwich Islands are writing more history in this present decade than the nation whose arms once conquered Europe, and from whose ports sailed the discoverer of the New World. Yet Spain has not always been an imbecile: the throne of Charles V. dominated Europe and overshadowed America; and the den in Madrid, where that old spider, Philip II., used to sit weaving his web, was the center of universal apprehension. Let's pull down that neglected Spanish history upon the dusty upper shelf of our library. It lies before us; a record of heroic achievements; of discovery, of conquest; of gradual rise to almost universal dominion, of sudden and irreparable decay; the story of a people capable of winning the world by their genius and their valor, but guilty of sacrificing their achievements upon the altar of a dark and gloomy fanaticism. When in 1609 the bigoted government of Madrid determined to drive from their homes and country the remnants of that Moorish race, whose life as a separate people had gone out in blood at Grenada more than one hundred years before, intolerance signed the death-warrant of Spanish greatness. Heresy was indeed extirpated; but the energy, thrift and industry of Spain marched over the border in the ranks of the fugitives.

The disasters issuing to Spain from this suicidal policy are nothing to our present purpose, except so far as we may rejoice in a righteous retribution. Only a passing tear may be shed over the unnumbered woes of the million fugitives from superstition and cruelty. We are concerned with the fortunes of but a single family.

In the days of Moorish independence no nobility of Europe was more splendid; and among the glittering throngs that crowded the royal receptions at Granada, and filled the halls of the Alhambra, perhaps none claimed precedence over the representatives of the house of El-Hakem, whose princely residence stood, until the overthrow of Spanish Islam, under the very shadow of the great mosque of Aboo-Yakoob, at Seville.

Of the struggle between the Crescent and the Cross, how the standard of Islam went down at Granada, never to rise again, we cannot speak. The reader must picture for himself the cruelties of the Christian conquest, the banishments, confiscations, tortures inflicted upon the infidels; the utter shattering of the fabric of Moorish life, and finally the complete subsidence of the nobility to the level of the people, carrying with them many traditions of greatness and much substantial wealth.

When the year 1609 brought banishment, suffering and death to this devoted people, the family of El-Hakem shared the common fate; neither could Spanish cruelty extort nor Christian zeal discover the secret of much of the wealth they were known to possess, and must have left behind them.

It is hard in these days to imagine the sufferings of these people. Religious toleration was unknown. Driven from Spain, the doors of the world were closed against them. Persecution followed the family of El-Hakem to France, overtook them in northern Africa, embarked with them for Mexico and the New World, and finally, in the closing days of the 17th century, the last of his race, a fugitive still, laid a broken-hearted mother to rest on the banks of the Charles river in the province of Massachusetts Bay. We shall not wonder that this child of wrong and oppression, as he stood over the wasted form of his mother, and recalled the century of outrage suffered at the hands of Christians, resulting in so much of desolation to himself, felt his heart swell with savage hatred of his kind. Scarcely waiting till the June grasses covered the humble grave by the river, our exile turned his hatred of humanity into action, and with a final anathema against his persecutors, set his face toward the forest, and chose rather the merciful kindness of the savage than the barbarous intolerance of the Christian.

It hardly needed the exposure of a single season to add the most approved Indian bronze to the already rich complexion of the Moor. The growth of his long black hair completed the transformation; and the coming of the winter snows found our new-fledged brave sharing the blanket and wigwam of a Pawtucket warrior, near the broad stream of the Merrimac.

Here, then, is a scene over which we might well stop to moralize. The man who could not find a resting place in the civilized world because he had inherited an obnoxious creed, was frankly adopted by the red men, and in that adoption halted with a new name—Nematano, our brother. The wandering life of his immediate ancestors, a life which he may be said to have inherited, made it perfectly easy and natural for Nematano to adapt himself to the new surroundings. Blessed with a rugged constitution, with a figure well formed, tall and sinewy, we may be sure this young savage, by his transformation, lost nothing of that picturesque beauty characteristic of his race. We can easily imagine his blanket falling from his shoulders with a grace and dignity peculiarly his own. Nematano's new friends seem to have taken peculiar delight in their promising young recruit. He was an apt pupil of their arts. They taught him to bend the bow, to hurl the spear, to guide the bark canoe; he learned to imitate the hoot of the owl, the note of the whip-poor-will, the scream of the hawk, the howl of the wolf; he could track the deer and the bear, he could strike the fish with unerring spear; he knew how to guide his way through the forest by the moss on the trees, by the direction in which the water ran, by the position of the stars; he learned to endure cold, fatigue, hunger, without a murmur. Such an Indian did Nematano become indeed, that his red friends forgot for the time that in fact he was but an adopted son of nature, and at best but a foster brother to themselves.

Indian women, as a rule, are not beautiful. The exposure and dangers of their life, the toil and hardship put upon them by their fathers, brothers and husbands, operate at an early age to the hardening and brutalizing of your Indian girls, making them anything but attractive. Occasionally, however, Indian life develops a peculiar and wonderfully fascinating style of feminine beauty. The elements of this development in the Indian maiden are a figure shapely, lithe and erect; a movement graceful as the swaying of the ferns in her native woods; a high and almost aristocratic cast of features, seen in even greater perfection in the typical Indian chief; eyes of the richest brown, in whose depths the lights and shadows of the forest seem to linger; teeth whose whiteness no luxuries of civilization have corroded; and withal a dignified shyness and reserve which add infinitely to the charm of her other graces. Such is your Indian beauty; such was Izuza, the White Stone, the chieftain's daughter, fairest of Pawtucket women.

Many a dusky Hiawatha had sought the maiden's favor. Upon the war path, in the chase, in the athletic sports of the tribe, many a venture had been taken and many a heroic deed performed, only that the trophies might be laid at the feet of the White Stone. All to no purpose, however. The maiden sat in the wigwam door, with downcast eyes, weaving her mats, or in modest silence waiting upon her father's guests, or prepared with nicest skill the food brought to her hand from the successful hunt, alike unconscious of her own beauty and contented with her lot. Indian manhood and Indian valor pleaded alike in vain. Izuza's heart had never known a longing beyond her simple duties, the rustic housekeeping of her father's wigwam.

Who of our readers cannot guess the sequel? Months had now passed since with mystic rites Nematano had been initiated into the brotherhood of the tribe. On that day Izuza, witnessing the ceremony, had sat apart with the women of the village, and she alone remained with downcast eyes and silent in the midst of the applause which greeted Nematano's successful passage of the ordeal. Of late a deeper shadow lingered in the maiden's eyes. Frequently the chieftain chided his daughter for dreaming over her unfinished tasks. Possibly the White Stone has found a solvent for its hardness. The second spring of Nematano's residence among the Pawtuckets was growing into the deeper greens and more intense heats of summer. In spite of his thorough adoption of the new life, there yet came times when memory returned, and his heart was filled with an undefined sadness and longing. Once he had made a pilgrimage to that unmarked grave on the banks of the Charles. But there came to him no voice; he found there no companionship, and brought back with him only a revival of old hatreds and bitterness. At such times Nematano came to be strangely haunted by the vision of a dark brown maiden with deep and thoughtful eyes sharing with him the wigwam fire; and grievous was his disappointment when the rude awakening put to flight the creation of his dreams. Not a word of love had passed between Nematano and Izuza, hardly a look; yet each had read the other's message. How? Can you tell me how the birds know when spring has come in their northern home? how the magnet attracts the iron? how the thought flies along the electric wire? No more can I tell you how these two hearts came into communion.

Love's signals were seen, too, and interpreted by the dark and jealous eyes of disappointed suitors. It may be remembered that certain Greek heroes of ancient date stood ready to cut each other's throats for the possession of beauteous Helen, and yet found common ground of union against the handsome Trojan who secured the prize. Human nature has hardly changed much in all these centuries. For our young Paris, then, the social atmosphere of the Pawtucket Sparta assumed a decided chill. It seemed suddenly to be remembered that he was, after all, only a ward of the tribe; in reality one of that hated race which showed so little regard for vested rights in Indian hunting grounds. Signs of bitter animosity developed into indications of a deadly purpose.

Conscious of his position, Nematano had never dared even to think his dreaming into a reality; and now, when action was forced upon him, his first and strongest impulse was to lift from himself and Izuza a common peril, and leave her free to bestow her hand upon one of her own race, as her own inclination or her father's will might dictate. To be an exile was no new sensation to this child of persecution. So gathering together the small essentials of his life in the woods, Nematano sallied forth from his wigwam one moonless night, threaded the lanes of the little village, paused for one moment beside the wigwam, through whose bearskin curtain he fancied he could hear the breathing of Izuza; and then, guided only by the stars, struck into the forest and held his way steadily toward the south and west; paused for somedays on the shore of Quinsigamond; spread his blanket and slept under the stars on the very spot where Worcester now stands; journeyed onward and struck the head-waters of the Quaboag; followed its course through dense forests, and among the hills; and in the end found refuge and shelter, a home indeed among the Nipmucks, whose hunting grounds covered a broad region along the Quaboag, and around Potoquattuck Pond; and whose chief citadel and stronghold was Cuppacummuck mountain (mountain with hiding place at the end), the Dumplin of modern days.

Nematano seems to have possessed in a remarkable degree the ability to make friends among the red men. His strong resemblance to the Indian type undoubtedly assisted him. Certain it was that, in a comparatively brief period, he was on the best of terms with his new friends; became a member of the tribe; was admitted to their councils; shared their secrets. Among other things the young stranger learned of the existence, and passed the carefully concealed entrance of a large cave upon Cuppacummuck. The mouth of this cavern was at the foot of one of the steep ledges that run across the face of the mountain on the western slope, and about half way to the summit. The entrance was closed by a flat stone upon which earth and pebbles were allowed to lie so naturally as to preclude all possibility of discovery. This cave was the treasure house of the tribe in times of danger, and its secret was carefully guarded by the leaders of the Nipmucks.

There were no beautiful women among the Nipmucks. Here then our Nematano may surely find safety and contentment. The broad stream of the Quaboag flowed at his feet in which he might fish to his heart's content; or he could dip his oar in the waters of Potoquattuck; or hunt the deer among the forest-clad hills and mountains that keep watch and ward around it. Contented? Ah, yes, if it were not for that evil habit of dreaming, to which we have said this young Indian was addicted; a habit which certainly grew upon its victim after his settlement among the Nipmucks. The vagaries of Nematano at this time are almost past belief, yet the record is authentic. It is said that wrapped in his blanket at night, he used to watch the stars, and fancy they brought him messages from the East; every breeze that fanned him had for the burden of its sighing only the whispered word Izuza; from out the liquid depths of Potoquattuck brown eyes often met his gaze, filled with a tender light which sent him home the victim of unutterable loneliness and longing. A bird came flying from the East one day, perched in the tree above our lover's wigwam, and in notes of ineffable sweetness, uttered only the cry of Ne-ma-ta-no, Ne-ma-ta-no. It was enough. The next morning's sun rose over the hills only to discover our hero following the trail of his dreams, his longings, his affections, back toward the East; back along the sources of the Quaboag; back by the sparkling waters of the Quinsigamond; onward to the stream of the Merrimac, still seeking the White Stone of the Pawtuckets.

We can hardly imagine our Romeo revealing his presence by a love song beneath its balcony of his Juliette. Circumstances were decidedly against such a proceeding. How then did Izuza discover that Nematano was not still breaking his heart with sighing upon the banks of the Quaboag? We cannot tell. We only know that the peculiar cry of a whip-poor-will was heard in the forest one day; and that that very night Izuza fancied her name was whispered, just outside the covering of the wigwam—by the breeze probably. Certain it is however that the lovers met, and that this second Minnehaha whispered:

"I will follow thee, my husband."

Equally certain that the Pawtucket chief was left to sing with the ancient Arrow Maker:

"Thus it is our daughters leave us,
Those we love and those who love us;
Just when they have learned to help us,
When we are old and lean upon them,
Comes a youth with flaunting feathers,
Wanders piping through the village,
Beckons to the fairest maiden,
And she follows where he leads her
Leaving all things for the stranger."

"Pleasant was the journey homeward" could not in this case be said however. Hot was the pursuit

"Through interminable forests,
Over meadow, over mountain,
Over river, hill and hollow."

* * * * * * * * *

At Brookfield the pursuers were close at hand; the feet of Izuza were torn and bleeding, and her anxious lover found himself almost carrying the trembling companion of his flight. But "everybody loves a lover," and Dame Nature is by no means so hard hearted as she seems. Indeed, certain gossips of the classic age more than hint that the old lady is not without some tender passages in her own biography. Believe the gossips or not as you please, somehow we have come to expect this Alma Mater of ours to bring the unexpected to pass in affairs of the heart. She seldom disappoints us. So here, when night fell, a tragedy was about to be enacted; before daylight came, a tremendous shower had fallen; the Quaboag had become a navigable stream, and the fugitives were floating miles down the valley in a canoe, contraband of war, leaving no trace behind them.

The skiff with its precious freight, glided on past spots since become populous and busy centers of manufacture and trade; past the site of the future Palmer; down to the point where the Burleigh Brook comes dashing down Break-neck hollow to join the Quaboag. Up the brook Nematano and his companion waded, carrying the canoe to a point just opposite the mountain. Hurrying thence up the side of the hill, Nematano lead the way to the cave, and took refuge in the heart of Cuppacummuck.

Love was certainly triumphant; and after a few days of hiding found itself able to emerge from retirement, and set up housekeeping at the base of Cuppacummuck, upon the little grass plot, across the road from the old school house, a spot known to our readers as the annual camping ground of a certain tribe of Gypsy visitors.

Here then Nematano and Izuza lived; here their children were born; from here Nematano went to Spain, bringing from thence family treasurers concealed in Saville all these years, and which again went into hiding in the cave of Cuppacummuck; and here the family was found in 1716 by John King the first settler of our town. A tradition of this singular family still lives among the decendents of John King. The father is described as a man a little past middle life, tall and finely formed, with a refined, almost classic cast of feature, but in complexion, style of dress and living not to be distinguished from the occasional Nipmuck who still survived. Of Izuza tradition has preserved little except a remembrance of a small graceful figure and wondrous brown eyes. In regard to the children, two boys and three girls, we only know that the youngest bore the mother's name.

Indian tradition asserts that from time immemorial an owl had made his home upon Cuppacummuck; and that his hooting had invariably been prophetic of war or pestilence, the only two disasters which could overtake an Indian. Long after the last Nipmuck warrior had folded his tent and stolen away, the old owl maintained his position and his prophetic office. No disaster fell upon the the early settlers of the Elbow's tract which was not heralded by this melancholy bird. To his somewhat dismal hootings a note responsive was accustomed to be heard from Massawamasog (great decliviy), across the Quaboag. The oracle of the Massawamasog has long been silent, but travelers late at night still hear the notes from Cuppacummuck.

For many nights in the early winter of 1727 the Cuppacummuck owl had maintained an almost ceaseless clamor, while from across the river came the echoing response. Izuza knew the traditions of the tribe, and the hooting of the old owl filled her with apprehension and dread. Her fears were too well grounded. Upon the infant colony of the Elbows there came in the winter of 1727, such a visitation as filled many pages of the old district clerk's book with death entries. The mortal throat distemper visited every family, and left only grief and desolation behind. It entered the little house at the foot of Cuppacummuck and five of its inmates, mother and four children, were carried out one by one and put at rest close to the cottage, near the foot of the mountain. When the snows were melted, the Rev. Robert Treat of Brimfield came and preached a single sermon over the five newly-made graves. Of the desolation of the father's heart and home we may not speak. We only know that, before the roses bloomed again by the cottage door, Nematano left his home, left the graves of his dead, left the cave with its treasures, took with him only the little Izuza, and disappeared, so far as we know never to return. The poor little cottage fell in pieces and disappeared. The graves became even with the turf, and only the grass plot, level and green to the present day remains to mark the little tragedy we have related.

Nearly 150 years have passed, and Nematano and Izuza were nearly faded from the world's remembrance. More than a generation ago, however, a certain band of Gypsies began to attract local attention. It was noticed that their return was as regular as the season; that they always encamped upon the level grass plot at the west of Mt. Dumplin. A certain period of their sojourn is always marked by a series of weird and curious ceremonies, conducted at a particular spot near the foot of the mountain. What appears like a minute examination of the whole western slope of Cuppacummuck is annually instituted. The queen of this tribe always bears the name Izuza, and there is a younger Izuza to succeed her. Upon the hand of the reigning Izuza may be seen a ring of strange and curious workmanship. This ring descends in the royal line, and carries with it the queenly dignity. 'Tis indeed a bit of barbaric finery which once sparkled upon the fore-finger of some veiled beauty of Seville, and may still be seen gracing the plump brown hand of the Gypsy queen who will appear at your door the coming summer, and beg to sell her baskets or tell your fortune.

Three years ago this Gypsy band, at the close of their annual sojourn, broke camp from their usual place, and, like true birds of passage as they are, started for the south. They had proceeded but a little way, when their queen was seized with a mortal illness, and ended her royal progress at a spot near the shore of the pond at North Wilbraham. Before her departure, however, she summoned the young Izuza, transmitted to her the official ring, and imparted to her the story we have recorded. And so, under a new queen occurs the annual visit to the home of the ancestor of the tribe; the yearly offering is paid at the grave of Izuza the first, and the ever recurring search is made for the cavern and its treasures, which Nematano so carefully concealed.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 4, 1888.

ILLINOIS Republicans, at their state convention Wednesday, pronounced in favor of Judge Gresham as their presidential candidate.

THE bill prohibiting the sale of liquor on Fast, Memorial, Thanksgiving and Christmas days has been approved by the governor.

GOVERNOR AMES resents the presumption of General Draper of Hopedale in announcing himself as a candidate for the governorship, and sees no reason why he himself should not have the customary nomination for a third term. He has done well, that's a fact; and yet he only wanted one year of it to begin with, you know.

A SHORTAGE of $100,000 was discovered Tuesday in the funds of the National Park Bank of New York, and now the officials are trying to find C. I. De Baun, the assistant cashier, who resigned a couple of weeks ago on account of "ill health," and has disappeared. He lived beyond his means.

MELVILLE W. FULLER of Chicago has been nominated by the president for chief justice of the United States supreme court. Mr. Fuller is 56 years of age, a graduate of Bowdoin College, and a leading lawyer in his adopted city, where he has won a competence. His nomination is very generally commended, by Republicans as well as Democrats.

SENATORS INGALLS and Voorhees tried to knock each other down with words in the United States senate Tuesday, furnishing entertainment to a big audience. The unsavory copperhead record of Voorhees of course gave Ingalls a great advantage, but it was a sorry exhibition nevertheless, and adds nothing to the popular respect for the senate.

IT took the Republicans of the 12th district but a short time Wednesday to select their delegates to Chicago. Judge Robinson of Palmer was made chairman of the convention at Chester, and Emerson Gaylord of Chicopee and W. M. Prince of Pittsfield were chosen delegates, with W. N. Flynt of Monson and F. H. Wright of Great Barrington.

THE General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church began its quadrennial session at New York Tuesday, and will continue its deliberations through the month. This conference is the supreme legislative body of the Methodist church, and delegates are present from all quarters of the globe. The admission of women as lay delegates is one of the first important questions confronting the conference, there being five women who hold credentials as such.

May Literature.

Good Housekeeping for April 28, like all its predecessors, is a welcome guest and brings health and cheer to its readers. "How To Act in Emergencies" and "Some Simple Remedies" are worth more than the price of the magazine. It is a publication that should be in every household.

Scribner's for May is full of interest, and the illustrations are spirited and life-like. "In the Steamer's Track," a true story of a cruise on the New York pilot boat David Carll, is more entertaining than romance. "Salmon Angliney on the Restigonche" is graphic in the extreme and is well illustrated by A. B. Frost. "The decoration of Vases" by W. P. I. Longfellow, "Modern Explosives" by C. E. Munroe and an article by Alexander Pope are among other prose writings. There is some poetry, an installment of "First Harvests" and a very fine complete story by Margaret Crasby, "A Child of Light."

The Art Amateur for May contains a striking colored portrait study of a "Laughing Man," three-quarters size, and over a dozen designs in black-and-white, including a classical figure of "Fame," plate decorations (fish and seaweed, Niphetus roses), a panel decoration (fringed gentians), a plaque design (birds and deer), a page of monograms (Q). Salon pictures are "The Poachers" (dogs) by Elizabeth Strong, and "Mending the Net" by Henry Bacon. There are useful practical articles on landscape painting, charcoal drawing and wood carving, and invaluable hints to art teachers, china painters and needle workers. The illustrated series on home decoration and furniture is continued; The Academy and American Artists' exhibition of Rembrandt's etchings is noticed and finely illustrated, and in "My Note Book' art thieves and tricksters are handled, as usual, without gloves. Price 35 cents. Montague Marks, publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

Harper's for May comes to the front with a portrait of Kinglake, the historian of Lord Raglan in the Crimean, War for frontispiece. "London as a Literary Centre" presents much of interest about the writers who have had a home in that city. The selection of the few from among the many has been admirable and the twenty-seven portraits are excellent. A second paper in the June number will be devoted to novelists, "A Winter in Algiers" continues F. A. Bridgman's article commenced in April, and the illustrations are good specimens of the art of American wood engravers. "Russian Convicts in the Salt Mines of Iletsk" is illustrated with views of Russian towns, prisons, convicts, etc. The author, Dr. Henry Lansdell, D. D., considers that the Russian convict fares about as well as prisoners in other countries, barring the rigors of the climate. Mr. Albert F. Heard contributes an article describing the system of alleged law and justice which prevails in Russia, not only in theory but in practice to-day. The article emphasizes the almost hopeless condition of affairs in Russia from a political point of view. The third paper on the West by Mr. Warner is devoted to Chicago. Poetry and short stories have their usual space, and "In Far Lochaber" has a new element introduced.

The May number of the Eclectic is filled with interesting matter for cultivated readers. The opening paper by Sir Lyon Playfair is a suggestive study of the effects of applied science upon trade, the author showing what changes have been made in economics by the advance of the practical sciences. Prof. Deroden's articles on English Literature and "The Profession of Letters" are interesting papers which will appeal strongly to lovers of literature. Another literary paper of a historical nature is from the Westminster Review on "Hans Sachs; the Peoples' Goethe of the Sixteenth Century." Matthew Arnold's study of "Civilization in the United States," which has attracted such wide remark, is one of the features of the number. G. T. Bettany's reasons for believing that the United States is a great threat to Europe will be received with no little curiosity. Other articles on social questions, worthy of note, are "Female Poaching on Male Preserves," "Imperial Confederation, Canada, and the United States;" "The Swarming of Men," by Leonard Courtney, and a very timely discussion of the question of household servants, under the title of "Domestic Service and Democracy." A mystical story of marked power is that entitled "A Dead Man's Vengeance," from Blackwood's Magazine. Published by E. R. PELTON, 25 Bond Street, New York. Terms, $5 per year; single numbers, 45 cents; trial subscription for 3 months, $1. Eclectic and any $4 Magazine, $8.

The May Century begins a new volume. The opening article is the first of the series by George Kennon, in which is to be recorded the results of the Century expedition into Siberia and examination of the exile system. The frontispiece is a touching scene at the Siberian boundary post. in the "Author's Preface," Mr. Kennon relates the circumstances under which he undertook his Siberian mission. The illustrations are numerous, and there is a full-page map of the route. Theodore Roosevelt describes (and Remington illustrates) his adventurous and amusing pursuit and capture of three boat-thieves. Two brief papers appeal especially to the soldier audience, the first being" a study of regimental losses in the Civil War." The second describes the famous "Locomotive Chase in Georgia," one of the most thrilling incidents of the war. The Lincoln Life deals especially with the efforts made to keep the Border States from Secession, and Mr. Lincoln appears not only in this historical setting, but also as a character of fiction in Dr. Eggleston's Western novel, "The Graysons," which now approaches its most interesting point. Dr. Eggleston publishes also an important chapter in his colonial series, his original account of "The Church of England in the Colonies," with a number of illustrations of churches, etc., and a portrait of Bishop Berkeley. A two-part story "The Liar," begins in this number, and there is a complete story by Edward Bellamy, entitled "A Love Story Reversed." Matthew Arnold's recent address on Milton is here printed for the first time, and Mr. Cheney has another chapter on "Bird Music." The poetry of the number includes four brief pieces by Aldrich, a dialect poem by Riley (illustrated by Kemble), etc. In the departments such subjects are discussed as Civil Service reform and the coming National Conventions; the training of girls in the direction of self-support.

The first ball game of the season will be played on the park to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, when the Palmers will be matched against the Homesteads of Springfield. The Palmers will present their new battery, and a good game is looked for. Admission is 25 cents for men, ladies free, and score cards bearing the names of all the players will be for sale.

This week's session of the probate court at Springfield granted administrations on the estates of—Silas J. Wilcox, late of Monson, Eliza J. Wilcox administratrix; Louisa D. Allen, late of Monson, Ira G. Potter administrator. The will of Dinah C. Hale, late of Longmeadow, Edgar Alonzo Hale executor, was filed, and administrator's inventories filed in the estates of—Louisa H. Colton, late of Wilbraham, personal $664; Walter Hitchcock, late of Hampden, real $3800, personal $1060. An account was rendered in the estate of Mary F. Wyles of Brimfield, showing a balance of $62,973.

The Licenses Granted.

The selectmen have granted the following licenses to applicants for the sale of intoxicating liquors for the ensuing year: First class—Nassowanno House, Palmer; Catherine O'Connor, Thorndike; second class—Daniel Keefe, Three Rivers; D. J. Flynn, Thorndike; George W. Armstrong, Palmer; fourth class—Jerry Shea, Bondsville; Dwyer & Sullivan, Palmer; fifth class—Caryl Brothers, Palmer; sixth class —O. P. Allen, LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; A. P. Adams, Thorndike; first and fourth classes—James Lynch, John Feeney, Thomas J. Chalk, Palmer; Mrs. Patrick Rochford, Three Rivers; M. J. Sullivan, Bondsville; Lawton & Metcalf, Daniel J. Sullivan, Michael Roach, Thorndike; Mrs. Honora A. Dunn, Three Rivers. The selectmen have refused to grant licenses to the following: Vila D. Shaw, Three Rivers; Adolph Girouard, Bondsville; J. J. Shugrue, Thorndike. E. A. King has withdrawn his application. Other applications will be granted as soon as the premises and places of the applicants in question are put in proper condition.

Tramps, And Our District Court.

Some tramps who were pardoned by the county commissioners Tuesday tell rather a doleful story of their treatment in Palmer. Says yesterday's Republican: —

> Pardons were granted to John Moynahan, William Smith, Thomas Mellen, Daniel Ryan, John O'Donnell, John Murphy and Samuel Smith, seven young men who were sentenced from the Palmer district court for vagrancy and were serving sentences of from three to six months each. The stories told by these prisoners were rather startling, and were earnest enough to convince the judges. They said that they were tramps, but had never been in jail before. They lodged at Palmer, and in payment of their lodging and breakfast of crackers and water were made to break stone. Two of them said they worked for over two hours, and no one was around and they thought they had done enough, so they left, but were soon overtaken and arrested. The others said they worked two hours and then asked the man in charge how much longer they must work. They were told they would be kept at it for a good while unless they did better and quicker work. They said they worked hard for two hours more, and then refused to work longer. The committee have been put to a deal of trouble with cases from this court, and have had in several cases to appeal to the governor to commute unjust sentences. Many cases have been sent to jail which should have gone to the almshouse. Stories are told of one officer of this court who was in the habit of following tramps on the road in hopes they would beg that he might arrest them and secure the fee. The district attorney has had to interfere to have the fines of the court properly returned.

District Court.

At the district court last Saturday morning the juveniles were arraigned for breaking into the wire mill school house and were convicted, the fines amounting to about $15. Harry Hanson, the chief mover in the affair, was committed to the care of the state board of lunacy and charity. O. M. Southwick, a recent proprietor of the Nassowanno House, had a hearing for illegal liquor selling on Sunday. He was fined $50 and costs, but took an appeal. Joseph Sweet and Thomas Boardman, the participants in a recent street disturbance at Thorndike, also had hearings, the former being ordered to pay costs amounting to $1, while the latter was released by paying $14.25. Fred Dozie of Willington, Ct., for larceny from Sophie Brooks, had a hearing Monday morning and was liberated after handing "his honor" $14.93. George Greene of Palmer, for a simple drunk, paid $6.33 Tuesday morning. Wednesday morning three employes of the Palmer Wire Manufacturing Company were charged with disturbing the peace, and each paid the required fine and costs. John Barry of Monson paid $6.73 for drunkenness the same morning. Herbert W. Phelps, alias William H. Robinson of Brookfield, was tried this morning for taking a team from L. E. Ferry Nov. 9, 1887. He made restitution and was released by paying costs of $7.75.

Personal.

J. P. Lynde, Jr., is visiting at his home in Athol.

W. H. Hellyar of Boston was in town Saturday.

Ashley Royce of Winsted, Ct., was in town over Sunday.

Adelbert Northrop of Lynn spent Sunday here with his parents.

Conductor Sanders is confined to his home again by sickness.

Fred Gamwell is home from school at Worcester for a short vacation.

Mrs. W. Hayden of Brookfield, who has been making a brief stay in town, has returned home.

Charles Anderson of Willimantic, Ct., was in town Wednesday and made a call among friends.

J. B. Ludden of North Brookfield was the guest of M. E. Howard at the Converse House last Sunday.

Miss Lizzie Sanford, sister of Mrs. ex-Gov. Head of New Hampshire, is a guest of Mrs. J. H. Gamwell.

Mr. and Mrs. M. W. French are stopping at the Weeks House prior to their permanent departure from town.

Mrs. J. Robinson, widow of the late ex-governor Robinson of Vermont, is visiting at the residence of Dr. W. H. Stowe.

Mrs. M. C. Munger of Chicago, sister of John A. Squier of this place, has come to make her home with her brother for the present.

Observance of Sunday.

Mr. Editor: —On May 1 began the licensed sale of liquor in our town. It is now earnestly hoped that those who obtained licenses will honestly and faithfully observe the laws which the state has enacted for the regulation of this traffic. However good men may differ in their opinions on the question of license, they all agree upon this:—the laws of the commonwealth should be respected. Especially earnest are they in their wish that the law which forbids the sale of liquors upon Sunday should be recognized and strictly complied with. Violation of the law in this respect will cause grief to all who have at heart the welfare of the community. Sad are the stories that come to us from those cities and towns where liquor is sold upon Sunday. We are told that Sunday liquor selling has done more to beget debauchery and crime than all other sources of demoralization. On no other day, it is said, are so much drunkenness and lawlessness beheld. It strikes a fierce blow at morality and religion. Nothing has done so much to secularize and desecrate the Sunday, is the report given. It keeps men from church, and the hours that should be devoted to meditation and prayer are dissipated away in drunken revelry and sensual delight. It thus destroys man's spirituality, subverts his intellectual and moral powers, and makes him a slave to his animal appetites. The lips that should be exercised in God's praise are prostituted to the foul work of blasphemy and lascivious conversation. Equally dark is the picture which is drawn of many homes in those communities. Sunday, that should overflow the Christian home with happiness, is there a source of misery and woe. By mother and wife the coming of Sunday is anticipated not with pleasure, but with dread. To them it is the saddest and darkest day of the week. It brings not solace but wretchedness. We are told that it means the departure in the morning of son and husband for the saloons, and their return at night in the state of intoxication, with money squandered and energies exhausted: body and soul alike sufferers. Nor is drunkenness the only vice acquired. Men have been known to sit from Saturday night away into Sunday, gambling. Indeed such has been the demoralization in those places where liquor has been sold upon Sunday, that outraged public sentiment, beholding the sad havoc and desolation thereby caused, at last became alarmed for the public welfare and revoked the licenses of saloon and hotel-keepers alike, who had thus audaciously violated the laws and set at defiance the wishes of the good men of the community. The bitter experiences of those cities and towns should be to us a warning. The lesson that they teach is a valuable one. God's laws cannot be violated with impunity; the day that he has dedicated to his own praise, honor and glory cannot be converted into a day of riotousness, and the family, the state and society not suffer incalculable harm. All days are indeed God's, but Sunday is especially his, and it should be the aim of all Christian men and women to keep it in a holy manner. They thereby ennoble themselves, elevate society, promote the common weal and strengthen the state. Strong are the hopes of the Christian people of Palmer that those to whom the selectmen have entrusted the sale of liquor will refrain from the sale upon Sunday. The future alone will reveal whether these hopes are born of a sound judgment, or are the "baseless fabric of a vision." It is our heartfelt prayer that these anticipations will not be disappointed, but will meet a happy realization. THOMAS J. SULLIVAN,

Pastor St. Thomas' Catholic Church.

The Reading Room

TO BECOME A PERMANENT THING.

A union meeting was held at the Second Congregational church Sunday evening for the purpose of taking definite action in regard to maintaining the reading-room. There was a small attendance, yet a good deal of interest was manifested, and the contributions by the citizens were very liberal. Rev. H. W. Pope opened the meeting by making an earnest appeal for financial aid for the support of a reading-room, in which every citizen that is loyal to his town should feel deeply interested. "There is an exceptionally fine class of young people in the village that should have the advantages of a well-equipped institution for mental training, such as has been proposed, and unless such an institution is provided for them they will be liable to go the downward course—a course that will corrupt their morals. This matter of maintaining a reading-room is one that all should seriously consider, for the success of our homes depends in a large measure upon the influences that are brought to bear upon the young men of this village." Dr. W. H. Stowe followed, saying that "The small attendance to-night indicates that interest in the reading-room project is materially decreasing, for if the citizens were interested in the matter and could see the advantages of an institution of this kind in the right light, they would have certainly been here to-night in large numbers ready to render financial aid." The speaker said that the reading-room had been well attended and much enjoyed by the young people since it has been established, and in order that it may be maintained an annual sum not exceeding $150 would be required. He then set the financial ball rolling by stating that he would donate the sum of $10 per year for the support of a reading-room as long as he remained in town. Brief remarks were also made by Rev. A. W. Weeks, Rev. F. W. Betts, L. E. Moore, H. B. Knox, O. P. Allen, C. B. Fisk and others. The following is a list of the contributors and the amount subscribed by each: L. H. Gager, $10; Young Ladies' Missionary Society of the Second Congregational church, $12; "No Name," $10; L. E. Moore, $10; E. Brown, $10; H. C. Strong, $10; C. B. Fisk, $10; O. P. Allen, $10; Dr. W. H. Stowe, $10; Rev. H. W. Pope, $5; W. R. Milligan, $5; Rev. F. W. Betts, $5; Woman's Christian Temperance Union, $10; George A. Wright, $5; Rev. A. Weeks, $5; J. H. Gamwell, $3; D. H. Brown, $2; H. B. Knox, $5; E. P. Ball, $5; A. E. Park, $5; T. W. Howard, $2; C. C. Abbe, $1; W. W. Hall, $1; A. C. Merritt, $1; F. R. Sistare, $1; Harry Taft, $1; Leonard Upham, $1; James Dewey, $1; Fred Cady, $1; P. E. Miller, $1; Frank Holdsworth, $1; Luther Cobb, $1, Eleazer Moore, $1; Joseph Connor, $1; George Justin, $1; Mrs. C. K. Brown, $1; Miss Della Holbrook, $1; Frank Bosque, $1; Miss Carrie Lacey, $1; Oliver Patrell, $1; Miss Cora Brown, $1; Miss Lacey, $1; Miss Nettie Coleman, $1; H. W. Tracey, $1; Miss Lena Brown, $1; Henry Loomis, $1; Hubbard Lawrence, $1; C. K. Brown, $1; Frank Carpenter, $1; Fred Gamwell, $1; Miss Emma Dewey, $1. Total, $178. The following committee was also appointed to draft a set of by-laws, devise a plan for organizing a reading-room association, and report at a meeting to be held later: Dr. W. H. Stowe, H. B. Knox, A. C. Merritt, C. C. Abbe and P. E. Miller.

BRIMFIELD.

Joseph St. George will sell at auction Monday, at the Ansel Holbrook place, a yoke of oxen, horse, bull and other stock, besides wagons and farming tools.

BELCHERTOWN.

The house of Edward F. Towne caught fire yesterday afternoon from a defective flue and was burned to the ground, only the furniture being saved. The building was well insured.

BONDSVILLE.

The "Lightning Blues" ball club would like to hear from any club within a radius of 10 miles whose members' ages are from 12 to 13 years. Letters should be addressed to John Cavin.

THORNDIKE.

The supper served at the Congregational church vestry Tuesday evening was in every way a success, and added $50 to the society's treasury. Quite a number were present from Palmer.

HAMPDEN.

The dead body of George Crocker was found by the side of the road Wednesday afternoon. He had been driving a four-wheeled dump-cart up a hill, and the heavy load had dumped the cart. It is supposed he was thrown from the load and his neck dislocated by the fall. He leaves an aged mother, a wife and one child.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. C. E. Amaron of Lowell will preach at the Union church next Sunday.

Amos Olds has bought a house on Yale street in Springfield, paying about $3600 for it.

John R. Perkins, formerly of this village, died in South Boston last Saturday, after an illness of nine or ten weeks. Mr. Perkins was for a number of years overseer of the dressing room of the Palmer mill, and was well-known in this vicinity. He was one of the youngest soldiers who served through the late war, and for a time he was sergeant of the guard having the custody of Jefferson Davis soon after his capture in 1865, and always took a great interest in Grand Army matters.

LUDLOW.

George A. Birnie is spending the week at Westport, Conn.

Charles Browning's new house is nearly ready for occupancy.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society gave a sociable in the vestry of the Union church Thursday evening.

Mr. Eddy has hired a house recently occupied by Mrs. Andrews, who has taken the boarding house.

Rev. Edward Day preached at the Methodist church at Ludlow Center last Sunday, and Mr. Ferguson of the Methodist church preached in the village.

The new postmaster, James Haviland, began his duties Tuesday morning. The office has been moved to another corner of the same building, and the room formerly used for the office has been added to Mr. Beckwith's store.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

J. A. Parker has come into possession, through a friend in Indianapolis, of quite an interesting relic in the shape of a field map of Loudon, Jefferson, Berkeley and Frederick counties of Virginia, compiled in 1862 for Gen. McClellan. It has a number of official indorsements and is quite a curiosity.

Quite a number of trees were planted in our village Arbor Day, and it is hoped that in time the people will become interested enough to make a general observance of the day. A village improvement society has been talked of for some years, but we are still waiting for some one with "gimp" enough to start it.

The walls of the new paper mill are now up to the top of the second story windows, and are going up with a rush. The foundations are being put in for the 140 by 40 foot stock house and rag room, and the office will be put up east of the mill and separate from it. Altogether the size of the new plant will be materially larger than the old.

WARREN.

Mr. Barnes of Pittsfield spent last Sabbath in town.

Mr. Lemon will have charge of the highways the coming year.

The public library has a number of new books added to its list.

The literary club met with Mrs. Albert Lincoln Tuesday afternoon.

The Women Christian Temperance Union met with Mrs. Darling Thursday afternoon.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. D. G. Hitchcock Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Benson has commenced his improvements on the park, and as usual, it presents a fine appearance.

Mr. Conway has the contract for building a two-story house on Maple street for Mr. Butterworth.

Mr. Brosseau has purchased a lot of Mr. Whitaker on Southbridge street, and will soon put up a house.

The pews in the Congregational church were rented Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Chadsey paying the highest premium, $25.

WALES.

C. Roper of Holland has purchased of H. A. McFarland one of his thoroughbred Jersey heifer calves.

The ladies of the Baptist society will hold their annual fair in the vestry next Wednesday and Thursday evenings.

C. M. Thompson has had one race with his fast trotter, which resulted in a draw. He thinks the mare will do better next time.

Jenks, the Monson clothier and hatter has decided to continue his branch store in Shaw's block for a week or two longer, and will have a special straw hat sale next week.

G. S. Rogers has two Plymouth rock pullets which have laid 56 eggs in the month of April, and three of them were doubled yolked, weighing 3, 3¼ and 3½ ounces respectively. One of them layed 22 eggs in 22 consecutive days last December, a record hard to beat.

The officers chosen for the Wales Savings Bank for the present year are: President, Elijah Shaw; vice presidents, N. S. Hubbard, Warren Shaw and G. L. Webber; secretary and treasurer, H. A. McFarland; trustees, G. S. Rogers, E. D. Shaw, E. C. Sherman, J. S. Hubbard, P. W. Moore, W. S. Janes, H. E. Shaw, Isaiah Hiscock, W. L. Webber, Lucius Agard, David A. Shaw; committee on investment, Warren Shaw, G. S. Rogers, W. L. Webber, H. A. McFarland; auditors, N. S. Hubbard, G. L. Webber and Warren Shaw.

WILBRAHAM.

The Ludlows defeated the Wesleyans at base ball Saturday, 13 to 12.

The North church Sunday-school held their annual meeting in their class room last evening.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Congregational church met at the parsonage yesterday afternoon and evening.

Dea Knowlton and Monroe Pease were the delegates from the Congregational church to the conference at Huntington yesterday.

The Members of the Grand Army and veterans are invited to attend services in a body at the Methodist church Memorial Sunday, May 27th.

At the annual meeting of the Ladies' Benevolent Society of the South church the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. N. S. Howard; vice president, Mrs. Dr. Foskit; secretary and treasurer, Miss Emily Phelps, assistant, Miss Gertie Weatherby; directors, Mrs. Henry Clark, Mrs. James Richards and Mrs. Dea Knowlton.

At the annual meeting of the Woodlawn Dell Association, Saturday, the following officers were reëlected: Rev Dr. E. B. Amchems of Ithaca, N. Y., Abraham Avery of Boston, Dr. Algernon S. Flagg, Dr. Stebbins Foskit, Robert R. Wright, John N. Merrick, Herbert Burbank, Ira G. Potter, Calvin G. Robbins, James C. Moody, Monroe Pease, John Kelly and James Stevens.

The prize speakers have been chosen for commencement week at the academy, as follows: Junior class—Robert H. Gilford of Plattsburg, N. Y.; Damon M. Kilgore of West Somerville: Frank E. Lindsey of North Dana; George D. Lamberton of Westfield; Fred C. Stedman of Brattleboro, Vt.; Minton A. Norton (substitute) of Plainville, Ct.; Clara A. Hall of South Wilmington, Ct.; Ida C. Rogers of Newbury; Claudia A. Ross of Wallingford, Ct.; Bessie M. Wright of Essex, Ct.; Amy E. Wood of Montevideo, Uraguay; Alice A. Holden (substitute) of Palmer. First and second year—Wilber C. Johnson of Marblehead; G. W. Simonson of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Harry L. St. Clare of St. Paul, Minn.; Alfred E. Upham, of Ruthland; Jessie F. Wells of Malden, Walter S. Pember (substitute) of Walpole; M. Pauline Cushing of Wilbraham; Carrie B. Davis of Philadelphia, Pa.; Louisa M. Goulet of Florence; Louisa Houghton of Columbia, Dak.; Ethel Tassin of Washington, D. C.; Flora M. Bardwell (substitute) of Cambridge.

MONSON.

E. B. Lincoln has closed his cash meat market.

John Flynt's house is receiving a fresh coat of paint.

Gray's great 25-cent show will appear here next Tuesday.

Elmer V. Sterns of Spencer has purchased the Monson House.

The Young Ladies' Working Club met with Mrs. Ralph Clifford Monday afternoon.

The homestead of the estate of the late Mary A. Smith will be sold at auction May 16, at 12 m.

Fred Bradway's new house is up and enclosed, and will probably be ready for occupancy by the first of June.

The Windsor Club will probably have a match game of ball on Memorial Day, the losing side to pay for the supper.

The scholars of the Silver Street school celebrated Arbor Day by planting several shade trees about the school house.

Quite a number of Monson people went to Springfield last Friday evening to see Denman Thompson's "Old Homestead."

The straw season is nearly over, the manufacturers are running on short hours, and a large number of the sewers have gone home.

George L. Jenks has made arrangements to receive the score of all the league base ball games, and will give them at his store each evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Minor Noble gave a maple sugar party in honor of Miss Gertrude Johnson, who left for her home in Amherst, Tuesday.

The peanut vender who was reported frozen to death in the great snow storm was in town Saturday, and opened up his stand on Main street.

The Young Ladies' Working Club will give a "C" supper and sale next Tuesday evening. Ice cream, lemonade and flowers will be for sale, and all are invited.

There ought not to be so much rowdyism on Main street these evenings. A stop should be put to it, and the sooner it is done the better it will be for the public comfort.

Work is being pushed as fast as possible on the bridge near R. M. & T. Reynolds's mill, so as to relieve the public, who are put to a great inconvenience to go around by Bridge street.

The 2.30 p. m. train last Friday set fire to the woods in the rear of A. Squier & Son's lumber yard, for the second time in a week. This time the fire spread all through the woods and burned over 150 acres, partly destroying the timber. Serious damage might have been done if the fire had not been stopped where it was.

The base ball outlook for this season is not very promising, owing to the poor showing made by last year's team. There seems to be no enthusiasm, but there are several good players in town, and with proper management a good club could be formed, the only weak spot being the battery. A good battery could be secured from outside, and if the club did good work, the lovers of the game would not be slow in giving them financial support.

Academy Notes.

The written examinations were completed this week.

The Linophilian society will hold a public meeting on the 18th of June.

The last lecture of the academy course will be given by Dr. F. W. Ellis, subject, "Alcohol," at the academy this evening.

The academy base ball club will cross bats with the second nine of Wesleyan academy at Wilbraham to-morrow afternoon.

The hour of intermission at noon has been changed, and the school will commence at 2 o'clock, instead of 1.30 o'clock, as heretofore.

Personal.

Harry McMaster is visiting friends in town.

C. L. Moulton of East Brookfield was in town this week.

T. J. Keefe has charge of Jenks's branch clothing store in Wales this week.

Harry Holden of Boston was the guest of Rev. Ira A. Priest a few days this week.

Harry Chapin has purchased Alfonse Gaouette's bicycle and succeeded in mastering it.

George L. Keeney and family spent Sunday with Rev. P. J. Hawley of Stafford Springs, Ct.

Mrs. Oscar Keeney of Somerville, Ct., has been spending a few days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Cross.

Arba Squier returned from his extended California trip Wednesday, and says there are some nice things out there and some that are not so nice.

John Hewen has resigned his position as clerk at the Granite One Price Clothing House, and has accepted a similar one in the Boston & Norwich Clothing House. John has many friends here who wish him success in his new position.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The assessors' notices are posted, and they have commenced their rounds.

E. H. Baker and L. N. Gilbert have been chosen vice presidents of the Home Market Club of Boston.

There was a pleasing entertainment at the Convent Hall of the French Catholic society Monday evening.

P. H. Sagendorph and wife returned from their trip to California last Saturday, having had a most enjoyable trip.

The past few warm days thawed out the soda fountains of the local dealers, and most of them are in running order.

The French Protestant church is nearing completion, and it is expected the structure will be dedicated the first Sunday in June.

The annual filling in of Main street has begun. It is already much higher than the walk on the south side, as well as the cross walks.

William Walsh has secured a position as superintendent of a dye house in Hartland, Vt., and consequently his dye house here is closed.

Fire was discovered last Friday on the roof of Corser's foundry just in time to prevent a serious conflagration. As it was, nearly 10 feet of shingles were burned off.

There have been some changes and improvements made in the French Catholic church on Bank street, and doors have been put in leading from the street to the gallery.

The May supper at the Methodist vestry Wednesday evening was a successful one, and the musical and literary entertainment was excellent. They will net nearly $40 for the society.

The annual visit of Bishop Paddock will be made to Trinity Episcopal church May 10th. Services will be held in the Unitarian church at 7 30 p. m., and several persons will be confirmed.

James E Clark, Matthew Corkery, John W. Clark and William Nichols are delegates to attend the 11th annual convention of the Catholic Mutual Insurance Society in Springfield next Sunday.

O. W. Roberts has given up his office in Blood's drug store, and will hereafter have his office at his residence, corner of Church and High streets, with office hours at 8 a. m., and from 1 to 3 and 7 to 8 p. m.

It is rumored that the Otis Company is to remove the old tenement block corner of Park and Pleasant streets, opposite the site of the new Episcopal church, and erect some buildings there worthy of the location.

J. H. Storrs sold at auction last Friday 12 acres of land on North street to Barnes & Packard for $1925, two buildings on the same street to E. S. Ruggles for $800, and two tenement houses on High street for $1900.

Walter A. Wilcox has been appointed by the American Express Company to succeed Fred C. Blood, who has resigned, as agent at this place. The office of the company is in the rear of Blood's drug store, in the room formerly occupied by Dr. Roberts as an office.

At a meeting of those who were in favor of enforcing the laws, a committee was appointed to canvass the town to see how many would be willing to join the organization to enforce law and order, and a large number of our leading citizens have subscribed.

F. L. Bassett, the jeweler, has put in an elegant upright black walnut case 19 feet long, on the west side of his store, for the display of silver ware. The case is the work of Daniel Smith, who has a reputation second to none in these parts as a fine workman.

Maude Banks, who has always drawn good houses when she has been here, is booked for the Town Hall next Tuesday evening in "Her Evil Genius." The tickets were placed on sale at Mulvaney's store this morning, and those wishing to see her should secure their seats at once.

Rev. E. S. Huntress has accepted the call to the pastorate of the Congregational church at Ware Center, and commenced his work May 1st. He will move his family here in a short time. This society has adopted the envelope system of weekly offerings for the support of the pastor and other expenses.

Is there any law to prevent merchants from obstructing the sidewalk with their goods? If so, it has become a dead letter in Ware. One place on Main street was noted the past week where the space left for pedestrians was only 3 feet 3 inches in width, and at a point where thousands pass several times a day.

The new board of selectmen have commenced the good work of routing out illegal sellers of the ardent, and by their direction the officers raided the place known as the Ocean House, kept by Daniel O'Rourke. A small quantity of liquor was found and several drunken men on the premises, and although the proprietor reresisted, he was taken to the lock-up.

The Youth's Total Abstinence League has been formed among the young people of St. William's parish, with a pledge that the members will abstain from the use of all intoxicating liquors until they are twenty-one years of age. This is a grand move in the direction of temperance, as but few form the habit of drinking after they are twenty-one who have never touched it before.

J. A. Gould, who has superintended the carpenter work of the Otis Company's new mill the past year, has been engaged by the company as "boss" carpenter. He is evidently a man who understands his business, as it is said that in the new mill, where there are hundreds of looms, not one of them have so much as a piece of paper under them to make them level. It is also admitted that this is the best mill in New England.

We are pleased to note that the selectmen have not granted licenses to but about half the applicants. The following are the favored ones, with the prices to be paid: First class ($300) to J. W. Lawton & Co. and F. F. Gilmore; first and fourth class ($400), Patrick J. Crowe, O. F. McMahon, James O'Conner, Moses Sorel; fourth class ($200), Owen McArdle; third and fifth class ($250), Caryl Bros., Wm. J. Vulk; sixth class (druggist's), R. C. Blood, Richard B. Yale, W. A. DeMerritt.

At the base ball meeting in Music hall Wednesday evening Daniel Nolan, H. M. Clark and Patrick Sullivan were appointed a committee to provide a suitable ground, and John W. Clark, Daniel Nolan, Charles Martin, Peter Barnard, Patrick Sullivan and Fred Sharp were appointed a committee to select a nine to play with the Gilbertvilles next Saturday if arrangements can be made. If the outlook is favorable subscription papers will be circulated, an association formed and suitable grounds provided.

On Tuesday evening the young people of the East Congregational society held a social in the chapel parlors. A Scotch entertainment was given during the evening, when interesting papers were read by Miss Hyde and Mr. Hamilton, and poems from some of the favorite Scotch writers by Misses Winnie Eddy and Mary Eaton. A trio by Misses Dwight, Fenn and Eaton, the pleasing Scotch ballads by Mr. and Mrs. Perry, and instrumental selections by Miss Warner, were received with hearty applause. After the entertainment refreshments were served in the dining room by a number of the young men. The social was much enjoyed by all who attended.

POPE LEO XIII has issued a decree which causes no little consternation in the Emerald Isle. He tells the Irish people that the "plan of campaign," under which the tenant and not the landlord fixes the rental of farms, is contrary to Christian principle and must be relinquished. He also condemns the boycott, and instructs the clergy to refuse absolution to any one declining to renounce membership in the national league. The proclamation brings joy to Tory hearts, but is a blow to the Irish masses, whose only weapon of defense is thus taken from them.

The Mississippi river at Quincy, Ill., is 16 feet above low water mark. Large tracts of low land are overflowed, and in some places the river is eight miles wide. Fears are entertained that the high water mark of 1851 will be reached and much damage done.

LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, May 2, 1888.

On the basis of the report of the state survey commission, the finance committee has reported a bill providing in detail for the marking and preservation of town boundaries.

The water gas fight was begun in the Senate on Thursday, and by the narrow margin of 13 votes to 12 the very mild permissive bill of Senator Kimball of Suffolk was substituted for the adverse report of the committee on manufactures. A sharp fight occurred to-day on the bill to raise the capital of the Bay State Gas Company from $500,000. The contest was begun Thursday, but was then postponed to to-day. The capital was cut down to $2,500,000 by vote of 18 to 16.

By a bill reported from the banking committee on Thursday all savings banks are to be required to return to the savings bank commissioners a statement of the amount of their several deposits and the occupations of the depositors, including mechanics, laborers, operatives, house servants and the like, in addition to the reports as to religious and charitable organizations and guardians' and trust funds, which they are now compelled to make.

The committee on agriculture has reported against the incorporation of the New England Milk Producers' Union.

The labor committee has reported a bill to compel all fire departments to be provided with several sorts of life saving apparatus, to be used in saving people from tall buildings when on fire.

The committee on election laws reported in the Senate Friday a bill which, if enacted, will thoroughly revolutionize our methods of voting. It provides for the Australian system, so-called, somewhat modified. All ballots are to be printed and distributed by the state. They are to contain the names of all candidates nominated by any party which cast as high as 3 per cent of the vote at the previous election. The place inside the rail at voting places is to have several comaprtments so fixed that the voter can put his X against his candidates' names, without being seen by any one. The bill is very long and full of detailed provisions to secure perfect secrecy of voting, free from all intimidation or undue influence.

The committee also reported Friday a bill to regulate the construction of buildings, either public or private, where large numbers of people gather, either for work or as audiences. The penalties for violation of the law are heavy.

The House has engrossed the bill relating to legal weights and measures, after raising the weight of a bushel of peas or beans from 60 pounds to 62.

The Senate on Friday engrossed the high license bill, after defeating all of the amendments.

The petition of the Hartford and Connecticut Western Railroad for authority to extend its line to Springfield, which would involve building six miles in this state, has stirred up greatly the people of Southwestern Massachusetts, who are hoping for a direct connection with Boston by means of the New York and Massachusetts Railroad, which is now built for 40 miles east of the Poughkeepsie bridge, and they presented to the Senate and House on Monday and Tuesday strong remonstrances from their leading corporations and citizens against the granting of the petition.

One of the unopposed appropriations of the session is that of $400 for firing a salute at the coming celebration of the 250th anniversary of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company.

Senator Southworth of Suffolk proposes, in place of both the pending bills for a state house extension, a resolve for the appointment of a commission to consider the case and to report to the next Legislature not later than February 1.

The Order of the Iron Hall has found a friend in Senator Glines of Middlesex, who has the credit of defeating the first oleo bill, and he has moved to amend the fraternal insurance bill to allow the order to pay benefits to its members at the expiration of a fixed time.

It has been found that the American Board has no authority to hold meetings out of the state, though it has done so ever since it was organized. So the Legislature has admitted its petition for confirmation of its acts and for a change of charter, and to-day the desired bill was reported.

The chief event of Tuesday was the contest in the House over the oleomargarine bill, which forbids the coloring of imitation butter so as to resemble the genuine article. Speaker Noyes overruled the point of order which had been raised against it, and said that it was properly before the House. Then unfriendly amendments were offered, apparently in the hope of catching the friends of the bill napping. But they were not to be caught. The fight over the merits of the case occupied nearly all of the day. It was said that oleo was perfectly healthful; that it was the poor man's butter; that the bill was a blow at the farmers, for the manufacture of oleo had helped the butter market; that the sailors wanted the law as it is, for they prefer oleo to butter, as it keeps better on their voyages to the banks. But it was replied that not a single consumer of oleo opposed the bill, but only dealers; that 50 per cent of all the oleo made is sold fraudulently as butter, and that the manufacture has hurt the trade in butter. All that was asked was that oleo stand on its own merits and not try to imitate butter. All the amendments were defeated and the bill had an overwhelming majority.

The committee on public health reported in the Senate Wednesday a bill whose object is to preserve the health of the people, so far as it is likely to be affected by impure water, by increasing the scope of the present law by which the control of all the inland waters of the state are put under the oversight of the state board of health. The authorities of cities and towns are required to consult with the state board in regard to their water supplies, the board is to make a report to the Legislature every year, and it is to have power to spend money in making experiments.

By a large vote the House has defeated the bill drawn by Commissioner Merrill to codify the law relating to assessment insurance. He had struck out the provision that these companies could insure against sickness (but he did not touch the insurance of this sort practiced by the fraternal organizations) and the insurance committee presented startling facts to show what fraud is committed upon the public. But the House was against the committee and killed the bill after amending it so as to permit insurance against sickness.

A vote of 106 to 57 was given by the House Wednesday in favor of the bill to limit the hours of street car employes in Boston to 10 in 12, after amending it by 101 to 70 so that men might work extra time for extra pay.

Leading medical authorities indorse Ayer's Sarsaparilla as the best blood medicine.

LET ME SHOW YOU

what a saving I have made during the last year by being my own doctor. Last year I paid $96.25 for doctors and medicine; this year I paid $5 for six bottles of Sulphur Bitters, and they have kept health in my whole family. They are the best and purest medicine ever made.—Charles King, 60 Temple street, Boston, Mass.

MANY NEW IDEAS

in the home cure of diseases, accidents, and how to treat them, and many hints of value to the sick will be found in Dr. Kaufmann's great medical work; elegant illustrations. Send 3 2-cent stamps to A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass., and receive a copy free.

For dyspepsia or stomach derangements, no other remedy can be found so pleasant, prompt, and effective as Ayer's Cathartic Pills.

Some Things Learned by Experience.

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1.00 per bottle. cow7

I have been troubled with catarrh for the past ten years and have tried a number of remedies, but found no relief until I purchased a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. I consider it the most reliable preparation for catarrh and cold in the head.—Geo. E. Crandall, P. M., Quonochawntaug, R. I.

I was troubled with catarrh for seven years previous to commencing the use of Ely's Cream Balm, some five months ago. It has done for me what other so-called cures failed to do—cured me. The effect of the Balm seemed magical.—Clarence L. Huff, Biddeford, Me.

THE HANDSOMEST LADY IN PALMER

Remarked to a friend the other day that she knew Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs was a superior remedy, as it stopped her cough instantly when other cough remedies had no effect whatever. So to prove this and convince you of its merit, any druggist will give you a sample bottle free. Large size 50 cents and $1.

THE POPULATION OF PALMER

is about 6000, and we would say at least one-half are troubled with some affection of the throat and lungs, as those complaints, according to statistics, more numerous than others. We would advise all our readers not to neglect the opportunity to call on their druggist and get a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs. Trial size free. Large bottles 50 cents and $1. Sold by all druggists. (4w4)

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child she cried for Castoria,
When she was a Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

This remedy is becoming so well known and so popular as to need no special mention. All who have used Electric Bitters sing the same song of praise.—A purer medicine does not exist and it is guaranteed to do all that is claimed. Electric Bitters will cure all diseases of the Liver and Kidneys, will remove pimples, boils, salt rheum and other affections of impure blood.—Will drive Malaria from the system, prevent as well as cure all Malaria fevers.—For cure of headache, constipation and indigestion try Electric Bitters.—Entire satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.—Price 50 cts. and $1.00 per bottle at Legro & Lynde's drug store. 5

IS CONSUMPTION INCURABLE?

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says:

"Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an Incurable Consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle, and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jessie Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Dscovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 5

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by Legro & Lynde. 1y29

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, SS. PROBATE COURT—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Joseph King, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, greeting.—

Whereas, a certain instrument, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, has been presented to said Court, for Probate, by Thankful A. King of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to her, the executrix therein named, and that she may be exempt from giving a surety on her official bond as such executrix. You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Palmer, in said County of Hampden, on the second Wednesday of May next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the PALMER JOURNAL, published at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, WILLIAM S. SHURTLEFF, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fourth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

(3w3) SAMUEL B. SPOONER, REGISTER.

You May Remove

Those unsightly Blotches, Pimples and Sores by a faithful and persistent use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the best and most reliable alternative and blood-purifier ever discovered. "I was troubled for a long time with a humor which appeared on my face in and blotches. Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured me.—Charles H. Smith, North Craftsbury, Vt.

"Until recently," writes Alice E. Charles, of Bath, Me., "my face has been covered with pimples ever since I was fifteen years old. I took four bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and my skin became as fair as could be desired."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles $5.

SULPHUR BITTERS

THE BEST AND PUREST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

TRUTHS FOR THE SICK.

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those Pimples and Blotches which mar your beauty are caused by impure blood, and can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS.

DON'T GIVE UP!

What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle, soothing tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. Sulphur Bitters is NOT a cheap rum or poor whisky drink, to be taken by the glass, like other preparations, which stimulate only to destroy. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible headache? Why lay and toss on that bed of pain with rheumatism?

If you have failed to receive any benefit from other medicines or doctors, do not despair. Use Sulphur Bitters. They will cure you when all others fail. No person can remain long sick who uses SULPHUR BITTERS.

The dose is small—only a teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied. Get it of your druggist. Don't wait, get it at once. If you are suffering from Kidney Disease, and wish to live to old age, use Sulphur Bitters. They never fail to cure

SULPHUR BITTERS.

THE ONLY REMEDY
CONTAGIOUS BLOOD POISON.

Mr. D. B. Adams, Union, South Carolina, writes: "I was afflicted with a terrible case of blood poison for about thirteen months. I was treated by the best physicians, and used various kinds of remedies, but received no substantial relief. I finally tried the Swift Specific, and about four bottles cured me sound and well.

Col. B. H. Keiser, editor and proprietor of the Opelika, Ala., Times, under the date of August 3, 1887, writes: "When I was a young man, through indiscretion, I contracted a disease which has stuck to me for years. Some five or six years since I was troubled with pains, so as to make it difficult to walk. Having advertised the S. S. S., in my paper for several years, I concluded I would try it to see if there was any efficacy in the medicine. I commenced using it according to directions and used half a dozen bottles. I was once at a way station and, getting left, I walked the seven miles and have never felt any return of the old malady. After experiencing the good effects I must say I am satisfied with the result. I am sixty-eight years of age and I feel now like a young man and can go to the case when necessary and set up from six to seven thousand ems without any inconvenience. I send you this without any solicitation.

Mr. F. Woehl, 211 North Avenue, Chicago, under date of June 12, 1887, writes: "I deem it my duty to thank you for the cure I received from your excellent medicine. I contracted a severe case of blood poisoning about two years ago. Hearing of your medicine I went to a drug store, the proprietor of which persuaded me to buy a preparation of his own, which he said was a sure cure. I used six bottles of this stuff and grew worse all the time. At last I got disgusted and dispaired of a cure. I met a friend who told me that your medicine had cured him. I went to the same druggist again and demanded your medicine. He reluctantly sold me 12 bottles, and I am now perfectly cured. I write this for the benefit of sufferers, to prevent their being deceived by false representations. I thank you again for the benefit derived from your medicine."

Dr. J. N. Cheney, a prominent physician, residing in Ellaville, Schley County, Georgia, in a letter recounting the infallible success he has in curing contagious blood poisoning cases in his extensive practice, writes: "Those who know the almost inevitable, permanently dangerous effects of mercury will welcome your discovery of S. S. S. as a boon to humanity. The medical profession, always wary of proprietary medicines, is coming slowly, and in some cases secretly, to the use of S. S. S. in cases of blood disorder. Of course a medicine that cures poisoning in its worst form must purify the blood of every disorder."

MASON & HAMLIN

ORGANS. $22 TO $900. The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. GRAND AND UPRIGHT. Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinay claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON AND HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.

A circular containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

To The S. G. C.

The sweet girl graduate is here,
With teardrops in her eye;
She sadly bids her teachers, dear,
A well composed good-by.

She speaks to her companions, too;
She'll miss them, one and all.
She hopes that each life's task will do
And answer duties' call.

Sweet girl, may fortune's kindest touch
Rest lovingly on you,
And some day may you know as much
As now you think you do.

—Washington Critic.

THERE WAS SOME.

"Daniel," said the President softly, as he stood at a window of the White House in the gloaming and dreamily watched the dim outline of a Potomac dredger making sail down the river.

"What is it, sire?"

"Do you recollect the exact wording of that reference to second terms in my letter of acceptance?"

"Not precisely, sire, but it was to the effect that second terms were not beneficial to the Nation, and should not be sought by patriotic Presidents."

"H-m!"

A moment's silence fell upon the room, and then:

"Daniel."

"Yes, sire."

"Among the game in the White House larder is there any—any—crow?"

"I think there is, sire; there generally is."

"Have it made into a pie, Daniel."

"To-day?"

"Immediately."

And then silence came again, broken only as the President drummed softly on the window sill.

VAIN REGRETS.

"How is your son Jacob coming on?" asked Washington Jones of an Austin Israelite.

"Only so-so, Mishter Jones."

"Ain't he married yet?"

"No, not yet. My son Jacob was very particular."

"Can't he find a girl to suit him?"

"Vell, I dells you. He could have married dot Rebpecca Blumethal mit fifty dousand tollars more dan den years ago, and he vent pack on her."

"Dot was unfortunate."

"I should schmile. Choost calculate how much interest alone hash gone dot spout up dat fifty dousand tollars on in den years at chay only 6 per shent."—Texas Siftings.

A New War Story.—General Alexander told another story: At the battle of Manassas he was fighting near a farm-house, which he discovered to be the house of Mr. Lewis McCabe, a relative of his wife. Before the battle was over the house was literally riddled and the farm ruined. General Alexander never saw McCabe again until at Appomattox. While fighting there his artillery was near a farm-house, which he found out to be the house of Mr. McCabe. He met that gentleman a few moments later and he said: "My house at Manassas was ruined by battle and I left it and came two hundred miles away. I thought I was clear out of reach, but now this home is ruined." It is curious that the first and last battles of the war should be fought on Mr. McCabe's farm.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Christian Intelligencer does not believe that a body of Christian people performs its religious duties simply by gathering the regular congregation of families Sabbath after Sabbath. It says: "If that congregation should have no service for its own improvement and enjoyment next Sabbath morning, or for the Sabbaths of a month, but should be engaged insted in visiting the ungodly and non-church-going families around it to tell them the truth as it is in Jesus, and to pray for and with them in their own homes, it would be performing the work for which God has instituted it better than many churches are at present."

An old musician was engaged to furnish music at a country wedding which was to take place a number of miles from his house. The old darkey, with the box containing the fiddle under his arm, had almost reached his destination, when he was overtaken by his son, panting and blowing: "Daddy—you has—done—forgot de—de bow—ter—de fiddle." "Whar am it, niggag?" "At home, ob course." The trip back, however, was made in very good time, as the exasperated old negro chased the boy the whole distance, hitting an occasional whack at him with his cane.—Texas Siftings.

The following was recently turned in as a bona fide composition by an Indiana schoolboy: "The human body is made up of the head, the thorax, and the abdomen. The head contains the brains when there is any. The thorax contains the heart, lungs and diafram. The abdomen contains the bowels, of which there are five, A, E, I, O, U, and sometimes W and Y."

There has been prepared a table of royal salaries yearly paid in Europe, which the reader may do well to keep for reference in case of an offer of one of the positions. Here it is: Emperor of Russia, $8,250,000; sultan of Turkey, $6,000,000; emperor of Austria, $4,000,000; king of Prussia, $3,000,000; king of Italy, $2,400,000; queen of Belgium, $500,000.

"I won't make way for a fool!" cried an envious scribbler, on meeting Saphir in a narrow passage, where at first neither seemed disposed to give place. 'O! I will with pleasure," replied Saphir, stepping aside, bowing courteously.

"Well, Haynes, you have talked pretty freely. I wish you would tell us what are your views on heaven and hell. "I don't know," was the reply, with a keen twinkle, "I have a good many friends in both, and I don't want to to hurt anybody's feelings just now.

A locomotive engineer gives this direction for removing a cinder from the eye: "Let the injured eye alone, and rub the other one, and the cinder will be out in two minutes."

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one in warm weather, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

"I was all run down and unfit for business. I was induced to take a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it built me right up so that I was soon able to resume work. I recommend it to all who are afflicted." D. W. Brate, stone-cutter, No. 4 Martin St., Albany, N. Y.

MORE THAN
FORTY YEARS AGO
D. H. BRIGHAM & CO.
OF SPRINGFIELD, MASS.,

Introduced READY-MADE CLOTHING in Western Massachusetts, and have always led all competitors in this line. The taste displayed in all matters pertaining to Artistic Dress has compelled them to enlarge their stock from year to year to such an extent that a division of the business is necessary, consequently the D. H. BRIGHAM COMPANY continue the trade of Clothiers, Hatters and Outfitters on the first floor and basement of building, Nos. 397 and 401 Main street, while D. H. BRIGHAM & CO. occupy the second, third and fourth floors, exclusively, for the manufacture and sale of

Fur Goods, Top Garments and Suits

of the highest grade, for ladies, misses and young children. The entrance to their salesroom is through the store of the D. H. BRIGHAM CO., and up an easy flight of stairs. The

Ladies of New England

will please remember that hereafter we shall give our undivided attention to making and selling a stock unlike that usually kept at dress goods stores or any place outside the largest cities.

We Discover

The same demand for ladies', misses' and little girl's ready-made outfits that there is for men's and boys' suits, and the goods which we offer will not come into competition with those which are the handiwork of ordinary dress and cloak makers.

Journeyman Tailors

will be employed on our ladies' suits and top garments, and we guarantee artistic clothing, in all sizes, from 2 years up to 48 and 50, bust measure. Extra sizes a specialty.

You Can Afford

These elegant tailor-made goods, because our forty years' experience in making men's clothing enables us to supply fine goods for ladies and misses, in quality and style to suit, without extra cost.

About May 10th

We shall exhibit ladies', Misses' and children's white suits and wrappers and all other strictly summer goods. Our fur, repair and manufacturing rooms will be kept open through the summer. Garments and furs of all kinds stored and insured against fire, moths and carpet bugs.

Ladies, Call if You Can!

But if not, write for blank measures, and state your wants. Outfits of every kind sent to customers on approval and all letters of inquiry promptly answered.

Jack And I.

I was so tired of Jack, poor boy,
And Jack was tired of me;
Most longed for sweets will soonest cloy,
Fate had been kind, and we,
Two foolish spendthrift hearts, made waste
Of life's best gifts with eager haste.

Oh! tired we were. Time seems so long
When everything goes so well!
The walls of home rose grim and strong;
Like prisoners in a cell
We clanked our marriage chain, and pined
For freedom we had left behind.

Tired, tired of love and peace were we
Of every day's calm bliss!
We had no goal to win, since he
Was mine, and I was his;
And so we sighed in mute despair,
And wished each other any where.

But sorrow came one day—the pain
Of death's dark, awful fear;
Oh, then our hearts beat warm again;
Then each to each was dear.
It seemed that life could nothing lack,
While Jack had me and I had Jack.

CONQUERING A QUAKER.

"I would offer to help you, Edith, only I don't know what you mean to take," said Helena Marvin, looking into the room where her sister was packing.

"Take?" said Edith, hardly pausing to answer as she moved about the open trunks from closet and bureau. "Why, I'm going to take everything."

"Don't you mean to make any concessions?"

"Not a concession."

"You think it will be better to defy them?"

"Defy them! No indeed. What a horrible idea."

"Then what do you mean to do?"

"I mean to please them."

"But how can you possibly please them if you wear silk dresses and curl your hair?"

"I don't know. Perhaps I shan't; but I'm going to try. And I know I should never please anybody if I left my hair straight." And the pretty Cambridge belle thought to herself that it would be a pity, indeed, if she, who had always pleased everybody without trying, could not please Robert's relatives if she did try.

But this visit to Robert's relatives was naturally contemplated with even more than the usual trembling excitement of the young fiancee. For Robert's father, and mother, and sisters were all Quakers, with traditions, and beliefs, and customs, according to which they ought to contemplate with horror and distress this union of their only son and brother with a worldling. And such a worldling! Such a fascinating combination of laughing eyes, and merry lips, and curling hair, and tinkling bangles, and rustling long silk skirts, and coquettish bonnets, and bewildering laces, and ribbons, and little slippers. Oh, dear! Oh, dear! How they would hate her! She had not the slightest desire to defy or to horrify them. She was very anxious indeed to please them. But combined with this anxious desire to please was a quite unconscious, though equally firm, determination not to win their affection by concessions. Not as much as the bow of a slipper would she offer up on the shrine of devotion to Robert's relations. Worldly she was, worldly she would be sure to remain; and it was best that they should understand from the first that she was thoroughly addicted to silk, satin and lace whenever she could get it. But she had a faint hope that, once brought in contact with her worldliness, they would find it pleasanter than they thought. Why not? She had conquered Robert; why should she not conquer them? Robert had not fallen in love with her in spite of her airs and graces; he had fallen in love with the airs and graces themselves. He had often told her so. He had repeatedly pointed out the particular little curl over her adorable forehead that had first won his attention, and had assured her that it was a certain bit of lovely lace about her throat that had completed his subjugation. And that dear little curl was not only a curl, but it was a boughten curl, held in its place by hairpins, and as fictitiously worldly as a curl could possibly be. True, Robert was not exactly a Quaker; he was only a descendant of Quakers. He had not definitely renounced the world, although there clung to him, from the force of heredity, and training, and circumstances a certain grave demeanor and atmosphere of earnestness. He did not dance; he did not even want to dance; but he did not exactly disapprove of other people dancing, if anybody did choose to indulge in so foolish a caprice; and on the evening when he had been lured by a friend to one of the Cambridge "assemblies," and had met there his immediate, unquestionable, irresistible, worldly little fate, he had even felt suddenly a sort of impotent rage with himself at not being able to dance. True, he didn't want to dance any more than he ever did; but then, she wanted to dance, and how could he ever please her if he couldn't do exactly the things that she did? Still, he had pleased her, and with very little effort, for the quiet, earnest youth was tall and very handsome, and would graduate with honors; in consideration of which attractions his earnestness might easily be forgiven, even, indeed, if the earnestness itself had not a certain charm of its own as at least a novelty. So, if Robert had pleased her, and she had pleased Robert, unlike each other as they were, and everybody acknowledged that it was a perfect love-match on both sides, why might it not be possible that she would please Robert's relations, though not so much as a slipper-bow would she sacrifice from her pleasant worldliness to secure that much-to-be-desired result.

As it chanced, a test of her resolution in this respect was offered immediately. Mrs. Marvin and Edith had hardly been shown to their chamber after their arrival at the Longworth home, before Edith had opened her traveling-bag, and exclaimed in dismay: "Oh, dear! Oh, dear! Mamma, my slate pencil is broken to bits, and my crimps are all out of curl. Whatever shall I do? Oh, I know! Esther said she would be in the next room if I wanted anything."

In another minute she was tapping at Esther's door.

"I am sorry to trouble you, but my slate pencil is all broken to bits in my bag. Could you let me have one of yours?"

"Thee would like a slate-pencil?" said Robert's serene sister, with evident bewilderment.

"Yes, for my crimps, you know. They are all out of curl, and so tumbled that I can't possibly go down stairs looking so."

"But can thee not comb them out? I could lend thee a comb to comb them out."

"I could, of course, but you've no idea what a fright I am without my crimps. Robert never saw me with my hair straight, and I know he would hate to have his mother see me unless I was looking my very, very best. Of course, you know, I have another bang in my trunk." Edith made this frank confession with a wild instinct that it would be best for Robert's relatives to know the worst at once, so that any possible concessions to be made afterward, though she would not yet acknowledge the possibility of concessions, would strike them in the light of unexpected improvement, "but my trunk hasn't come; and so if you could lend me a pencil!"

"I—I am afraid I have no slate-pencil," faltered Esther.

"Well, a pipe would do; haven't you a pipe handle! just a common white pipe, such as the children have for soap bubbles, you know."

"If thee will wait a moment, I will see," said the discreet Esther.

Edith in the meantime made her way back to her own room and waited in suspense, while Esther went slowly down stairs, questioning her conscience, and yet very loth to disappoint the little witch who was depending upon her. She had made up her mind to be very tolerant of the worldlines of Robert's fiancee, but to be suddenly called upon to aid and abet her in it, was almost more than could reasonably be expected of her, even by Robert. And yet it would be so unfortunate to begin the visit with a family jar! She had a terrible consciousness that there was a pipe in the house,—Richard, her little nephew, had had it for soap bubbles only the week before—and to tell a lie, even a white lie, and permit herself to be unable to find it, was something more terrible to Esther's conscience than even conniving at a curl. As it happened, however, she really could not find it. Here was sufficient excuse for going back empty-handed, and yet, and yet,—when she came to the foot of the stairs, Esther, instead of going up, turned aside into the kitchen.

"Bridget, could thee spare a moment to go across to the corner grocery and get me a pipe,—a common white clay pipe?"

"A pipe, is it?" said the wondering Bridget.

"Yes, Bridget; a pipe; a pipe for blowing soap-bubbles," stammered Esther. "Thee knows, Bridget,—a pipe such as Richard had for his play."

"Yes, I know," said Bridget, wiping her hands on her apron, and then removing her apron. "And so it's soap bubbles they do be wantin' to blow already? Faith, I'll send them up a plate full for dinner."

"Edith has won her first battle," wrote Mrs. Marvin to her husband that evening, "and without a wound or a scar on either side. I only wish you had been here with your detective camera, to get an instantaneous picture of the two girls when Edith opened the door and Esther handed her the pipe."

As Edith had confidently expected, it was the first of a long series of victories over Robert's relations, which she gained, not by trampling down her prejudices under the high heels of her French slippers, but by quietly teaching them to like her just as she was. She had an infinite amount of the gracious tact which comes with a certain kind of aristocratic, high-bred worldliness, and she was at heart a most willingly affectionate and true-hearted girl. Had she been merely a worldling, the French slippers would not have fought for and conquered her enemies, but Robert's relations made the surprising discovery that a really sweet-hearted creature remains sweet even on high heels; and before a week was over Edith was the acknowledged ruler of the entire household.

It was even decided in family conclave that it would do to give her what, in the worldly world would be known as a "reception." They had no idea of doing this in looking forward to her visit. It was felt that it would be concession enough for them to consent to receive as visitor into the bosom of their own family the young woman who had disappointed their fondest hopes for the security of Robert's future. To have their friends to meet her, to see her in the full blaze of effrontry of long silk gown and perhaps even of diamonds, would be to advertise their shame, the disgrace of the entire family, in a way not to be contemplated for a moment. They would endure, but they would not publish to the world the fact of what they were called upon to endure.

And yet—and yet—at the end of a fortnight preparations were on hand for all their friends to come and see this wonderful Edith, with full knowledge of the part of the family that Edith would undoubtedly surpass in all her previous efforts on this occasion in the art of decoration. Edith, however, had her own plans. The evening before the solemn entertainment she slipped up-stairs, took off her bangs, brushed her hair down perfectly smooth and straight over her little ears, twisting it very plainly behind, and then drew from her trunk a little gown of pale gray cashmere, reaching hardly to her ankles, without a ruffle or a fold, except the fewest possible plaits at the waist, and absolutely guiltless of ornamentation of any kind. A tiny scarf of white illusion was crossed over her breast, and her contemplated toilet was complete. Nevertheless, she surveyed herself in the glass with evident dissatisfaction.

"Dear me, mamma, it isn't half so bad as I thought it would be. I meant to look like a fright, and after all it's rather effective. If I were dressed for private theatricals I should think myself immense. Oh, dear! suppose they should like me best this way after all!"

It was a sorrowful blow to her hopes on this trump card to find herself still exceedingly pretty. She was perfectly conscious of a certain piquant charm in her novel appearance that might undo her after all. Still she would run the risk.

She was a perfect little actress. If anything had been needed to effect Robert's complete subjugation, after his first vision of her loveliness at the Harvard assemblies, it was supplied when he saw her the week after in some private theatricals. She could appear to be a Quakeress just as effectually as she could act her more natural self in a very different world; and it was with face and accent and manner perfectly adapted to her new toilet that she quietly entered the parlor again after her escapade up-stairs, and said demurely to Robert's mother:

"Rachel, would thee like me to wear this gown to-morrow evening for thy friends?"

There was a subdued whistle of delight from the reconstructed Robert in the corner. But Robert's mother gave no sign.

"Thee must wear just what thee pleases, Edith. If it pleases thee better to wear thy gown of red silk—"

And the wise Edith understood human nature well enough to be sure that "Rachel" would not be altogether disappointed if her pretty future daughter-in-law should reconsider her toilet and reappear in the dainty gown she had been exhibiting for the past fortnight.

"And what does Samuel think?" Edith asked, passing on to stand before Robert's father.

"Samuel thinks," said the old gentleman, slyly, "that thee had better ask Robert."

"Oh, no, papa Samuel; that would not be any test at all; thee knows perfectly well that Robert likes me in anything," said Robert's fiancee, demurely.

"And so do I like thee in anything," said papa Samuel, with unexpected gallantry. "But I think I like thee best, Edith, in red. Thee knows we Quakers like to follow the way that is most simple and natural, and I think red is most natural for thee. I think thee must have been born in that red silk of thine. Thee is very sweet to me, my child, in this Quaker gray; but we quakers, thee knows, do not approve of theatricals, and I think to-night thee is trying to play a part. Thee acts it very prettily, Edith, but I advise thee to go back to nature and thy red gowns."

So the battle was won, and the result proved that Edith was quite able to conquer not only Robert's relations, but Robert's relations' friends. When, a year later, she came back to them again as a bride, there was but one thing left for her to conquer. Robert had prepared her for a possible visit from elderly friends, who might think it their duty to remonstrate with her, or with him, on this very worldly marriage, and it was, in truth, hardly a month before he ran up-stairs one afternoon, as she was dressing, with the announcement that the probable counsellors were taking off their overcoats in the hall.

She hesitated a moment, but her hesitation rose merely from a moment's consideration of whether she had any other gown in her wardrobe that would emphasize more distinctly her intention to adhere to her own traditions. She decided that the long trailing skirt of pale green cashmere, with its border of pale plush, and its sash of watered silk, was sufficiently worldly when one took into consideration the jewel that sparkled in the laces at her own throat, the dainty, lace-edged handkerchief, and the perfectly-groomed little curls over her forehead. She paused only to slip on one more bangle over her round wrist, and then, kissing her husband, floated down stairs.

Robert never knew exactly what she said or did to the old gentlemen in the parlor. He hung over the banisters, and caught the echoes of her silvery little laughs, and saw the maid carry tea into the parlor, and at the end of an hour descended the stairs himself, as the gentleman emerged from the doorway, determined to stand by Edith to the last if she happened to have had a hard time. He knew that some remonstrance would be quietly dealt out to himself, even during the brief vestibule episode of farewell. But, to his astonishment, as he stepped forward to help the old gentlemen with their overcoats, the one who was evidently spokesman for the party grasped his hand and said, heartily:

"Friend Robert, thee has married well."

Still another year later, and there lay on Edith's arm a little Edith, with lovely eyes, and very remarkable, highly-embroidered clothes.

"Do you think, Esther," said the young mother, anxiously, "that she is going to have curly hair?"

"Yes," said Esther, with a smile that was grimly pleasant, and yet pleasantly grim, "I think she will have curly hair. I know thee would find a way to curl it, though it be as straight as—as a pipestem." And Aunt Esther bent over to kiss the child.

"And you're glad it curls, Esther, you know you are," insisted baby's mamma.

"Yes, Esther, I am glad it curls. For since thee would be sure to curl it somehow, it is best that Dame Nature will have none of thy tricks and graces, but will bring up the child to please herself."—Alice Wellington Rollings, in Pittsburg Bulletin.

Looking Back.

I may live long, but some old days
Of dear, deep joy akin to pain—
Some suns that set on woodland ways
Will never rise on me again;
By shining sea, and glad, green shore,
That frolic waves run home to kiss,
Some words I heard that nevermore
Will thrill me with their mystic bliss.

O, love! still throbs your living heart—
You have not crossed death's sullen tide,
A deeper deep holds us apart;
We were more near if you had died—
If you had died in those old days
When light was on the shining sea.
And all the fragrant woodland ways
Were paths of hope for you and me.

Dead leaves are in those woodland ways—
Cold are the lips that used to kiss;
'Twere idle to recall those days,
Or sigh for all that vanished bliss!
Do you still wear your old-time grace
And charm new loves with ancient wiles?
Could I but watch your faithless face,
I'd know the meaning of your smiles.

OYSTERS AS FOOD.

Chemists say that a quart of oysters contains about the same quantity of actual nutritive substance as a quart of milk or a pound of very lean beef, or a pound and a half of fresh codfish or two-thirds of a pound of bread. But the uses of the nutrients vary; for instance, the lean meat and codfish are most flesh formers, consisting largely of protein, while the bread, with its starch, has but little of these, and serves the body as fuel and supplies it with heat and muscular energy. Oysters come nearer to milk than almost any other common food material, both in amount and proportions of nutrients. Their values for supplying the body with material to build up its parts, repair its wastes, and furnish it with heat and energy are pretty nearly the same.

But the cost of the flesh-forming material in oysters is very high, When they are twenty-five cents a quart, the protein that is contained in them costs $1.68 a pound, while the cost of protein in milk, at seven cents a quart, is 53 cents a pound; in salt cod-fish, 43 cents; in mackerel, 79; in wheat flour, 11; and in beef from 63 cents to $1.06. Therefore oysters are classed as delicacies rather than as staple food. But the demand for these delicacies is steadily increasing, and under the efforts of the shell fish commissioner of New York the supply of oysters will soon enormously increase within the waters controlled by that State.—Good Housekeeping.

HE HAD TO SERVE.

Judge Gray was hearing a case that called for a jury trial, and after the usual wrangling that always tries his patience the jury was secured and sworn. The judge settled back in his chair, thinking that the case was fairly started, when up jumped a little German who was sitting in one end of the jury box. "Shudge!" he exclaimed. "Well, what is it?" asked the judge, shortly. "Shudge, I t'ink I likes to go home." "You can't go; sit down!" "Shudge, I doan' t'ink I makes a good shuror." "You are the best on the panel. Sit down." "Well, shudge," and the fellow was getting desperate, "I doan' shpeak goot English." "You'll not have to speak any at all." "And, shudge, I can't make nodings oudt of vot dose fellows (indicating the attorneys) are talking aboudt." "That is no excuse. Neither can any one else. Sit down!"—Chicago Tribune.

An eastern United States Senator tells this about his little girl: He says that when his family had gathered for dinner little Elsie was too busy with her playthings to suspend, and her mother called her to come.

"'Yes, in a minute," was the response.

"'But we are all waiting,' said my wife, 'and your papa is waiting to ask the blessing.'

"She came in, climbed into her chair, folded her little hands demurely, bowed her head and said in a low voice: 'Let her go, Gallagher!'

"I am afraid," said the Senator, laughing, "that the blessing I invoked at my table that day was slightly incoherent."

The following is related of a popular divine in conversation with one of his parishioners who was fearfully addicted to profanity and at the same time one of those conceited fellows who are apt to allude to themselves as "plain, blunt, men." The latter concluded a speech with the shibboleth, adding, "and I call a spade a spade." The patient dominie responded: "I am glad you do, Mr. B——. I was afraid you would call it a d—d old shovel."

A new treatment for consumption which is attracting the attention of physicians is the injection of remedies directly into the lungs by the hypodermic syringe, the needle of which is passed through the walls of the chest. Some very encouraging cases are reported in which the improvement is so great as to justify one in speaking of them as cures. Carbolized iodine has produced the best results.

NEVER OWNED UP TO.—There are just half a dozen things that you can never get a lady to plead guilty of.

That she laces tight.

That her shoes are too small.

That she uses anything but baby powder.

That it takes her long to dress.

That she is fond of scandal.

That she cannot keep a secret.

Envious Young Man (speaking of favored rival)—"Yes; George is clever and handsome, but he is so abominably conceited." Sharp Young Lady—"But, Mr. Dumley, if you were handsome and clever, would you not be conceited?" (A few moments' reflection, followed by a total collapse of Dumley).—Harper's Bazar.

"And, Johnny, what particular pleasure do you deny yourself during Lent?" Johnny—"I've stopped putting pennies in the box for the heathen."—Life.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 11, 1888.

COL. MACKINTOSH of Holyoke is in favor of Lincoln for president. Thank Heaven some of the Massachusetts delegates are not wholly enamored of Blaine.

INDIANAPOLIS has a Young Men's Christian Association which refuses to admit colored people to membership. Nothing but a white Heaven will ever do for these particular Indianapolites.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH at Brooklyn, N. Y., has called Rev. Lyman Abbott, its temporary pastor since the death of Henry Ward Beecher, to the permanent pastorate of the church, and he will accept.

IT is announced by the New York Arcade Railroad Company that is has contracted with a syndicate of American and European capitalists for the immediate construction of an underground railway along Broadway.

AN application for a rehearing of the Bell telephone suit has been filed in the United States supreme court. The decision as to reopening the case, if made soon, will rest with Justice Lamer, who has never heard the case.

THIS is the time for the bringing forward of "favorite sons," and Republicans are improving the opportunity in the different states, in choosing their delegates to the national convention. But in the multitude of such favorites lies the opportunity for the dark horse,— or plumed knight?

"WE are to look more to the success of the party than for any candidate," said Col. Otis, at the Greenfield convention the other day. That is the sort of principle which buries parties, however. A party is no better than its candidates make it, but a candidate may be much better than his party.

THE Saturday half-holiday law passed by the New York Legislature last year has caused so much dissatisfaction in New York City that the present Legislature was induced to modify it by limiting the half-holiday to the Saturdays of June, July, August and September. Gov. Hill has vetoed the bill, however, and the law still stands.

CONSERVATISM has carried the day in the Methodist Episcopal general conference, and by a small majority it has been decided not to admit women as lay delegates. The clerical vote was 122 to 159, the lay vote 76 to 78, making a joint majority of only 39 against the proposition. The result is certainly encouraging to the friends of progress, and gives promise of success in the near future.

ACCORDING to the Philadelphia Times Mr. Blaine has notified his friends that if he is nominated at Chicago he will not decline, but the report lacks authenticity. Some of Mr. Blaine's friends seem bound to make him guilty of the grossest insincerity, and their assumption that of all the Republicans in the country only Mr. Blaine can be elected to the presidency is somewhat gratuitous, to say the least.

THAT was decidedly grim humor which prompted an eccentric Kentucky doctor to bequeath to one brother his right arm and hand, to another his left one, and to other relatives his eyes, nose, etc., as tokens of his appreciation of their tender interest in him during his last hours, though they had shunned him all through life. His estate of $12,000 is to go to public charities. Those relatives did not display their friendship quite early enough.

THE Republicans of the 11th district met at Greenfield Tuesday and elected John W. Wheeler of Orange and J. G. Mackintosh of Holyoke as delegates to the Chicago convention, with E. A. Buffington of Leominster and L. D. James of Williamsburg as alternates. The Democrats followed the Republicans at the same place the next day, and chose J. J. Sheehan of Fitchburg and W. M. Gaylord of Northampton to represent them at St. Louis, with W. S. Carson of Greenfield and J. J. Nugent of Holyoke as alternates.

IF the present Legislature passes the proposed ballot reform bill, it will accomplish the greatest measure of reform in election methods that the state has ever seen. To make it as easy for a poor man as for a rich one to run for office; to get rid of the vote distributor and "heeler," split tickets and stickers; to do away with packed caucuses; to insure for each voter an opportunity to prepare quietly and in seclusion, and free from all espionage and suggestion of workers, such a ballot as he chooses, and to remove the opportunity and suspicion of bribery,—such is the object of the new bill, and as such it must commend itself to every honest voter and patriotic citizen. It is estimated that it would cost the state $15,000 per annum to print and distribute the ballots,—a small sum for the inestimable benefits to be derived from the law. The Legislature has a rare opportunity to do a remarkably good thing by passing the bill, and we trust it will do so.

The Boston Young Men's Christian Union calls for subscriptions to its fourteenth annual "Country Week," a charity which has for its object to give summer vacations of about ten days' duration to the poor children of Boston, and, in certain cases, to adults. Since the inauguration of the work in 1875, 20,273 persons have enjoyed its privileges. The number sent out during the first season was 160; and there has been a steady increase from that time until last year, when 2433 children and 326 adults were recorded, the average expense for each visitor being $2.18 per week. Many towns in New England entertained these little visitors, and any of our readers who may desire to help in this good work by offering the hospitality of their country homes to one or more of the children can, by writing to the secretary at the above address, receive all needed information. Subscriptions for the season of 1888 are now being received, and should be sent to Wm. H. Baldwin, President Boston Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Boylston street, Boston.

Miss Effie Shaw has been substituting this week in the musical department at the state primary school.

The Odd Fellows and Masons are each considering the advisability of lighting their halls by electricity.

King Knox has been attending the May term of the superior court this week at Springfield, as grand juryman.

The remains of Mrs. Lucretia Van Deusen were conveyed to this place from Blackinton Monday for interment.

W. W. Converse is expending about $500 in the improvement of his house on the corner of Park and School streets.

George A. Griffin has finished the work of excavating for the foundation of the new high school building this week.

George Robinson attended the annual meeting of the Grand Council of the Royal Arcanum held at Boston Wednesday.

The annual spring planting at the state primary school is well under way, and some excellent crops are looked for next fall.

The diamond on the park, used by the base ball team, is soon to be improved, providing that the games are well patronized.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union held an important business meeting at the Second Congregational church Tuesday afternoon.

Charles A. LeGro will improve the appearance of his recently-purchased Converse avenue residence by the construction of a veranda and extension.

The committee appointed by the reading room association to nominate a list of officers will meet at the JOURNAL office to-morrow evening at 7 o'clock.

The Connecticut railroad commissioners passed over the New London Northern Railroad Wednesday night, after their tour of inspection in Connecticut.

James Burns, an old resident of the town, died of pneumonia at Palmer Center Tuesday at the age of 68. His funeral was held at his residence yesterday at 1 o'clock p. m.

A subscription paper will be circulated next week among the business men and lovers of base ball to obtain money with which to purchase new uniforms for the Palmers.

M. J. Dillon has been awarded the contract to do the masonry work for the new structures that are to be erected at C. L. Alexander's new brick yard at South Amherst.

About 60 acers of land at Blanchardville, lying both sides of the Quaboag river and formerly belonging to A. V. Blanchard & Co., will be sold at auction on the premises to-morrow.

A band of gypsies has been camping out this week at the foot of Mt. Dumplin. Two women have been industriously at work on the streets yesterday and to-day selling their wares.

The Betts Fencing Company is doing a rushing business at present, and plans are being made whereby the company may increase its capacity for turning out larger quantities of fencing.

George Wood of Monson has brought suit against the town for damages sustained by a fall on Commercial street some time ago. He says he is willing to adjust the matter for $4000.

The local district court furnished thirty-four appealed cases for the superior court which has been in session at Springfield this week. Thirty-two of the above number were liquor cases.

The derailment of the construction train from Springfield, between Warren and West Brookfield on the Boston & Albany road Sunday evening, caused a delay to all trains on the line for a time.

Principal Knox of the high school will speak on "Physiology and temperance," as taught under the present law, at the annual convention of the Hampden county teachers' association in Springfield next Friday.

The north track of the Boston & Albany Railroad over the bridge west of the union station was taken up last Sunday and the old timbers removed, preparatory to putting in the new iron work, all trains using the south track for the present.

Gray's Oriental 25 cent show did not exhibit Wednesday afternoon, the audience being too small, but gave a second-rate variety show in the evening. The dressing tent caught fire some way during the performance, and was burned down.

A large number of Palmer business men have been invited to visit Boston from the 14th to the 19th, "Merchants' week," when the wholesalers take special pains to entertain the retailers on the surrounding country. Reduced rates in the railroads and at hotels are furnished.

It was reported the latter part of last week that a family had moved to Duckville from a house in Springfield where small-pox was discovered the day they left, and the "selectmen of Duckville" received notice from a Springfield physician to look after the matter. The family, however, was finally found located in South Belchertown.

The 6.38 express train west on the Boston & Albany Railroad struck Mrs. Mary Mundell, a resident of Warren, between here and the latter place Sunday evening, resulting in almost instant death. The unfortunate woman was about 48 years of age and leaves no family. Her body, which was badly mutilated, was taken to Warren for interment.

Last Saturday was civil term at the district court, at which time the following entry was made: Cheeney Allen of Palmer vs H. D. Ayers of Monson, for an action of contract; Gardner for plaintiff, no appearance for defendant. The case of James Barry of Monson vs Lester C. Stebbins of Monson, for an action in tort, was heard and the judgment reserved until the next civil term.

A certain Palmer man who went away for a vacation not long since left his cat with a neighbor until he should return. He didn't call it much of a cat—just an ordinary, convenient-to-have-around, every-day feline—but when he returned after an absence of 13 weeks and was presented with a bill—"To board of cat thirteen weeks, $13,"—he began to think that he had considerable money invested in cat.

Chief Engineer Hitchcock of the fire district has been appointed forest fire warden, and has charge of all forest fires, as well as the task of finding the cause and punishing the offenders. At the fire Monday afternoon he experienced considerable difficulty in getting men enough to successfully fight the flames, many refusing to work when called upon to do so. It may interest many to know that at a forest fire the fire wardens have control of the fire apparatus and men, and that any citizen who is called upon to assist, and refuses, is liable to a fine of $10 for each offense.

A session of the probate court was held in this place Wednesday, and this business transacted:

Administration granted on the estates of—Jason Goulding, late of Springfield, Horace S. Newell, administrator; William S. Arms, late of Springfield, Mary E. Arms, administratrix; Elvira Giles, late of Palmer, John N. Lacey, administrator; Ellen P. Hoar, late of Springfield, James Hoar, administrator; Chloe Pease, late of Palmer, Nathan W. Pease, administrator.

Wills proved of—Patrick Coughlan, late of West Springfield, James J. O'Keefe, executor; Joseph King, late of Palmer, Thankful A. King, executrix.

Guardians appointed—Alonzo B. Root of William S. Arms of Springfield, minor; George A. Denison of John A. Denison of Springfield, minor; Oliver M. Hamilton of Beatrice Hamilton, minor.

Accounts rendered in the estates of—Polly Calkins, John Dixon, Gregory Nolan.

The ball game on the park last Saturday drew out a small audience, which saw the Palmers defeat the Homesteads of Springfield 8 to 7 in a loosely-played game at times on both sides. The Palmers had a lead of 6 to 1 at the eighth inning, when two wild throws let in four runs, and a passed ball by the catcher let in two more, the score then standing 7 to 6 against them. A timely bunching of hits in the last half of the ninth inning gave the home team two runs and the game. The new battery worked well, and with a little more practice together the team will be able to play a strong game. The score by innings:

| | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Palmers, | 0 | 1 | 1 | 1 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 2 | 2 | —8 |
| Homesteads, | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 6 | 0 | —7 |

A meeting in regard to the reading room was held in the vestry of the Congregational church Wednesday evening. Dr. O. P. Allen was chosen chairman and L. E. Chandler secretary. The committee previously appointed to draw up a constitution reported, and its work was accepted. The Palmer Reading Room Association was formed, and any person may become a member by the payment of $1 or more yearly. The officers are to be a president, two vice presidents, secretary and treasurer, and a board of 15 directors. Dr. W. H. Stowe, L. E. Moore, L. H. Gager, Rev. H. W. Pope, Rev. F. W. Betts, H. B. Knox and L. E. Chandler were appointed a committee to nominate a list of officers, look up the matter of location, and report at a meeting to be held next Monday evening at the district court room, and at which it is hoped there will be a large attendance.

The county commissioners came to Palmer at 9.42 this morning, and after viewing the Commercial street tunnel under the railroad tracks adjourned to the district court room for the hearing. A plan of the present street and the proposed changes was shown. In behalf of the town Lawyer Gardner spoke of the narrow and dangerous condition of the passageway under the tracks, and the benefits to be derived from the alterations suggested, and called Judge Robinson, E. Brown, C. B. Fisk, J. M. Converse, L. E. Moore, Dr. Holbrook, David Knox and W. N. Flynt, all of whom testified to the unsafe condition of the road and inability of high-loaded teams to pass under the tracks. H. C. Strong protested against the commissioners making an order which would throw any portion of the expense upon the town, and the hearing was adjourned. The board will render its decision later.

New Telegraph Office.

The United Lines Telegraph Company has decided to open an office in this village about the 15th inst., which information will gratify a large number of the business men of the place. The majority of those who have patronized the office of the Western Union company in years past have already pledged their support. Mrs. I. E. Boulton, who is now employed by the Western Union company at this place, will have the entire management of the new office, which will be located upstairs in Hatch's block.

Better Protection Wanted.

Editor Journal: — The fire on Monday evening plainly shows that the people in the outer parts of the fire district have but little hope of having their property saved by the fire department. A dwelling house opposite the park had been burning half an hour when six men came struggling away trying to draw the hook and ladder truck. If the roads were bad, these men would be so exhausted when they reached the fire they would be unable to render any effective service. This company needs a horse to aid them. The engine arrived an hour and a quarter after the flames burst out. When the first stream of water was ready to be thrown, the house was completely destroyed. It seems as if every part of the fire district is entitled to some way of giving a signal in case of a fire. We contribute our share to support the fire department, and we think it no more than fair that we have some benefit from it. W. A.

Death of an Old Resident.

Mrs. Lucia E. Strong, an old and esteemed resident of this village, died Monday afternoon at her residence on Main street, after a prolonged illness. The deceased came to Palmer from West Springfield in 1842, and began life as a teacher in the public school, which position she filled with efficiency. Among her pupils were Charles E. Dewey, Mrs. Laura E. Childs, W. A. Breckenridge, ex-Postmaster Knox and others. She was united in marriage to the late Chester Strong in 1846, Mr. Strong at that time being postmaster, an enterprising merchant and a careful business man, who did much toward building up this village. Strong's block was erected in 1883 by Mrs. Strong in honor of her husband's memory. She leaves a son, Lawyer H. C. Strong, and a sister, Mrs. H. S. Burleigh. The funeral took place at the Second Congregational church Wednesday afternoon, Revs. H. W. Pope officiating, assisted by Rev. Michael Burnham of Springfield and M. S. Howard of Wilbraham. Noticeable among the floral tributes were two pillows bearing the words "Mother" and "Friend," and two wreaths of wild flowers contributed by some colored women.

Mrs. Levina Whitney Converse.

We clip from the Needham Chronicle the following obituary notice of the late Mrs. Elisha Converse of this place:—

> Mrs. Levina (Whitney) Converse of Palmer died on Sunday, aged 84 years, and was brought to this town for burial in the Fuller family tomb in the old Needham burying ground, and according to her request the funeral services were performed in front of the tomb, Rev. John F. Gleason of the Congregational church officiating, and the choir of the church performed the musical service. There was an attendance of the family and friends from Palmer and Pawtucket, R. I., and the few remaining acquaintances of the deceased who knew her in her youth in Needham. Mrs. Converse was the daughter of Israel and Mary (Fuller) Whitney and she was a lineal descendant of Thomas and Annie Fuller of Dedham, early settlers of Needham, and conspicuous in its early history. She was the last of her generation and is the last person to be placed in the vault of the Fuller tomb which she had caused to be built in memory of her ancestors, and which bears the inscriptions of her immediate connections of the Fuller, Richards and Whitney families. Mrs. Converse has resided away from Needham since 1844 and was thrice married, her first husband being Stephen Utley of Wilbraham, and her second marriage was to Samuel Fuller of the same town. She was a sincere communicant of the Orthodox faith, and was prominent in the church, and in the work of the church in the town where she resided. She retained a strong affection for the place of her nativity where her father, Esquire Israel Whitney, was a prominent citizen, and while in vigorous health annually visited the old homestead and kept up the acquaintance with the Needham families. She had arranged for her burial here, and several years ago gave the instructions for it to old neighbors and natives of Needham. Possessed of ample means she provided liberally for the embellishment of the ancient cemetery, and the granite tomb erected by her is one of the substantial and conspicuous mural ornaments of this burial place for the dead. It is learned that she contributed $200 for the building of the new Congregational church in her native town, and in her late years has contributed to the charities in the town of Palmer. Her reputation for good works and the Christian virtues was a household word among her lifetime associates. The floral decorations were a sickle of laurel, roses and calla lilies, with a sheaf of fallen grain, and a sheaf of full ripened wheat is placed at the head of the vault where Mrs. Converse is entombed.

Personal.

J. W. Weeks and wife have returned from their Western trip.

Dr. E. E. Hill has been spending several days past at Boston.

James F. Fenton of the Converse House will spend Sunday at Boston.

Mrs. H. A. Clark of Springfield has been visiting her parents this week.

Harry L. Stockwell of Worcester spent Sunday in town with his parents.

Ross Gaylord of South Hadley Falls was in town Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Anna Fisherdick of South Hadley Falls spent Sunday with her parents.

Harry B. Willard of the Palmer Electric Company spent Sunday in Worcester.

H. P. Longley of Westboro, formerly a merchant here, was in town this week.

Mrs. L. M. Shaw has returned from a three-weeks' stay at Putnam Heights, Ct.

Mrs. C. K. Gamwell will return to-morrow from a two-weeks' stay at Franklin.

T. C. Cooney of Pittsfield was the guest of F. E. Hatch at the Converse House this week.

Mrs. E. L. Wallace of Brattleboro, Vt., was visiting friends here the first of this week.

Charles Hellyar of Warren was the guest of James F. Fenton at the Converse House this week.

Aaron King, a direct descendent of John King, the pioneer settler of Palmer, is here this week from Nashua, N. H.

Charles A. Gilchrist, a well-known Boston jewelry manufacturer, is the guest of Charles E. Fish of the New London Northern road.

Mrs. E. Parker of Putnam Heights, Ct., has been visiting in the village this week, and will hereafter make her home with Mrs. S. R. Hastings in the northern part of the town.

Four Fires.

A SMALL DWELLING HOUSE BURNED — AND THREE BAD FOREST FIRES.

Fire totally destroyed a small dwelling house on South Main street Monday evening, situated near the agricultural park and owned by Mrs. Helen Lyon of Taunton. The structive was unoccupied, but was controlled by A. J. Northrop, who held a mortgage upon the property, which he was having repaired at the time of the fire. The house was valued at $1100; insured in George W. Ely's agency for $800, which amount will not cover the loss. The fire department was out before the alarm was sounded, Chief Engineer Hitchcock trying unsuccessfully to ring one in, the apparatus failing to work properly, for some unknown reason. The continuous blowing of a locomotive's whistle at the union station aroused the whole neighborhood in short notice, and, as is usually the case, there was more help at the fire than was really needed. The steamer was taken out and a line of hose laid from the Tenneyville pond to the burning structure, but not in season to be of any use. The delay in the arrival of the steamer was due to the fact that the alarm would not ring, and the drivers of the teams engaged to haul the steamer supposed, as no alarm was rung, that the machine was not wanted.

An alarm was rung in from box 57 about 1 o'clock Monday afternoon for a forest fire which was raging quite fiercely on land owned by J. M. Converse, William Webster, Charles E. Dewey and John A. Squier, situated in the eastern part of the village. The fire department responded promptly, and with the aid of the villagers succeeded in subduing the flames after a long and hard fight with hoes, shovels and green boughs, but not until a large tract had been burned over, and much damage done.

Another alarm was rung in at 12.30 Tuesday for a fire in nearly the same locality, which was quickly extinguished by the firemen. Both fires were thought to have been set by boys, and Eddie Colgrove, Alfred Johnson and Frank Cook, all about 13 years of age, were before the district court charged with causing the fires. Their cases were continued until to-morrow, and all furnished bail.

An alarm from box 57 called out the department at 6.10 last evening, an employe of the wire mill reporting that the house of John Daley, near Mt. Dumplin, was on fire. The boys turned out promptly and found the northeast side of the mountain on fire, but not near the house. The flames were put out just on the highest peak after a hard fight, about 20 acres having been burned over.

THREE RIVERS.

Sumner Paine and family have moved to Valley Falls, R. I.

A base ball club has been organized with John F. Twiss as manager.

It was not a man that was killed in the bridge Wednesday night, but a dog.

The "Poetical Wedding" will be repeated at the Baptist church next Tuesday evening.

Miss Jennie Kendrick, formerly of this place, has been visiting friends here this week.

Miss Frances E. Eyers entertained a number of her friends at the parsonage, Tuesday, where they spent a very enjoyable evening.

W. O. Twogood has severed his connection with the Palmer mill as second-hand in the machine shop, and accepted a position in Webster.

Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Leach of Springfield spent Sunday among relatives here.

Academy Notes.

Samuel Stevens has sold his livery business to Thomas Nichols of Baldwinsville.

The academy base ball team will have practice grounds as soon as they can be secured.

The academy base ball nine were defeated by the second nine of Wesleyan academy last Saturday by a score of 17 to 7.

The last lecture of the course was given at the academy last Friday evening by Dr. F. W. Ellis on "alcohol," to a large audience. These lectures have been listened to with a great deal of interest, and have been very instructive.

Rev. F. S. Hatch will lecture at the academy Friday evening May 18th. Subject—"Sights in London." The lecture will be illustrated with stereopticon views, and the entire proceeds will be used to purchase a large stereopticon for the use of the academy. The price of admission will be 25 cents, and tickets may be secured at Keeney's drug store, or of any of the students.

Two Burglaries.

Quite a ripple of excitement was caused this morning by the report that burglars had broken into the depot and Frank Howe's meat market, all of which proved true. The burglars secured a bit stock and two chisels at Fred Bradway's new house, belonging to Julius Graves. At the depot they tried to force the door on the west side of the gent's waiting room, but being unsuccessful they broke a pane of glass out of the window on the east side, with no better success. Then the door on the east side was forced open by the use of chisels and priers. They secured nine cents out of the money drawer; there was a box in the same drawer with more money in it, but they did not see it. At Howe's meat market they obtained an entrance by bursting open the door. The safe was not locked and has never been since it was forced open by burglars eight years ago and $300 taken. This, it seems, was not found out, so a hole was drilled and filled with powder and the safe was blown to pieces, completely ruining it. There was only 20 cents in the safe, which was for some unknown reason not taken. The tools taken from Julius Graves were left at the market. From the job that was done on the safe it is evident the men knew their business and were experts at it.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The assessors report 94 new houses erected within a year, quite a village by itself.

The Boston Sunday train leaves Ware at 7.30 a. m., and on returning arrives at 4.35 p. m.

The Ware Cadet Band, A. G. Noble, leader, has been engaged to furnish music for Memorial Day.

Tickets for the Kneisel Quartette concert next Tuesday evening may be secured at Blood's drug store, to-morrow and until the concert.

The county commissioners are to give a hearing at 10 o'clock Tuesday, May 15, on the application for abatement of the Otis Company's taxes.

P. L. Keefe, Albert Weiss, E. P. Morse and Owen F. McMahon, were elected delegates to the congressional district convention at Greenfield.

David O'Rourke was fined $50 and costs for keeping a nuisance. Other charges were not pushed provided he would go out of the business or leave town.

It is reported that there were three ball games going on at the same time last Sunday, with the attendant crowds of spectators. Where were the police?

Subscription cards have been distributed this week to those who attend the Congregational church. It is hoped to raise $16,000 to repair and remodel the church edifice.

Eden Lodge, F. & A. M., is to have a sociable at Masonic Hall, for Masons and their families, next Thursday evening. They will also have a supper served at the Mansion House.

Rev. G. M. Steele, D. D., of Wilbraham, will preach at the Methodist church next Sunday evening at 6 o'clock, after which, in the absent of the presiding elder, he will hold the first quarterly conference.

Rev. James Boyle organized a Young Men's Total Abstinence Society last Sunday. He is doing what he can to limit the sale of intoxicating liquors, and some of the would-be rumsellers are evidently quite angry about it.

The subject of Rev. B. W. Pennock's discourse at the Unitarian church next Sunday morning will be "The Sabbath, and how it should be observed." The time of the evening service has been changed to 7 o'clock, instead of 6.30, as heretofore.

Dr. W. A. Belding of Bridgeport, Conn., and Nellie A. Dunham were married at the residence of the bride on High street Thursday afternoon by Rev. A. T. Perry. George W. Dunham was best man and Mabel O. Storrs bridesmaid.

Trinity Episcopal church held an interesting service last evening in the Unitarian church. Bishop Paddock was present and gave a sermon appropriate to Ascension day, after which seven persons were confirmed. The church was beautifully and artistically decorated with an abundance of flowers.

The Spencer Hook and Ladder Company took supper at the Mansion House last Saturday evening, of which, by special invitation, the Oregon Steamer Co. of Ware partook. The local firemen met the visitors as they came into the town, with the Cadet Band as an escort. After the supper they repaired to Firemen's Hall, where there were addresses, singing, etc., until a late hour.

The Law and Order League was organized Monday evening with the following officers: G. D. Utley, president; A. Weiss, vice president; O. M. Billings, secretary; J. B. Siley, treasurer; Elijah Hathaway, Dr. O. W. Barrett, Henry Fairbank and Fred E. Marsh, executive committee. From some reports made at the meeting it would seem there was need of something being done. It was stated that one evening last week a person stationed on the steps of a store on Main street counted 25 persons under the influence of liquor pass the door in a short time. Another case—a young man was seen lying in the ditch before seven o'clock in the morning, and men in all stages of drunkenness may be seen almost any time on the streets where the most saloons are located.

Patrick Collins, while under the influence of liquor Wednesday, went up on North street, among a crowd of workmen who were busy on the foundation of St. William's new church, and fired two shots out of a revolver, but whether he fired at any person or else discharged his weapon in the air, is unknown, as no one was hit. He used abusive language while in the act of discharging his revolver. He was arrested by Police Officer Fitzgerald, who removed him to the lock-up, and when searched the the revolver was found on his person, containing two empty shells, two full cartridges and an empty chamber. Collins was one of the men who applied to the selectmen for a liquor license previous to the first of May. His application was refused, and since then he has taken to drink.

LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, May 9, 1888.

The Senate had on Thursday its protracted debate on the bill to permit the manufacture of water gas, when the merits of the gas itself were more under discussion than in the debates on the petition of the Bay State Gas Company. The arguments pro and con were urged with much warmth, one side trying to show that water gas was dangerous to life, and the other maintaining that it was just as safe as ordinary gas if reasonable care was used. At any rate, it was much cheaper and just as good an illuminant. Finally the bill was engrossed by 19 to 12, after having been slightly amended. This makes it sure that the contest will be renewed in the House.

The lower branch had a long debate Wednesday and Thursday forenoon on the bill to provide auditors for probate courts. It was charged and admitted that it would bring in taxation much personal property which now escapes taxes, and its friends said there was a merit in it. Some of the younger lawyers, especially Mr. Griswold of Greenfield, who made an effective speech for it, supported the bill, but the older men were against them and the bill was killed, 38 to 103.

The Senate disposed of the bill for a state house extension on Friday by rejecting the substitute for a department building on the east, and also the resolve for a commission to sit during the recess and report to the next Legislature, and by adopting the bill which came from the House after amending it so that it is not mandatory on the governor and council to take the reservoir lot. They are not "authorized and directed" to take it, but merely "authorized" to do so. The cost of the proposed building for the reservoir lot is $600 000, and the cost of the land and the street improvements which will be necessary is estimated at $557,000.

The House had its last vote Friday on the high liquor license bill. Mr. Flynn of Boston proposed a substitute with no maximum fees, leaving it to the local authorities, but making the minimum as follows: first class, $500; second and third, $200; fourth class, $300; fifth class, $150; sixth class, $1. But the vote was 39 yes to 70 no, and after a sharp debate, in which the most of the opposition came from the Boston Democrats, the bill was ordered to a third reading by 72 to 33.

A large vote was given in the House against the bill to allow the gas commissioners to have oversight of the consolidation of gas and electric light companies.

The fight on the oleo bill in the House on Monday was sharp and obstinate, but the friends of the bill held well together. They opposed all amendments and stood firm by their position that all they wanted was to compel the sale of oleo for what it really is. They were not hostile to the article in itself, but they did object to its being sold as butter. Most prominent of the speakers for the bill were Messrs. Bottum of Northampton, Brigham of Marlboro and Smith of Athol. The leader of the opposition was Mr. Symonds of Salem. At the close of the debate a large majority was given for the bill, and it now awaits its fate in the Senate.

On the same day the reports were presented on the elevated roads schemes for Boston. They were all adverse, except that the Meigs charter is given an extention for two years. What he wants is some immunity from paying damages to the abuttors, so that he can go ahead. As the matter stands, the reports are a decided triumph for the West End street railway company, the monopolist of street car service in Boston. It is predicted that the Legislature will give Meigs what he wants.

The Iron Hall's amendment to the fraternal insurance bill was defeated Monday, but the fight for the order is not yet over, by any means.

The firemen of the state will be interested to their sorrow in hearing that an adverse report has been made on the petition of John E. Fitzgerald and thousands of others for an annual appropriation by the state of $10,000 for the relief of firemen who are injured while in the discharge of their duty. A substitute resolve will be moved, however.

Those two measures, the bill in relation to the employment of children, and the bill to forbid the horse car conductors and drivers being worked more than ten hours in twelve for a day's work, have both passed both branches.

The state house extension is not settled yet. The House will probably fight the bill authorizing the governor and council to take the reservoir lot behind the state house, which has been made permissive instead of mandatory, but the governor says he shall take the property, if he is authorized to do so.

By vote of 22 to 10 the Senate on Tuesday engrossed the House bill to limit the issue of liquor licenses to one for every thousand population, with an allowance of one for every 500 in Boston, because Boston has such a large floating population and so many strangers.

On Wednesday the House took up the high license liquor bill which had already passed the Senate. Mr. McEttrick of Boston moved to substitute a bill with a lower scale of fees, and he spoke at length in favor of it. He proposed $600 as the minimum fee for a first class license, instead of $1000 as provided by the bill, with the other classes graded accordingly. It was urged against the high license that in all places with less than 20,000 people, where there was not business enough to warrant paying the high fee, the result would be complete prohibition with a corresponding large increase of illegal sales. But the substitute had only the vote of 57 to 120, and then the bill was engrossed, 119 to 47.

The Senate has struck out "apples" from the bill to fix the legal weight of bushels of apples, beans and peas.

The Senate on Wednesday engrossed the House bill for a general law for safe deposit, loan and trust companies.

A bill has been reported under the act of Congress of 1887 to make the supreme court the final canvassing board in case of disputed elections to the electoral college. The governor and council are the canvassing board for state officers and senators, but it was felt that they might be partisan in a crisis, and an absolutely non-partisan board was wanted. LANDON.

The advertisements which come from D. H. Brigham & Co , of Springfield, this season, are particularly interesting reading. They ask the ladies to order suits, wraps and tailor made outfits now for future delivery, and suggest to the dressmakers of this vicinity the advantages of securing a good line of misses' and children's outfits from the Springfield store before it is closed for extension betterments.

If your blood is vitiated, cleanse it without delay by the use of Ayer's Sarsasarilla.

UGLY AND HATEFUL,

but I could not help it. Everything went wrong with me, and I thought I hadn't a friend in the world; dyspepsia caused this, and for months I couldn't eat anything, and just suffered in misery till I used Sulphur Bitters. Three bottles cured me.—D. Lewis, 22 Bowdoin-st., Boston, Mass.

FOR SIX CENTS

we will send Dr. Kaufmann's great medical work; 100 pages, colored plates from life. The most valuable adviser ever published. To any address on receipt of 3 2-cent stamps to pay postage. Address A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass.

I was troubled with catarrh and hay fever for 30 years. Have suffered a great deal. My eyes, ears and throat were greatly effected. Mr. Kinney, the druggist, induced me to try Ely's Cream Balm, and for the past two years have had very little trouble. I have lived in Webster, Mass., and in Rockville, Conn. Very resp'y, J. W. Pratt, Monson, Mass.

I have improved greatly since using Ely's Cream Balm for catarrh. I feel like a new man. It is a blessing to humanity.—John D. Farrell.

THE HANDSOMEST LADY IN PALMER

Remarked to a friend the other day that she knew Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs was a superior remedy, as it stopped her cough instantly when other cough remedies had no effect whatever. So to prove this and convince you of its merit, any druggist will give you a sample bottle free. Large size 50 cents and $1.

THE POPULATION OF PALMER

is about 6000, and we would say at least one-half are troubled with some affection of the throat and lungs, as those complaints, according to statistics, more numerous than others. We would advise all our readers not to neglect the opportunity to call on their druggist and get a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs. Trial size free. Large bottles 50 cents and $1. Sold by all druggists. (4w4)

DON'T EXPERIMENT.

You cannot afford to waste time in experimenting when your lungs are in danger. Consumption always seems, at first, only a cold. Do not permit any dealer to impose upon you with some cheap imitation of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, but be sure you get the genuine. Because he can make more profit he may tell you he has something just as good, or just the same. Don't be deceived, but insist upon getting Dr. King's New Discovery, which is guaranteed to give relief in all Throat, Lung and Chest affections. Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. Large bottles $1. 6

A SOUND LEGAL OPINION.

E. Bainbridge Munday, Esq., County Attorney, Clay County, Texas, says: "Have used Electric Bitters with most happy results. My brother also was very low with malarial fever and jaundice, but was cured by timely use of this medicine. Am satisfied Electric Bitters saved his life."

Mr. D. I. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, saying: He positively believes he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters.

This great remedy will ward off, as well as cure all malarial diseases, and for all kidney, liver and stomach disorders stands unequaled. Price 50c. and $1, at LeGro & Lynde's 6

DIED.

At Palmer, 7th, LUCIA E. STRONG, mother of Homer C. Strong.

O, softly waves the silver hair
  From off that aged brow!
That crown of glory, worn so long,
  A fitting crown is now.

Fold reverently the weary hands
  That toiled so long and well;
And, while your tears of sorrow fall,
  Yet sweet thanksgivings swell.

How bright she always made her home,
  It seemed as if the floor
Was always flicked with spots of sun,
  And barred with brightness o'er.

O, gently fold the weary hands
  That toiled so long and well;
The spirit rose to angel bands,
  When off earth's mantle fell.

She's safe within her Father's house,
  Where many mansions be;
O, pray that thus such rest may come
  Dear heart, to thee and me!

WHAT A CHANGE.

D. H. Brigham began the Ready-Made Clothing business in Springfield more than 40 years ago, and it took him a score of years to gain a foothold.

It is now about a month since we (D. H. Brigham & Co.) announced in these columns that our time henceforth would be devoted to the manufacture and sale of ladies', misses' and girls' complete outfits of the higher grades not to be found in dry goods stores, yet we are already compelled to enlarge our present quarters and also to put in a passenger elevator so as to use three floors for the display and sale of ladies', misses' and girls' outfits.

Before doing this we must dispose of our entire stock now on hand, and that at the earliest moment possible to make room for masons and carpenters.

90 days' business must be done in 30.

We have bought these elegant goods at prices enabling us to place them within the reach of all. In many cases the prices will be less than the original cost of the material. We have everything from a fine wash dress to the elaborately made silks, and in prices from $5.00 to $75.00, also wraps from $7.50 to $60.00.

We are crowded with customers from far and near, with too little room for the successful display of our hot weather goods, although we show a magnificent assortment suitable for the season. Dress makers from all the adjoining towns after a careful examination pronounce our stock superb, our styles faultless, our finish and prices beyond competition.

JOURNEYMEN TAILORS are employed on our ladies' suits and top garments, and we guarantee artistic outfits in all sizes from 2 years up to 40 and 50 bust measures. This is the opportunity of a lifetime. Ladies', misses' and girls' outfits complete at maker's wholesale prices, from a stock never equaled outside of the great cities.

Within a month we have bought the entire stock of the best New York manufacturers of misses' and girl's costumes, including their Paris models. For elegant workmanship and quality of material they cannot be matched. This stock includes besides the best line of seasonable jackets, newmarkets and summer cloaks for misses and little girls, the richest dresses for the same ever shown in this city. Dress makers in providing for children's wear and parents also will be able to get perfect satisfaction and save themselves untold worry and delay by selecting from this stock. White suits for all ages will be put on sale as soon as room will allow. Early selections can be made for delivery at vacation season at manufacturers' wholesale price. Our misses' and childrens' lawn tennis suits are handsome and cheap.

Farmers, Please Notice.

Why is it so many farmers trade with A. F. NILES & SON? You will hear a great many ask. The reasons are these: They can get more for their produce there than they can anywhere else, no matter whether it is butter, eggs, chickens, fowls, potatoes, beef, veal or almost anything else they raise, and then they can buy almost everything in the eatable line there. In their meat department you will find everything pertaining to a first class market, all kinds of early vegetables in their seasons. Their grocery department is the finest one in the city, and everything in its line can be found at its lowest prices. Their fish department contains everything pertaining to that line, both salt and fresh. So you see by trading with them you can get almost everything, and all under one roof. A good chance to hitch your horses, and away from the cars. They do the largest business in their lines of any firm in Springfield, so you will readily see that, handling so many goods, they don't have time to get stale. Now, when you come to Springfield, call and see us, get our prices, examine our goods (as we have men for that business alone) whether you want to buy or not. If it is so you cannot come, send your orders or goods by some one else, and we will do just as well by you as though you came. If you take the Springfield Republican you will generally see our advertisements on the first page, at the top of the column next to the last one. It will pay you to read them. Remember the place. A. F. NILES & SON, 128, 130, 132 MAIN STREET, SPRINGFIELD.

Any reasonable orders delivered free at any railroad depot within fifty miles of Springfield. (4w6)

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE AT AUCTION.—Will be sold at Public Auction, on Tuesday, May 22, 1888, at 10 o'clock a. m., on the premises, the farm and buildings thereon, together with personal property, belonging to the estate of Anna F. Chandler.

Said place is located in the town of Monson, Mass., on the corner of Chestnut street and Tobey Avenue, being what is known as the old "Tobey Homestead," consisting of about 30 acres, divided into mowing pasturage and wood lot, with a never failing spring of pure water running through pipes to the house and barn.

Also a good water privilege running directly through the place, with dam on pond capable of watering the land and feeding a water wheel of from six to 10 horse power.

Nature has endowed this place so as to make it the most desirable location for a mansion or summer house to be found in this vicinity. The "site" commands a view from the extreme south to the north of Palmer, taking in the Quaboag river branch for five miles. The water privilege will furnish abundant pure water for house, fountains, etc., and in addition will furnish sufficient power to run a small factory.

Only 10 or 15 minutes' walk from depot and post office. Eventually the place will be valuable for building lots. Can be examined one week before date of sale.

Have You Heard

What Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has done and is doing for thousands in the cure of Coughs, Colds, Pneumonia, Bronchitis and even Consumption? For this class of complaints, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral stands far ahead of all other specifics.

George W. Dick, of Newton, Mass., says: "Two years ago I took a severe cold, which, being neglected, was followed by lost flesh rapidly, had night sweats, and was soon confined to my bed. A friend advised the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I began to take this medicine and before finishing the first bottle was able to sit up. Four bottles effected a perfect cure."

SULPHUR BITTERS

THE BEST AND PUREST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

TRUTHS FOR THE SICK.

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those Pimples and Blotches which mar your beauty are caused by impure blood, and can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS.

What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle, soothing tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. Sulphur Bitters is NOT a cheap rum or poor whisky drink, to be taken by the glass, like other preparations, which stimulate only to destroy. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible headache? Why lay and toss on that bed of pain with rheumatism?

DON'T GIVE UP!

If you have failed to receive any benefit from other medicines or doctors, do not despair. Use Sulphur Bitters. They will cure you when all others fail. No person can remain long sick who uses SULPHUR BITTERS.

The dose is small—only a teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied. Get it of your druggist. Don't wait, get it at once. If you are suffering from Kidney Disease, and wish to live to old age, use Sulphur Bitters. They never fail to cure.

SULPHUR BITTERS.

THE ONLY REMEDY
CONTAGIOUS BLOOD POISON.

Mr. D. B. Adams, Union, South Carolina, writes: "I was afflicted with a terrible case of blood poison for about thirteen months. I was treated by the best physicians, and used various kinds of remedies, but received no substantial relief. I finally tried the Swift Specific, and about four bottles cured me sound and well.

Col. B. H. Keiser, editor and proprietor of the Opelika, Ala., Times, under the date of August 3, 1887, writes: "When I was a young man, through indiscretion, I contracted a disease which has stuck to me for years. Some five or six years since I was troubled with pains, so as to make it difficult to walk. Having advertised the S. S. S., in my paper for several years, I concluded I would try it to see if there was any efficacy in the medicine. I commenced using it according to directions and used half a dozen bottles. I was once at a way station and, getting left, I walked the seven miles and have never felt any return of the old malady. After experiencing the good effects I must say I am satisfied with the result. I am sixty-eight years of age and I feel now like a young man and can go to the case when necessary and set up from six to seven thousand ems without any inconvenience. I send you this without any solicitation.

Mr. F. Woehl, 211 North Avenue, Chicago, under date of June 12, 1887, writes: "I deem it my duty to thank you for the cure I received from your excellent medicine. I contracted a severe case of blood poisoning about two years ago. Hearing of your medicine I went to a drug store, the proprietor of which persuaded me to buy a preparation of his own, which he said was a sure cure. I used six bottles of this stuff and grew worse all the time. At last I got disgusted and dispaired of a cure. I met a friend who told me that your medicine had cured him. I went to the same druggist again and demanded your medicine. He reluctantly sold me 12 bottles, and I am now perfectly cured. I write this for the benefit of sufferers, to prevent their being deceived by false representations. I thank you again for the benefit derived from your medicine."

Dr. J. N. Cheney, a prominent physician, residing in Ellaville, Schley County, Georgia, in a letter recounting the infallible success he has in curing contagious blood poisoning cases in his extensive practice, writes: "Those who know the almost inevitable, permanently dangerous effects of mercury will welcome your discovery of S. S. S. as a boon to humanity. The medical profession, always wary of proprietary medicines, is coming slowly, and in some cases secretly, to the use of S. S. S. in cases of blood disorder. Of course a medicine that cures poisoning in its worst form must purify the blood of every disorder."

Heart's-Ease.

"How kind it was," she said, to lay
Knots of fresh heart's-ease on her breast—
The flower of flowers she loved the best—
Now that her life has passed away
Into the life of perfect rest.

The story of her brief, bright years
Seems written in the blossom's face;
Persistent sunshine, buoyant grace,
Where not a fleck of gloom or tears
Could leave the slightest shadow-trace.

So, through her spring-time, dewy glad
The velvet leaves of character
Unfolded with no marring blur;
She doubled every joy I had,
Because the joy was shared with her.

Whatever gust of trial came,
My soul would rouse itself and take
New courage on, intent to make
Smooth passage for the fragile frame,
Courting the sunshine for her sake.

I could not bear that she should link
Sad memories from this life of ours;
And while I watched her waning powers
I led her smiling to the brink
Of Heaven along a path of flowers.

My heart's-ease!—(and the quiet flow
Of tears came faster than before)—
"Gone henceward to the farther shore!
And yet it breaks my heart to know
She needs my love and care no more."

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

A maiden named Blanche Brown-Prevaux,
Wished to enter the College De Veaux,
So she wrote for admission, asked the price of tuition,
And how long before she could geaux.
"This school is for boys, dontcher kneaux?"
Wrote the master of College De Veaux,
And the maiden replied that "Pa and ma do decide that They'll send the next boy that they greaux."

A gentleman with hayseed in his hair entered the street car. The only vacant seat was surrounded by ladies. He hesitated a moment, as if in doubt about the propriety of taking it, and then sat down. Presently two ladies to the right of him came to their street and left the car. The countryman moved uneasily and perspired. Soon after three ladies to the left of him arose to leave, when the countryman sprang to his feet and, bowing awkwardly, blurted out: "See here, ladies, sit right down ag'in. If my presence is not agreeable I'll do the gittin' off," and he suited his actions to his words.—Detroit Free Press.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; but is often lost owing to the poverty and impurity of the blood and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion and giving strength to the whole system.

"I had been troubled with pimples on my lower limbs, loss of sleep and appetite, and in fact was generally run down. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla the pimples disappeared, my appetite was renewed, and I feel better in every respect." P. DEVLIN, S. E. corner 10th and Buttonwood Sts., Philadelphia.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon I felt as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

The Country Editor's Wife.

You have heard of the county editor's life
With its care and worry and doubt,
Of the shabby-genteel of his seedy clothes,
Of his diamond pins, and his calm repose,
His happiness, money and gout.

But say, have you heard of the editor's wife?
Of that silent copartner, who,
With a blending of sentiment, beauty and skill,
With temperate knowledge, with tact and will,
The whole of his labor can do?

It is she who embroiders the garments worn
By the editor's hard old chair,
Now dressed with cushions, soft and neat,
And trimmed up with tidies and ribbons sweet,
Which once were so poor and bare.

If the editor's sick, or away, or behind,
In need of more hands and more haste,
She directs his wrappers so they can be read,
And writes his leaders right out of her head,
And willingly makes his paste.

She reads the ads. with the editor,
Just to find what each has paid.
"But the column ad. of the jeweler, there,"
So he says, "and the harness and human hair,
Must be taken out in trade!"

She wears the corsets he gets for ads.,
And rattles his sewing machine;
She uses the butter, and eggs, and things,
The country subscriber so faithfully brings,
With a cheerfulness seldom seen.

But her life so full of merry delight,
Has one dark cloud, alas!
Though she shares his ticket to circus and play,
To lecture, and negro minstrels gay,
She can't use his railroad pass!

When time hangs heavy on his hands,
She beguiles the hours away,
With joke and laughter, music and song,
And pleasant talk, and thus ripples along
The whole of each leisure day.

Oh, who would exchange this sweet content,
This simple and trusting life,
For that of a queen of royal birth?
For the happiest woman on all the earth
Is the country editor's wife!

SPELLING PEWS IN THE MEETING HOUSE.

A STORY OF LONG AGO, FOUNDED ON FACTS.

Mrs. Hale laid the stocking across her knee, and placing the mate above it slowly rolled the two together and turned one edge down over the whole, making a neat bundle, which she laid in the chair beside her.

Two, four, six pairs. This completed the week's mending. She drew a sigh of relief, and no wonder, for her pile of weekly mending was very large, and what good housewife can help that satisfied feeling which comes with the last stitch of mending for that week.

The sighs are of a different kind—a deeper, troubled sigh when it is left from week to week. It reminds one of the downward course of a young life, when the first false step is taken, the first infringement on forbidden grounds (just as the first garment is left in the work basket over a Sabbath), the rest comes easier, and it is only by a desperate struggle that the old life and ways can be resumed.

Mrs. Hale lay back in her chair and closed her eyes, sweet blue eyes that had never lost their tenderness for her husband. She does not hear his footsteps, and it is not until he lays both hands on her silver hair and gently strokes it that she realizes she is not alone with her thoughts. "Are you tired, little wife? You look pale. We must try and make your work lighter. Now I am strong and hearty and can sing the good old song:

'A farmer's life's the life for me,
I own I love it dearly.'

"But we must not forget that you are not robust like the boys and myself," and stooping down he pressed a kiss tenderly on her forehead.

She looked up pleasantly and reaching out to clasp his hand, said:

"We've had our share of trouble and hard work, and you've always tried to give me the easy end of the yoke. It is not hard work that pales my cheek to-day, Aaron. It is the thought of this afternoon at the church. A mother with four bright, manly sons can not hear of such freedom with liquor without a shudder; to know that after each pew in the church is sold there must be liquor drank, is to know that nearly every man will be like a beast before night, and this in the house of God. Oh, my husband, it is dreadful. Can't you do something to stop it?"

"It has been in my mind these many months," said the husband, "and I have determined to-day to take a stand, praying that some good may come of it."

"God speed you in your undertaking," said the wife and mother.

With these words ringing in his ears he drove away, saying to himself—

"A form more fair or a face more sweet, Ne'er hath it been my lot to meet."

In this gray-haired couple could be seen that noble bond of love that made them speak of their life as though it was a common interest. It was ever "we" and "our," never that lordly "I" and "mine," as though the other had no part in it. Hand in hand they had journeyed through life, with no secrets, trusting faithfully each other, and each feeling the other to be an equal.

A lively scene met Mr. Hale's gaze as he came up to the church door. The selling of the pews had been looked forward to for a long time. They were the old-fashioned square pews, with seats running all round. On the top and circling the whole was a moulding or capping. It was planned that when a pew was struck off to a certain person that man should invite the crowd to retire to Tompkins's across the street, to be treated to grog, after which the capping was sawed apart and the door was swung open to the owner. It was just as Mrs. Hale said, before night every man was in a wide awake state, or lay stupidly in his pew, waiting for "something to turn up."

The hot blood mounted up to Mr. Hale's face, as Judge Banks, an airy, pompous young lawyer, lax in principle and character, drawled out a few remarks just to hear himself talk, on "Cause and Effect."

"I'll say one thing," said the good farmer. "It's pretty evident what the cause and effect of all this want of principle will be. Just look at that bright, intelligent, blue-eyed Will Snow. He is too tipsy to think of his widowed mother whom he should be training brain and muscle to help. You have only to smell his breath to learn the cause. Can't you guess the effect?"

Judge B. moved a little uneasily, and said, "Pooh, pooh," just as the auctioneer's "rap, rap," sounded, and the sale went on.

Mr. Hale's time had come. It was a nice central pew and he bid a good round sum.

"Going, going, gone—sold to Aaron Hale. Now, Hale, it's your turn to treat. Give a good hearty one, for you've one of the best pews."

"Yes, sir," said Mr. Hale, "I know I have, but I don't mean to dedicate in it any such way as the others have."

A voice from the loafers called out, "You won't have the door open till you treat."

He felt that his time had come to take his stand, and drawing himself self up at full length spoke out strong and clear: "I shall not treat to-night. You have drank too much already. There is hardly a man here but should be ashamed to go home to his wife and children. It's a burning shame that you do not carry as sweet and pure a breath to your wives and daughters as you find in them. What would one of these young men say if he could come suddenly into the presence of the girl he was going to marry and find her drunk, silly and noisy as you are now? She has as good a right to drink as you have, and yet do you think you would be proud to take such a woman for your wife? Just look at it. Some of you are intending soon to take noble, unselfish girls into your hearts and homes. Can you expect them to proudly promise to love and honor you until you prove yourself worthy such honor and love? I can not treat. I shall expect to find my pew sawed and door swinging on Sabbath morn."

He passed down the aisle and out of the church, and was soon on his way home.

Sabbath morning came; the bell pealed out clear on the morning air. People came early; the women were anxious to know the location of their new pews.

The white-haired pastor kept a keen eye on the singers and orchestra in the high gallery opposite.

The Hale pew, an object of considerable interest, was empty. No carpenter had dared disturb the capping around the entire top, but a flight of stairs had been placed in the aisle and reaching to the top of the door, while another flight led to the pew. A few young men who favored the step Mr. Hale had taken, rode after him the day of the sale and told him their plans.

The orchestra was in full tune. Double bass, first and second violins swelled the strains, and the choir bust into "Open the Gates," that grand old anthem, just as Mr. Hale, followed by his wife and four grown up sons, walked up the aisle. Every eye in the house was upon them, but they took no notice. Reaching the pew Aaron Hale drew himself to his full length, which was six feet, and walked proudly up one side and down the other, then turning, gave his hand to his wife. She grasped it firmly and came down by his side in safety.

Just as the family were seated the choir reached the duet, and the sweet voices of Ruth and Hester Fisher were filled with wonderful pleading and pathos as they sang the words:

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee:
"Because he trusteth in thee, thou wilt keep him in perfect peace; in perfect peace."

As their tones died away there were many tearful eyes. All knew that the two young girls were some time to be brides, and that their song came from their hearts. No wonder that the two oldest Hale boys raised their eyes to the sweet singers. Every one was touched. Even the obstinate ones, the hard drinkers said, "It shall be peace, not war."

The pastor poured forth a touching prayer for his people. While he was praying, Jim Wilkins, a bitter opponent of temperance, slipped out of church, and when the pastor said "Amen," came boldly up to the Hale pew and without a word or a look, set his saw into the tiny bit of moulding that had caused so much trouble. It was but the work of a moment; then with more dignity than he had ever before, he threw open the door and stepping in grasped Mr. Hale by the hand; turning, he gathered both pairs of stairs on his shoulders and walked out of church.

Moving nearer her husband and placing her hand in his, they commenced to sing:

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The choir and orchestra joined the congregation, and a grand chorus went up from the house of God.

It was the turning point in the lives of the young people. The old life had given place to a nobler, better one.—Newburyport Herald.

There is a floor walker in one of the large dry goods stores in this city whose great toes point toward each other in the most friendly manner. "What will you have, madam!" said he to an Irish woman who was looking hopelessly around. "Calico." "Walk this way." "Walk that way, is it sure! Sure, I'd have ye know, sur, that me legs is not built that way, sur, and I couldn't walk that way if you'd give me the whole sture, sur."—Hartford Times.

"Oh, I'm so glad!" exclaimed Miss Gushington, looking up from the paper; "they are going to appropriate, oh, ever so much money on coast defenses. You remember the last time we went tobogganning I tore my costume into ribbons by running off the slide."—Boston Transcript.

The love of Christ is like the blue sky, into which you may see clearly, but the real vastness of which you cannot measure. It is like the sea, into whose bosom you can look a little way, but its depths are unfathomable.

Farmer Eno On Church Singin'.

I've been a listnin' to the birds
An' hummin' of the bees,
A blendin' in the chorus of
The wind among the trees.
The world seemed like a meetin' house,
The congregation there
All jinin' in the joyful hymns
That 'peared to fill the air.

The Lord's ole-fashioned meetin' house;
Ole-fashioned hymns of praise,
The world has sung an' sung unchanged,
Since them creation days.
No bang an' bustle worship there,
Got up for show and hire;
But ev'rything that had a voice
Was in Jehovah's choir.

I wish they'd quit the proxy plan,
Where they an' me belong,
An' take the Lord's old-fashioned way
Of worshippin' in song.
Let ev'rybody with a voice,
In pulpit an' in pews,
Just shout the glory in his heart,
An' swell the hallelews.

SOME SPRING STYLES.

Coarse straw bonnets, draped with colored lisse, are a new fancy.

An owl, or owl's head, with big topaz eyes, is much liked for odd ornaments.

In scarf pins, wild violets and another tiny flowers of rose diamonds, and having ruby centres, are much admired.

Surplice and basket folds are almost epidemic on the fronts of new spring gowns.

Pure white hair of the best quality is so rare as to be worth more than its weight in gold.

To be stylish your stockings must match your gown, or else of the finest and fastest black.

A Berlin or black iron scroll, mounted with pearls and diamonds, and suitable for half mourning wear, is an effective novelty in brooches.

Real wheat is used to a considerable extent on the new bonnets, for making the bonnet itself as well as for trimmings.

Wraps of the dress material are frequently made up this season, and in the majority of cases they are heavily braided.

Many new shades appear in street gloves, intended to match the costumes with which they are to be worn.

A beautiful hairpin recently observed was topped with a Maltese cross of matched and graded diamonds mounted on a coiled spring.

French gray, suede, mignonette and leaf greens are the colors oftenest worn by the best dressers for street and visiting gowns.

Billycock hats of plaited rushes or unpeeled willow, filled with grasses and wild flowers, are very new and favorite table ornaments.

The woman without a vest of some sort to her frock is nowadays almost as lonesome as a white blackbird.

As to sleeves high authorities differ, some declaring the plain sleeve passé, and others that it is the height of style.

Silk lined black lace polonaises for wear over gay silks are among the most serviceable of contemplated summer garments.

Wash dresses for little girls are sometimes made with full skirts and belted waists with eight or ten feather-stitched tucks down the front and back.

Small black mantles of Bengaline, silk or embroidered cashmere, trimmed with metallic cord passementeries, are worn with dresses of all kinds.

Gloves having wide bands of stitching, in self or contrasting colors, are still in vogue, nevertheless the plain styles are quite as desirable as ever.

Scotch Ginghams for frocks for even the tiniest girls are chosen in large plaids and wide irregular stripes. Plain colors are also made up for their use.

Red dresses grow more and more in favor, are seen in all materials from cloth to crepe, and will be very much the wear for seaside watering places.

Yellow and Nile water are far and away the best hues for lamp shades, and strong linen with overdrapery of India silk or China crepe their fashionable fabric.

A new handkerchief of the sheerest French cambric, all overrun with rosebuds in outline machine embroidery, is among the season's most glittering successes.

The straight bang is to be numbered among the things that were, but more false hair will be worn than for several years past, and the switchmen are correspondingly jubilant.

Diagonal folds from left to right are much liked for vests of the gown stuff, but where white wool or pique is used they must be straight, like the pleats of a shirt front.

Fifty new styles of spring hats appear in one catalogue, with the rest of the designs yet to hear from. If "nature's mighty law is change," fashion holds here a good second.

Gowns of satteen and French percale, both of which come with lovely printed borders, have either plain full skirts with the gathers massed behind and edged at foot with the border, or else the old-time Spanish flounce, sewed on just above the knee, and headed with a narrow standing ruffle.

Fichus of all sorts will play their part in summer toilets, notable the Marie Antoinette, which will be made of crepe, gauze, net, silk, lace or muslin, in black or white or colors, and worn either loosely knotted in front or with the ends crossed and fastened at the back under a wide drooping sash.

If the condensed breath collected on the cool window-panes of a room where a number of persons have been assembled be burned, a smell of singed hair will show the presence of organic matter; and, if the condensed breath be allowed to remain on the windows for a few days, it will be found on examination by a microscope, that it is alive with animalculæ. It is the inhalation of air containing such putrescent matter which causes half the sick headaches, which might be avoided by a circulation of fresh air.—Phil. Bulletin.

THE COUNTRY BOY.

The country boy, says the Iowa Homestead, who is trained to simple ways and homely virtues, and who learns what a dollar is worth, by actually earning it under the laws of imperative necessity, has a tremendous advantage over the town boy. The country schools are far inferior to the town or city schools, but this is counterbalanced by the fact that the country boy is trained to work from the time he can pick up corn-cobs to run the kitchen stove until he goes out to his own home. The country boy has a mile or so to walk to and from school, which gives him a vigorous appetite and health. The country boy is face to face with practical realities. He sees how slowly money is made on the farm; he is taught from youth up the need of economy; he has the nature of saving first explained to him every day in the week; he is not exposed to the temptation of the saloon or the ball-rooms; he is not tempted so much to be a lady's man before he has occasion to use a razor on his downy cheeks. He may be a trifle rude, he may not feel easy in company, but in the long-contested race of life it is the chap that trudges to school bare-footed in summer and in storms in winter, whose mother cuts his hair with the sheep-shears, that leads the chap that goes to the city school, with the starched shirt front and fancy slippers, and whose head is shaved with the lawn-mower in the barber-shops. Such has been our observation, and we think we know what we are talking about. Speaking from experience, we never read any books with such avidity as those we devoured while the horses were resting at the end of the plowed land. The boys we envied forty years ago because they wore cassimere and laughed at our jeans have dropped so far back in the race that we have almost forgotten them. The chaps who had plenty of money at college and the city-bred fellows have not been, as a rule, heard from much since, while the country boys who wore plain clothes and kept close to their books in the old college are leading the thought in Iowa and other states to-day.

A LAWYER BEATEN BY A CATECHISM.

A Chicaco paper tells the story of an amusing scene in a court-room in that city. A little boy, about eight years old, was put on the stand as a witness, when the opposing counsel objected on the ground that the child did not understand the nature of an oath.

"Do you know what an oath is, Charley?" asked the judge.

"Yes, sir," answered Charley; "it is to ask God to help you to tell the truth."

"Where did you learn all this?" frowned the opposing counsel.

"In the catechism," said Charley, not to be frowned down by the biggest lawyer in the business.

"In the catechism? What catechism?

"In the ten-cent catechism, sir."

"Who told you to look in the catechism for the definition of an oath?"

"My sister. She told me last night, and I got it and studied it."

"Have you got your catechism with you?"

"Yes, sir; here it is," taking the well-thumbed little book from his trousers-pocket.

"You see the boy had his documents," interrupted the judge, with a smile; and a quiet titter went around the court-room, as it became evident that the lawyer was being beaten by the child.

"H'm! Let me see the book. I wonder if you know anything more that's in it. Who made you?"

"Why, God, of course," was the reply, as if the lad pooh-hoohed the idea of being asked such a simple question, and wanted "something hard."

Several question were asked, and elicited ready replies. The lawyer saw that he was in for it, and accepted defeat as gracefully as possible. Turning to the judge, he said:

"Your honor, I guess we will accept this witness; and, for this little book, I would submit it to my learned friend, the counsel for the other side, and recommend its careful study by him. It will do him good."—Christian at Work.

SHE SAW THE POINT.

"That lady," said a merchant, pointing to a woman who had traded about $12 worth in ten minutes and was going out, "used to be one of my worst callers. She'd come in almost daily, bother four or five clerks for two hours, and go out without buying a cent's worth."

"How did you cure her?"

"Well, I spoke to her in an off-hand way one day, and she fired up and said that as long as I kept clerks it was my business to be bothered. Next day I selected ten of the girl clerks, posted 'em as to what to say, and they rang her door-bell at intervals of an hour all day and inquired if she wanted a nurse girl. She didn't, and told them so, pleasantly enough, until the tenth one came. Then she said:—

"'I'd like to know why on earth all you girls come here bothering me when I don't want to hire!"

"'Because, ma'am, so long as you keep servants it is your business to be bothered'! was the prompt reply.

"I think she reasoned out the analogy, for she now sits down and buys what she wants, and every clerk likes to wait on her."

A physician in the American Magazine, illustrating the evil custom of talking to an invalid about his pains, says that once he requested a mother to mark a stroke upon a paper each time that she asked a sick daughter how she was. The next day to her incredulous astonishment, she made one hundred and nine strokes! A three months' visit away from home was prescribed.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Society of St. Paul's Universalist church was held Tuesday evening, and the following officers elected: President, Mrs. A. H. Willis; vice president, Mrs. F. E. Sedgwick; treasurer, Mrs. W. W. Leach; secretary, Miss E. E. Smith; charitable committee, Mrs. T. Griswold, Mrs. Crance and Mrs. Emma Gunn.

People who wish for a short Western trip at just half the usual rates have the privilege of going to Indianapolis and the Prohibitionary national convention May 25–30 for $19.25 the round trip; or to the Democratic convention at St. Louis May 31–June 5 for $24.50; or the Republican convention at Chicago June 14–19 for $20.25.

Rufus M. Taplin died last Saturday of heart-disease, after a prolonged illness, at the age of 23. The remains of Mrs. G. C. Bemis, his sister, who died of the same disease at Windham, Ct., were conveyed to this place, and both funerals were held at the Second Congregational church Monday afternoon. Rev. H. W. Pope officiated, assisted by Rev. F. W. Betts of St. Paul's Universalist church. The remains were interred in the cemetery on Thorndike street.

Rev. R. H. Ferguson of Boston, a former classmate of Rev. Mr. Weeks, preached at the Baptist church last Sunday morning. In the evening the mission band gave an interesting concert, and Mr. Ferguson briefly sketched the work being done in Burmah. He is to start for that country in August, for the purpose of learning the language of a people who have no written language. He then will undertake the formation of an alphabet, in order that the Bible may be translated into their language.

During the first two weeks of the license reign eleven persons have been arraigned before the district court charged with drunkenness, while during the same period last year, under the no-license law, there was but one case of that character. This is a marked increase, and it may be added that several other persons in an intoxicated state, who should have fallen into the hands of the officers and been counted among the above number, escaped arrest Saturday night and were seen by many wandering about the streets.

The United Lines Telegraph Company opened its new office in this village Tuesday morning, and is now ready for the transaction of business. Up to date it has been remarkably well patronized by the business men and people, who find the service all that could be expected. Mrs. I. E. Boulton has the entire management of the office, which is located upstairs in Hatch's block. A telephone has been placed in the office so that it has telephonic connection with all the subscribers to the local exchange, also the adjacent towns.

James Murphy of Hartford, Henry Angers of Worcester, Patrick Dillon of Spencer, Nellie Lynch of Monson and Patrick Sullivan of Palmer were all arraigned at the district court Monday morning, charged with drunkenness. The two former victims were committed to the county jail in default of payment of fines and costs. The others paid and were released. Wednesday morning a return was made of a search warrant issued to search a party or place at Wales where Thomas McLatchey of Union, Ct., had some goods stolen. A hearing was set down for the 16th.

The three boys who were charged with setting forest fires last week were before the district court Saturday, the Cook and Johnson boys being discharged, and the Colgrove boy put on probation for two months. This latter decision has caused a good deal of criticism among business men and property owners, as this is not the first time the lad has been in trouble. He found the combination of the lock on H. P. Longley's money drawer last fall, and was caught with the money on his person, and has been in numerous smaller pieces of mischief. Last fall the state agent advised leniency in his case, but after getting a few "points" about the boy this time hadn't a word to say in the matter.

The inhabitants of the town of Brimfield, through the selectmen, have petitioned the county commissioners to discontinue the highway from near the house of Theodore Farrell, on Tower Hill in Brimfield, to near the house formerly owned by Col. John Fenton in Palmer, which would relieve the necessity of rebuilding one of the bridges recently washed away. The farmers of Tower Hill and Dunhamtown in Brimfield will strenuously oppose this move, as it would make some two miles extra travel for them whenever they visited Palmer, where a great share of their trading is done. A hearing will be had in the matter Monday, June 25th, at noon, at the station of the Boston & Albany road in this place.

Palmers 18—West Brookfields 0.

The West Brookfields only got one man as far as third base last Saturday, and then he failed to score. The day was stormy, and the prospect for a game was poor, so the Palmer's battery was telegraphed not to come. The West Brookfields expected their battery to join them on the way, but were disappointed, and were unfortunate in the matter of substitutes. The Palmers played Rooney in the box, and he seemed to have lost none of his last year's skill, the visitors being unable to "get on" to his delivery, while Greene of Thorndike gave him faultless support behind the bat.

Memorial Day.

Arrangements for the celebration of Memorial Day are being made as rapidly as possible by the committee appointed for that purpose by L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R. The members of the post, accompanied by the Woman's Relief Corps, will meet at headquarters on the Sunday evening preceding the day, and march to the Second Congregational church, where a union service will be held and appropriate addresses made by the clergymen connected with the different churches in town. On Memorial Day the procession will form in front of the Nassowanno House, and accompanied by the usual number of invited guests, will proceed to the different cemeteries in town, where the graves of departed comrades will be decorated. At 1 o'clock p. m. a collation will be served in the banquet hall of Thomas Lodge, F. & A. M., by the Woman's Relief Corps, succeeding which the address of the day will be delivered in St. Paul's Universalist church by Rev. F. W. Betts. The Ware Cadet Band has been engaged to furnish music.

The Saloons, or Some Other Place for the Boys?

The meeting at the district court room Monday evening to organize the reading room association was attended by only a few. After the meeting had been called to order L. E. Moore and S. S. Taft suggested that if a reading room and a gymnasium were to be maintained, it should be managed by the library association, as it could be done much easier and better than by having separate organizations for each. Dr. W. H. Stowe and O. P. Allen were in favor of organizing a reading room association, and after considerable discussion the meeting adjourned until this evening at 7.30, when a large attendance of citizens is requested. The work is a good one, and cannot fail to do much for the morals and good of the young of the village if carried out. The plan is to have a reading room and gymnasium, and by interesting the young men and boys of the place, keep them from the streets and saloons. The project is one that ought to succeed, and one that every parent should have enough interest in to be present to-night, when its fate will be decided.

The Base Ball Teams in Town.

The following is a list of the organized base ball clubs that help to maintain the interest in the national game:

PALMER HIGH SCHOOL CLUB—Dewey, catcher; Lyons, pitcher; Cross, first base; Twiss, second base; Sedgwick, third base; Sullivan, short-stop; Kennedy, center field; James Dewey, manager.

WEEKS HOUSE CLUB—Cook, catcher; McGrath, pitcher; Kinnere, first base; Foley, second base; Henken, third base; McDonald, short-stop; Daclos, center field; Bannister, left field; Weeks, right field; J. W. Weeks, Jr., manager.

CONVERSE HOUSE CLUB—Austin, catcher; Kee, pitcher; Miller, first base; Cady, second base; White, third base; Kenefick, short stop; O'Brien, center field; Blackmer, right field; Jones, left field; John Miller, manager.

WIRE MILL CLUB—Beecher, catcher; Bartlett, pitcher; Bosquet, short-stop; Bient, first base; Muller, second base; Benway, third base; Benson, left field; Baker, center field; Coles, right field.

There are several other teams in town that are also well organized.

The Sidewalks to be Kept Clear.

According to the instructions of the selectmen Officers Healey and Dawson began last Saturday evening to keep the sidewalks free from the crowds that have heretofore congregated and made it decidedly unpleasant and inconvenient for pedestrians, who have frequently been insulted by these loafers. After the officers had patrolled the streets a few times there was a perceptible difference in the appearance of the walks, which were kept quite clear until Sunday afternoon, when the crowd had apparently forgotten the warning, and began to assemble as before. One by the name of Russell, who boards at the Nassowanno House, was standing near the hotel steps leaning against the railing, and wasofficially requested to move on, as were also the others who were with him. He was the only one that didn't seem inclined to obey the orders, and consequently in a few minutes he found himself in the "cooler." He will have a hearing at the court to-morrow morning, and as he claims damages and an illegal arrest, he will contest the case, and has secured S. S. Taft to appear for his interests, while Charles L. Gardner will protect the rights of the commonwealth. There is considerable interest in the case, but the officers' course is very generally approved. Russell claims he was standing on private property, belonging to the hotel where he was boarding, and that the officers had no right to order him to move.

Personal.

Mrs. O. P. Allen has been spending the week at Boston.

Miss Hattie Plumley spent Sunday in Westfield with friends.

Dr. F. L. Eager of Meriden, Ct., spent Sunday in town with his parents.

Plimpton, Herbert H. Corban. The society numbers 36 members.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The roof is going on the new paper mill, and the machinery is beginning to arrive.

It is rumored that the Ludlow brethren are laying plans to capture Newton Lodge and move it over there, but possibly the members of the lodge at this village may say something in favor of bringing it here, if it is to be moved.

The long-expected case of C. E. Peck against the town, on account of the memorial hall, has been heard during the past week before Auditor Stevens of Westfield, and his decision will be given at the next term of the superior court. It is to be hoped that the end will then come.

Considerable inquiry is made in certain quarters why the liquor committee doesn't "do something." This committee was chosen after a good many, who ought to be interested in the welfare of the town, had refused to have anything to do with the matter, and it would seem to be good taste for these parties to let those who finally consented to serve, somewhat alone. At any rate the committee will not publish any plans at present.

BONDSVILLE.

Dr. H. A. Smith is out with a new trotter.

The Bondsville Brass Band is engaged to play at Belchertown May 30th.

The schools closed to-day to allow the teachers to go to the teachers' convention at Springfield.

THORNDIKE.

Circus here the 23d.

H. E. W. Clark's residence is being newly painted.

A dance will be held at Union Hall on the eve of Memorial Day.

There is some talk of organizing a temperance society in this place.

Agent Greene has this week sold his horse "Koko" to New York parties.

Paymaster Deming is soon to move into the residence recently occupied by Rev. A. C. Hurd.

A game of base ball was played on the up street grounds last Saturday for a keg of—ice water.

The Young Stars ball club defeated a club at Three Rivers last Saturday by a score of 26 to 17.

Chas. E. Bloomer, who was to give an entertainment at Union Hall Thursday evening, did not put in an appearance.

Two of Thorndike's oldest citizens, John Barber and William Harvey, are very ill at their homes, and it is reported their recovery is doubtful.

Dennis Sullivan, who died last week and was buried Tuesday after an illness of several weeks, was a young man much respected, and his loss will be felt greatly by many, who sympathize with his parents in their sorrow.

The river bank near the long bridge, which has been used for the disposal of all kinds of debris, is being cleared and put into fine shape. Notices have been put up forbidding persons from throwing any more rubbish down the bank.

Manager Staples of the Thorndikes is corresponding with several clubs, and expects to have plenty of games with good clubs this season, among them the Holyokes, Northamptons, Firemen, Mutuals of Hartford, Palmers, Chicopee Falls, Ludlows, Three Rivers and Wares.

The Thorndikes and Homesteads did not play Saturday, owing to the weather, but will cross bats to-morrow at 3 o'clock. The uniforms of the Thorndikes will consist of gray cap, striped jerseys, gray pants, blue belt, blue stockings and gray overshirt. The following are the players who will take part to-morrow: Greene, Sullivan, Dailey, Byars, Flynn, Chapman, Broshnan, Connors, Murray.

MONSON.

Jenks has closed his branch store in Wales.

H. C. Day is building an addition to his residence.

Some of the clerks are trying to organize a base ball club.

The "Tobey Homestead" will be sold at auction next Tuesday.

Truman Watross is building a new barn near his North Main street residence.

Henry H. Fenton has bought the Bennett farm, and has moved his family there.

Gage & Reynolds close their straw hat shop works for this season to-morrow.

The branch mill base ball nine defeated the Ellis mill nine by a score of 16 to 15.

The Shea house on the cemetery lot was sold to Matthew Maney at auction Wednesday.

Work is very slack at Fay, Peck & Co's. straw shop, and the term will probably close next week.

The homestead of the late Mary A. Smith was sold at auction Wednesday to Frank A. Bills for $1700.

The graduating exercises of the '88 class of the academy will take place in Memorial Hall on the 18th of June.

The Monson Cornet Band has commenced rehearsing for the coming season, and meets every week at the town hall.

Rev. F. S. Hatch will lecture at the academy this evening on the "Sights of London," illustrated by stereopticon views.

Father Lee is grading down the hill on his new lot on Main street, and will terrace and grass it over, making a decided improvement.

The fairy opera "Laila" will be presented by the young ladies connected with the Congregational Society in Central Hall next Tuesday evening.

The funeral of Annie Healey was held at St. Patrick's church Saturday, and was largely attended. She had many friends who will mourn her loss.

There will be a meeting of Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., in Grand Army Hall next Monday evening. Comrade Henry H. Wood will relate his army experiences, also some of his observations in the South since the war.

The gentlemen connected with the Universalist society will give an entertainment and supper next Tuesday evening in Central Hall. Ike Brown, the celebrated banjo player and comedian, has been secured for the occasion. A clam chowder supper will be served by the gentlemen.

The unfavorable weather did not prevent a good attendance at the poverty party and entertainment given by the young people of the M. E. society, last Friday evening. The waiters were dressed in a style which resembled poverty in every respect. The dialogue, "Is the Editor in," was very good and much enjoyed by all present.

For some time Monson has been without a good base ball ground, but now the academy scholars have leased a tract of land of W. N. Flynt near Flynt's Park, and will lay out a base ball park which will, when completed, be all that could be desired, the large trees giving the spectators splendid shade. Quite a number of games have already been arranged, to be played on these grounds. The academy scholars will have use of the grounds when they are not engaged, and the grounds can be hired by any outside club by applying to Mr. Flynt.

The Saloons Must Go.

A large and enthusiastic temperance mass meeting was held at Memorial Hall Sunday evening, and addresses were made by several different speakers. The singing was led by Lane's orchestra. A committee of 7 was chosen to organize a permanent temperance organizations in view of having similar meeting, in the future. The following resolution was passed:

RESOLVED, That the thanks of the citizens of Monson, in mass meeting assembled, be hereby extended to the board of selectmen of Monson for the efforts heretofore made by them toward the suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquor in our town, and that we hereby pledge our hearty support of every effort they may be pleased hereafter to make in the same direction.

Personal.

W. J. Randall spent Sunday with his parents in Mansfield.

Frank L. Bliss of Fay, Peck & Co., spent Sunday at home in Norwich, Ct.

M. R. Lull of Marsh's grocery store at Springfield was at home Sunday.

Robert Cushman and Edward Morris of Amherst College were at home Sunday.

Mrs. J. E. Dutton and her son James, of Niantic, Ct., are spending a few days with Mrs. Dutton's mother, Mrs. A. Whitney.

George C. Flynt and S. F. Cushman, Jr., attended the ball game between the Yales and Williams at Williamstown, Saturday.

A Surprise all Around.

Many Monson people will remember Dr. F. A. Ellis, who died in this place in 1884. He left considerable property, mainly real estate at Nantucket, which according to his will was divided among his heirs, two sisters being the only ones found, and the estate was settled by George H. Newton of this village. While in California a year ago Mr. Newton ran across a man who formerly knew Dr. Ellis, and said he left a family. The matter was investigated, and now a daughter appears to claim the estate, with abundant proof of her identity. Dr. Ellis first visited Nantucket in 1861 under the name of Augustus Franklin. He acted peculiarly, and in 1870 left suddenly, leaving considerable property. He soon returned and practiced dentistry under his real name. It seems that Dr. Ellis married an Alabama woman, Martha Paty, in 1860, whom he persuaded to go North and invest her small savings of $6000. They settled in a small town in Tennessee, when one morning in 1861 Ellis disappeared, not many months before the time when he opened his dentistry office at Nantucket. The daughter and the present heiress was born soon after, and the deserted pair have had a hard struggle for their bread and butter. The girl's name is Sarah Ann Ellis, and she has been reared in a moonshiners' district among the lowest and most ignorant of the Tennesseean husbandry. There is plenty of evidence to establish her title as the daughter and heir of her father. The mother died 10 years ago and Sarah Ann cannot read or write, but is now receiving instruction. Mr. Newton has been given full power of attorney to adjust the legal interests in the matter, and has placed an attachment on the property of Mrs. Eliza D. Spear and Miss Mary A. Ellis of Orange, who were declared the heirs of Dr. Ellis. Mrs. Spear says that if her brother left a daughter she is welcome to the property. The estate amounted to about $15,000, and the sisters supposed they were the only heirs until the daughter was discovered down South.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The Toplieff place on Pleasant street will be sold at auction to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Good strawberries have been sold in town this week at 28 cents per box. Not very high for the first of the season.

The first strawberry festival of the season will be held by the ladies of the Episcopal society at Music hall this evening.

Dr. W. O. Barrett has tendered his resignation as a member of the executive committee of the Law and Order League.

The cards of subscriptions for the repairs on the East Congregational church handed in so far amount to about $12,500.

A large amount of personal property belonging to the estate of the late James B. Patrill will be sold at auction next Tuesday.

Rev. E. Hitchcock of the Methodist church, assisted by pastors of surrounding towns, are to hold religious services regularly Sunday afternoons at Forest Lake Gardens.

William Marsh has rented his house which was lately occupied by Zenas Marsh to William Stewart, who is to manufacture and sell hulled corn and hominy. Running water and set kettles have been put in position.

A fire alarm was sounded Sunday afternoon, caused by a slight fire in Matthew Meaney's house on Maple street, which caught in a pile of rubbish near by from sparks from the kitchen fire. The loss was about $50.

Walter B. Eddy, a member of Nenameseck Council, American Legion of Honor, has received $36 relief benefit for the three weeks he was unable to attend to business on account of an attack of acute bronchitis.

The concert by the Kneisel Quartette Tuesday evening was excellent, but there was not a large audience, as that class of music was too fine to be appreciated by a large portion of our town's people. The singing by Miss Lottie Richardson and Mrs. Lawton was enthusiastically received, showing we do not need to go out of town for first-class vocalists.

The bag and basket sale, under the auspices of the Social Science Club, will take place at the Town Hall on the afternoon and evening of Friday, May 25. There will be a large assortment of Indian baskets and bags of all descriptions. Ice cream will also be served. The prices are to be very moderate, and the proceeds will go to the charitable work of the club.

Mr. and Mrs. William Goodfield were given a pleasant surprise party Saturday last, it being their 50th wedding anniversary. There were about 30 friends present. William C. Goodfield of Gilbertville, son of the happy couple, presented them with five ten-dollar gold pieces, friends from the Methodist society gave them an elegant easy chair, and Mrs. Goodfield's brother and sister in Canada sent them $10.

Memorial Day.

J. W. Lawton Post, G. A. R., have secured the services of Rev. E. A. Horton, department chaplain of Boston, to deliver the address on the evening of Memorial Day, the exercises to be held in the Town Hall at 7.45. The Amateur Orchestra will furnish music during the evening. The speaker is highly spoken of, and the exercises promise to be of more than usual interest, and no doubt will be more largely attended than heretofore, being in the evening, as many cannot well attend in the day time. The Cornet Band will furnish music for the day. All soldiers and sailors are invited to join with the post in the exercises of the day, and contributions of flowers are solicited.

Town Meeting.

Warrants are posted for a town meeting to be held next Tuesday at 2 p. m. The meeting will be asked to appoint a special agent or agents to act in behalf of the town in the case of the Otis Company for an abatement of taxes now pending before the county commissioners, and to appropriate money therefor; an agent or agents to act in behalf of the town in the claim of David Oaks, who has sued the town for some $4000 damages received on a public thoroughfare; to determine in reference to sewerage and drainage, what the town will do in regard to the methods of taxation or assessment, and the portion of expense to be borne by the town; whether the town will adopt the provisions of law authorizing the payment of said assessment in three annual instalments; to provide funds for the construction of sewers and drains and the management of the same; $400 will be asked for making new streets, also money for new sidewalks, and $275 will be asked for a new road scraper; to authorize the assessors to expend such sums of money as they deem necessary for the proper discharge of their duties, also to fix the salaries of the assessors and town treasurer.

Fire District Meeting.

At the annual meeting of the fire district last Monday afternoon Charles E. Stevens was moderator, and the following officers were elected:

Chief engineer, T. C. Gleason; first assistant engineer, Myron Ramsdell; second assistant, Frank Ward; third assistant, Michael Dillon; clerk, Edward T. Hampton; treasurer, F. D. Gilmore; prudential committee, Frank P. Clark, Philip L. Keefe, E. H. Gilbert. It was voted to build a new hose house on East Main street at a cost not exceeding $1000, and E. H. Baker, T. C. Gleason, P. L. Keefe, F. P. Clark and Charles E. Stevens were appointed a building committee. These appropriations were made: Officers' salaries, $300; firemen's salaries, $800; new hose, $200; use of hydrants, $1100; incidentals, $750; total, $4150. It was voted to increase the salary of the officers, and the annual pay of the members of the department was raised from $15 to $20, and the department increased by five members. James E Clark and W. H. Hall were appointed auditors, and J. H. Grenville Gilbert, T. C. Gleason, F. D. Gilmore, Myron Ramsdell and W. W. Hall were appointed a committee to look up a better fire alarm system for the use of the department. It has been suggested that we have an alarm system with stations in different parts of the village.

The Otis Company's Tax Case.

The county commissioners were in Ware Tuesday to give a hearing on the Otis Company's tax case. Charles L. Gardner of Palmer appeared for the Otis Company, and District Attorney Bond of Northampton for the town, as represented by its committee, which was elected for the purpose of taking full charge of this case. H. C. Davis appeared, asking to be heard for the assessors, proposing an adjournment of two weeks, and claiming that the assessors only are the proper agents of the town in this matter, notwithstanding the vote of the town to the contrary. District Attorney Bond maintained that the assessors had no right whatever to appear, but that the committee were properly and legally the agents of the town in this case, as also did Lawyer Gardner. The discussion occupied nearly all the morning. After the noon adjournment the commissioners announced that they had decided to grant the request for a delay in order to give the town another opportunity to hold a town meeting, and accordingly the meeting was adjourned for two weeks. It now remains for the town to say at the meeting to be held the 22d inst, whether or not it will yield to the wishes of certain parties, that the committee which by special vote of the town last December was elected to have charge of the case, shall be set aside to make room for the assesors and their counsel. It may be the town will consider that it was acting intelligently when it elected a committee of citizens who could work independently, and as it is believed, quite free from prejudice.

EX-GOV. LONG has tired of congressional life, and announces his determination to return to his profession at the close of his present term, in order that he may lay aside something for his family. His retirement from public life will be a serious loss to the state, which can ill afford to lose men of his character and ability from her service. And by the way, why is it that so many of our congressmen are ready to leave public life? It is even intimated that Senator Hoar will follow Congressman Long's example. Men of the caliber needed at Washington can unquestionably do better financially than to remain in Congress, but we very much doubt if they would retire if there was more statesmanship and less partisanship exhibited at the capitol.

POLITICAL conventions have been thick this week, and the list of delegates to the national conventions will soon be complete. Blaine men are numerous among the Republican delegates, though Sherman and Gresham are finding many friends, and the New York delegation will go for Depew, next to Blaine. In the Democratic conventions Cleveland is sweeping everything. The New York Democratic convention on Tuesday sat down squarely on Gov. Hill, defeating his cherished plan to head the delegation to St. Louis, and electing a solid Cleveland delegation.

BELVA LOCKWOOD has the honor of being the first presidential candidate in the field, having been nominated this week by the equal rights party at Des Moines, Iowa. A. M. Love is the nominee for vice president. Lockwood and Love is alliterative, if not alluring, but there is not enough love for Lockwood to make their campaign particularly dangerous for the other candidates.

THE Bell patent is secure, the United States supreme court having denied the motion for a rehearing of the telephone case.

The county commissioners have ordered a separation of the grades between the railroads and Main street at Springfield.

LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, May 16, 1888.

The Senate on Thursday passed to be engrossed the bill to help the schools in the poor country towns, but amending it so that it shall apply to towns under $2,500,00 in valuation (instead of $2,000,000) and also, by the casting vote of President Boardman, so that upon the town's raising $750, the state is to pay $1000 to be equally divided between the teachers and the superintendent, instead of the state's paying $750 to the superintendent. It will give the teachers from 25 to 33⅓ cents a week more. The friends of the bill opposed the latter amendment as likely to injure it. The bill has yet to pass the House.

When the oleo bill was reached in the Senate Thursday afternoon. Senator Hathorne of Suffolk moved to amend it to prohibit the use of any coloring matter in butter,—an amendment which was ruled out of order in the House. On motion of Senator Crosby of Berkshire the bill was postponed to to-day, and the contest is noticed below.

The House had a sharp fight Thursday over a bill to make the salary of the railroad commissioners $1000 more apiece than it is now. It was supported unanimously by the railroad committee and unanimously opposed by the finance committee. Finally a large majority voted it down.

Friday was a short day in the Senate, but a long day in the House. The upper branch, by 7 to 11 on ordering to a third reading, killed the House bill to limit the hours of street car employes in Boston to 10 in 12.

A bill was reported in relation to marriages, requiring notice of the intention to marry to be filed with the city or town clerk, or registrar, at least seven days before the marriage, and also requiring the notice to be published.

A chance of life is proposed to be given to Capt. Joe V. Meigs's elevated road bill for Boston. A majority of the street railways committee reported adversely, but a minority of two offered in the Senate a bill to provide that damages to abuttors shall be fixed in much the same manner as when highways are laid out. This bill makes it much easier to build the road. The Senate has passed the bill, 21 to 14.

The House has gone on record in favor of a pension bureau to aid soldiers in getting pensions without paying great fees to pension attorneys in Washington.

The Senate on Monday voted to have every session count as a legislative day, and both branches are now working under that rule. Its advantage is that it enables matters to be given one reading in the forenoon and another in the afternoon, and papers can be sent from one branch to the other with only half the time otherwise required under the rules.

On Monday also the Senate enacted the high license liquor bill and the bill to limit licenses to one in every thousand people, except in Boston, where the figure is one in 500. But neither of these bills can take effect till next year.

The House is more opposed to raising salaries than is the Senate, In the latter branch the recommendation of the treasury committee that the bill to raise the salary of the attorney general from $4000 to $5000 ought not to pass was defeated, and the salary was put up. But when the House got its turn at it, it killed the bill by vote of 53 to 90, and with it a meritorious section to raise to $1200 the salary of the attorney general's law clerk, who seems to be paid far less according to his services than many high salaried men.

On Tuesday there was reported to the Senate a resolve accepting the statue of Josiah Bartlett, one of the signers of the Declaration, by the state from the town of Amesbury, and with the resolve was an invitation to the president and governor to be present at the unveiling.

Tuesday was a great day in each branch, and a great day for the lobby also. The third house has never had so numerous an attendance this year before. It is getting late in the session. The members are crowding as close to the safety limit of legislation as they dare in their haste to get home. It is the time to be on the lookout and to see that nothing amiss is done. On Tuesday, I say, the lobby was out in force. Senate and House felt their presence, and the hall between was thick with those who came to exert a pressure on the members. It is not the professional lobby which is so dangerous, but the special lobby, men who would scorn the name of lobbyists, but who are more importunate and persistent than the professionals.

Tuesday the Senate, after a long debate, voted 23 to 7 in favor of the bill for the extension of the Hartford and Connecticut Western Railroad to Springfield. It voted for a $10,000 appropriation for the state firemen's association.

The House was against water gas on Tuesday by the close vote of 106 to 98 on substituting a resolve that the gas commissioners investigate the matter and report to the next Legslaiture.

Wednesday was one of the rare days of this or of any session. Immense money interests were at stake. In the House were a throng of lobbyists working for the cause of the Standard Oil Company, and in the Senate was the oleo fight, in which the millions of Phil D. Armour of Chicago are said to be enlisted on the side of imitation butter. The mere mention of these names will give some idea of the pressure which was put upon the Legislature. The water gas men were successful in the House, for they reversed their defeat of Tuesday, carrying a reconsideration of the loss of the water gas bill by 93 to 81, then refusing to admit the hostile resolve by 80 to 93, and then ordering the bill to a third reading. By the stronger vote of 98 to 73 they reversed the rejection of the bill to allow the Bay State Gas Company to increase its capital stock.

In the Senate the oleo fight was prolonged about all day. Senator Southworth of Suffolk, who was in the chair, refused to sustain the point of order which Speaker Noyes sustained in the House that an amendment to forbid the coloring of butter was not germane to the bill. Senators Crosby, Hartwell and the two Gleasons worked hard for the bill, and Senators Glines and Kingsley of Middlesex did their best to defeat it. The bill was ordered to a third reading by the close vote of 18 to 17. President Boardman went on record against it.

By 122 to 70 the House enacted the bill for taking the reservoir lot for the proposed state house extension. LANDON.

Every day, every train, and every hour brings new customers to Broadhurst Bros. (Morse's Shoe Store), Springfield, and they are well prepared to accommodate a good sized crowd with a store full of the latest styles on women's front lace kid boots for $3; also common sense kid boots for $2, $2.50, $3 and $4. There seems to be nothing in the shoe line not to be found in their store.

A few years since, Household Art Goods were found on sale only in Boston and New York. With an enterprise worthy of recognition, W. L. Quinnell first ventured to introduce such a stock into Springfield, and now four years later no place outside of the great cities can show as superb and as varied a line of these goods. Within a few months over 100 residences in this city and surrounding towns have been supplied by him with elegant Mantels, Gas Fixtures, Mosaic Tile, Art Glass Windows, exquisite Lattice Work, or Artistic Furnishings. Many an unpretentious house has been given the comforts and embellishments of costlier mansions. Mr. Quinnell has lately added to his regular force one of the best tile laying masons in the country. With the best of artisans, and a large and elegant stock of Art Goods, perfect satisfaction is guaranteed. Choice bric-a-brac for wedding gifts is a specialty. An inspection of this stock will amply repay you. Prices are marked in plain figures at 367 Main-st.

THE BOSTON PAPERS TESTED.

An enterprising carpet dealer put a coupon advertisement in every Boston paper for one week. The coupon was good for $1 in buying a rug, and bore the name of the paper so it could be counted. The sale was a great success; the coupons were all counted in the presence of representatives of the different papers, and a sworn statement was made of the result. The Boston Daily Globe came out ahead, selling 35.29%, the Herald 26.58% and the Journal 19.17%, the other papers dividing the remainder. It was a great victory for the Globe, which offers a reward of $1000 to any man who can prove that it has not the largest circulation of any Boston newspaper.

Ayer's Pills are pleasant, safe and sure, and excel all other pills in healing and curative qualities. Best for family use.

No other preparation so meets the wants of a debilitated system as Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Healey's Vegetable Tonic Pills and Cordial are a special compound for diseases of women. Sold by druggists. Send stamp to W. E. & W. P. Thayer, 231 Savin Hill Ave., Boston, for "Nature's Methods for the Self Cure of Diseases of Women." (4w7)

UGLY AND HATEFUL,

but I could not help it. Everything went wrong with me, and I thought I hadn't a friend in the world; dyspepsia caused this, and for months I couldn't eat anything, and just suffered in misery till I used Sulphur Bitters. Three bottles cured me.—D. Lewis, 22 Bowdoin-st., Boston, Mass.

FOR SIX CENTS

we will send Dr. Kaufmann's great medical work; 100 pages, colored plates from life. The most valuable adviser ever published. To any address on receipt of 3 2-cent stamps to pay postage. Address A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass.

I was troubled with catarrh and hay fever for 30 years. Have suffered a great deal. My eyes, ears and throat were greatly effected. Mr. Kinney, the druggist, induced me to try Ely's Cream Balm, and for the past two years have had very little trouble. I have lived in Webster, Mass., and in Rockville, Conn. Very resp'y, J. W. Pratt, Monson, Mass.

I have improved greatly since using Ely's Cream Balm for catarrh. I feel like a new man. It is a blessing to humanity.—John D. Farrell.

PERSONAL.

Mr. N. H. Frohlichstein, of Mobile, Ala., writes: I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, having used it for a severe attack of Bronchitis and Catarrh. It gave me instant relief and entirely cured me and I have not been afflicted since. I also beg to state that I had tried other remedies with no good result. Have also used Electric Bitters and Dr. King's New Life Pills, both of which I can recommend.

Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, is sold on a positive guarantee. Trial bottle free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 1y29

WONDERFUL CURES.

W. D. Hoyt & Co., wholesale and retail druggists of Rome, Ga., say: We have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery, Electric Bitters and Bucklen's Arnica Salve for four years. Have never handled remedies that sell as well, or give such universal satisfaction. There have been some wonderful cures effected by these medicines in this city. Several cases of pronounced Consumption have been entirely cured by use of a few bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery, taken in connection with Electric Bitters. We guarantee them always. Sold by LeGro & Lynde. 1y29

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. ### Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

Some Things Learned by Experience.

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1.00 per bottle. eow7

THE HANDSOMEST LADY IN PALMER

Remarked to a friend the other day that she knew Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs was a superior remedy, as it stopped her cough instantly when other cough remedies had no effect whatever. So to prove this and convince you of its merit, any druggist will give you a sample bottle free. Large size 50 cents and $1.

THE POPULATION OF PALMER

is about 6000, and we would say at least one-half are troubled with some affection of the throat and lungs, as those complaints, according to statistics, are more numerous than others. We would advise all our readers not to neglect the opportunity to call on their druggist and get a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs. Trial size free. Large bottles 50 cents and $1. Sold by all druggists. (4w4)

READ AND CONSIDER the merits and advantages of the TAYLOR ADJUSTABLE LADIES' SHOE over all others:
1st. A lady can wear one size narrower than any other made.
2d. Requires no breaking; is worn with comfort from the first. A blessing to tender feet.
3d. The upper will not crack or break away from the sole.
4th. The principles of the Taylor shoe are such that a lady can wear the Opera pattern, who has been obliged to wear Common Sense styles heretofore.
5th. This shoe retains its original shape; the sides of the upper will not spread out over the sole.

Manufactured from a superior grade of selected material; elegantly stitched with silk; no nails; no lasting tacks; no wax; fair stitched; prices moderate. MR. and MRS. D. W. WHEELER will call at your house and take your orders in next two weeks. Inquire at No. 9 Pleasant-st, Ware, Mass., evenings. (2w7)

TO THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.—
Respectfully represents the undersigned, that public convenience and necessity require the discontinuance of so much of the county highway in the towns of Brimfield and Palmer, as lies between a point on the Tower Hill road near the house of Theodore Farrell, in said Brimfield, to near a house formerly owned by Col. John Fenton, in said Palmer.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that said highway be discontinued.

INHABITANTS OF THE TOWN OF BRIMFIELD.
By OSCAR F. BROWN,
FRANK R. NEWTON,
JOSIAH STEBBINS, } Selectmen of Brimfield.
April 23d, 1888.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, SS.—At a meeting of the county commissioners, holden at Springfield, within and for said county, on the sixteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord 1888.

And now upon the petition aforesaid, the county commissioners, deeming a view of the premises expedient and proper, give notice that they will meet for the purpose of said view, and hearing all parties interested, at the station of the Boston & Albany Railroad in Palmer, on Monday, the twenty-fifth day of June next, at 10.15 o'clock a. m.; and it is ordered by the county commissioners that a copy of said petition be served by the sheriff of said county, or his deputy, upon the clerks of the towns of Palmer and Brimfield, in said county, thirty days at least before the said twenty-fifth day of June, and that all other persons and corporations interested therein be notified by publishing a copy of said petition and this order thereon, once a week, in the PALMER JOURNAL, a public newspaper printed in said county, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the time of said view and hearing. And it is further ordered by the commissioners that copies of said petition, or abstracts containing the substance thereof and this order be posted by said sheriff or deputy in two public places in the towns of Palmer and Brimfield, fourteen days before said twenty-fifth day of June, and that notice be given in manner aforesaid, to all persons and corporations interested, that the county commissioners deem a view of the premises expedient and proper, and that a view of the same will be taken by them at the time and place aforesaid, and that they will hear the parties interested at the time of said view. ROBERT O. MORRIS, Clerk.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPSHIRE, SS. PROBATE COURT—
To all persons interested in the estate of Lucia C. Putnam, late of Easthampton, in said county, deceased, greeting.—

Whereas, Charles B. Fisk, the executor of the last will and testament of said deceased, has presented for allowance the final account of his administration upon the estate of said deceased. You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Northampton, in said county, on the fifth day of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be allowed.

And said Charles B. Fisk is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week in the WARE STANDARD, a newspaper printed at Ware, three weeks successively, the last publication to be two days at least before said court.

Witness, WILLIAM G. BASSETT, Esquire, Judge of said court, this eleventh day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

WHAT A CHANGE.

D. H. Brigham began the Ready-Made Clothing business in Springfield more than 40 years ago, and it took him a score of years to gain a foothold.

It is now about a month since we (D. H. Brigham & Co.) announced in these columns that our time henceforth would be devoted to the manufacture and sale of ladies', misses' and girls' complete outfits of the higher grades not to be found in dry goods stores, yet we are already compelled to enlarge our present quarters and also to put in a passenger elevator so as to use three floors for the display and sale of ladies', misses' and girls' outfits.

Before doing this we must dispose of our entire stock now on hand, and that at the earliest moment possible to make room for masons and carpenters.

90 days' business must be done in 30.

We have bought these elegant goods at prices enabling us to place them within the reach of all. In many cases the prices will be less than the original cost of the material. We have everything from a fine wash dress to the elaborately made silks, and in prices from $5.00 to $75.00, also wraps from $7.50 to $60.00.

We are crowded with customers from far and near, with too little room for the successful display of our hot weather goods, although we show a magnificent assortment suitable for the season. Dress makers from all the adjoining towns after a careful examination pronounce our stock superb, our styles faultless, our finish and prices beyond competition.

JOURNEYMEN TAILORS are employed on our ladies' suits and top garments, and we guarantee artistic outfits in all sizes from 2 years up to 40 and 50 bust measures. This is the opportunity of a lifetime. Ladies', misses' and girls' outfits complete at maker's wholesale prices, from a stock never equaled outside of the great cities.

Within a month we have bought the entire stock of the best New York manufacturers of misses' and girl's costumes, including their Paris models. For elegant workmanship and quality of material they cannot be matched. This stock includes besides the best line of seasonable jackets, newmarkets and summer cloaks for misses and little girls, the richest dresses for the same ever shown in this city. Dress makers in providing for children's wear and parents also will be able to get perfect satisfaction and save themselves untold worry and delay by selecting from this stock. White suits for all ages will be put on sale as soon as room will allow. Early selections can be made for delivery at vacation season at manufacturers' wholesale price. Our misses' and childrens' lawn tennis suits are handsome and cheap.

Farmers, Please Notice.

Why is it so many farmers trade with A. F. NILES & SON? You will hear a great many ask. The reasons are these: They can get more for their produce there than they can anywhere else, no matter whether it is butter, eggs, chickens, fowls, potatoes, beef, veal or almost anything else they raise, and then they can buy almost everything in the eatable line there. In their meat department you will find everything pertaining to a first class market, all kinds of early vegetables in their seasons. Their grocery department is the finest one in the city, and everything in its line can be found at its lowest prices. Their fish department contains everything pertaining to that line, both salt and fresh. So you see by trading with them you can get almost everything, and all under one roof. A good chance to hitch your horses, and away from the cars. They do the largest business in their lines of any firm in Springfield, so you will readily see that, handling so many goods, they don't have time to get stale. Now, when you come to Springfield, call and see us, get our prices, examine our goods (as we have men for that business alone) whether you want to buy or not. If it is so you cannot come, send your orders or goods by some one else, and we will do just as well by you as though you came. If you take the Springfield Republican you will generally see our advertisements on the first page, at the top of the column next to the last one. It will pay you to read them. Remember the place. A. F. NILES & SON, 128, 130, 132 MAIN STREET, SPRINGFIELD.

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE AT AUCTION.—Will be sold at Public Auction, on Tuesday, May 22, 1888, at 10 o'clock a. m., on the premises, the farm and buildings thereon, together with personal property, belonging to the estate of Anna F. Chandler.

Said place is located in the town of Monson, Mass., on the corner of Chestnut street and Tobey Avenue, being what is known as the old "Tobey Homestead," consisting of about 30 acres, divided into mowing pasturage and wood lot, with a never failing spring of pure water running through pipes to the house and barn.

Also a good water privilege running directly through the place, with dam on pond capable of watering the land and feeding a water wheel of from six to 10 horse power.

Nature has endowed this place so as to make it the most desirable location for a mansion or summer house to be found in this vicinity. The "site" commands a view from the extreme south to the north of Palmer, taking in the Quaboag river branch for five miles. The water privilege will furnish abundant pure water for house, fountains, etc., and in addition will furnish sufficient power to run a small factory.

Only 10 or 15 minutes' walk from depot and post office. Eventually the place will be valuable for building lots. Can be examined one week before date of sale.

That Feeling

of exhaustion expressed in the words "all run down," indicates a thin and depraved state of the blood, reacting upon the nervous system. Nothing will reach this trouble with more speed and certainty than Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"I was all run down," writes Mrs. Alice West, of Jefferson, W. Va., "before I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and now I am every day. I intend using it till my health is perfectly restored."

GAINING IN STRENGTH

"Being very weak and despondent after an illness which caused frequent loss of blood, I tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and two bottles have restored me to my former health," writes Miss Blanche S. Brownell, 4 Boylston Place, Boston, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles $5.

PURIFY YOUR BLOOD.

Impurities in the blood produce diseases. Bodily and mental health depend upon a healthy condition of the blood. The blood, particularly in the spring and during the hot summer months, becomes clogged with impurities, which poison it and generate disease. A harmless blood purifier, without a particle of mineral poison in it, such as mercury or potash, is necessary to remove these impurities and to restore the healthy tone of mind and body. The best purifier and tonic known to the world is Swift's Specific (S. S. S.). In regard to its wonderful purifying and tonic powers we give a few testimonials as follows:

Mr. Wm. A. Siebold, with Geo. P. Rowell & Co., 10 Spruce street, New York, writes March 29, 1888: "I feel it my duty, for the benefit of others who may be afflicted as I was, to write you this letter, which you can use as my testimony in any way you choose. I will answer any inquiry from others in relation to the facts herewith stated. In February last I suffered great pain and inconvenience from boils all over my neck; I could not turn my head without acute pain, and my blood was in poor condition. After trying all the usual remedies in such cases, and finding no relief, by the persuasion of Mr. J. W. Fears, manager of the New York office, I usedone bottle of S. S. S., and improved rapidly, and very soon I was entirely relieved of my 'Job's Comforters.' Now not a sign of my affliction can be seen. I feel strong and cheerful. S. S. S. is a fine tonic as proved in my case. I sleep soundly and my appetite is good."

"Dr. J. N. Cheney, a well-known physician, writes from Ellaville, Ga.: "I use S. S. S. in convalescent fever cases with the best results. It will, in my judgment, prevent summer dysentery, if one will take a few bottles in the spring, thus preparing the bowels for the strains of summer."

Mrs. Scott Liston, 116 Zane street (Island), Wheeling, West Virginia, writes: "Having used S. S. S. for the blood, I can safely say that it beats anything I have used to cleanse the blood and make a new being out of a person."

Mr. M. S. Hamlin, Winston, N. C., writes: "I use it every spring. It always builds me up, giving me appetite and digestion, and enabling me to stand the long, trying, enervating, hot summer days. On using it I soon become strong of body and easy of mind."

The Girls.

The girls are fond of gay arA;
They love to kiss a baB;
InconsistanC they oft display,
And they'll eat canD—may be.

They'll expect to marE wealth
And Fforts make to do it;
They're fond of euloG; poor health
Most all Hieve and rue it.

They love Is cream; stick on their hats
A blueJ quite stupendous;
They play croakK which ends in spats
And busL show tremendous!

They'll write a gushing poM sweet;
With tears their eyes will glisN;
A pianO they will beat
While folks unhapP listen.

Their Qriosity is great;
They like a hero loveR;
They bang their tresS most ornate
And thus their buT cover.

They'll shake you like agU, too,
And enV feel and show it;
If single, they will W
For they're Xpert and know it.

They seldom know the reason Y
And often they are laZ,
& if you love them, they will try
To drive you almost crazy.

'TWAS EVER THUS.

The good, trusting, simple-hearted old farmer sat reading for the third or fourth time a letter from his oldest son, who was at college.

"Mariar," he said, "jes' look-a-here. This boy Josh says he kin knock a base ball over the fence every time. Jes' think of that. Won't he jes' surprise the neighbors when he takes his turn splitten rails next vacation?"

"Won't he, though. I tell you he'll be a great help to you, father."

"An' he says here that his arm is two inches bigger than it was when he left home. Gracious, but he'll be a master hand when throws of his coat and help his father clearin' logs."

"Yes, indeed, there ain't nothin' to make a man out of a boy like sendin' him to college. But what's that comin' up the lane there?"

"Well, I'll be doggoned! How that little paper thing that it's smokin' do smell."

"Jest look at that collar an' them pants," said his wife.

"An' that glass into its eye. I'll bet a turnip that it's one of these dime museum curiosities. It's comin' into the house."

"Great Scott! Mariar!"

"Why, what's the matter!"

"By hokey, if it ain't Josh!" And the old man went out into the barn, climbed up into the hay-loft, and shed big, briny tears.—Merchant Traveler.

HAD BEEN WAITING FOR HIM.

The other day I was in the treasury department of a theater for a while. It was a matinee day. Among the people in line was a chap whose make up indicated that he was in the city to see the sights.

"I would like to have one of your best seats," he said, as he looked in at the window just as a chicken in a coop looks out at a grain of corn it cannot reach.

"Dollar and a half," was the reply.

"Got any cheaper?"

"Oh, yes; got 'em for a $1, 75, 50, and 25 cents.

"Gimme a 50 cents ticket."

"All right; there you are."

"Has the show begun yet?"

"Not yet."

"How long before it will begin?"

"Just as soon as you get seated," said the treasurer, in a way that was matter of fact. "We have been waiting for you."

"Hey?" said the countryman.

"I say we have been waiting for you. I was afraid you wouldn't come. Please step in so as not to keep the company waiting."

The countryman looked at the treasurer for a half minute, and then asked, "How did you know I was comin?"—Chicago Mail.

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one in warm weather, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

"I was all run down and unfit for business. I was induced to take a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it built me right up so that I was soon able to resume work. I recommend it to all who are afflicted." D. W. BRATE, stone-cutter, No. 4 Martin St., Albany, N. Y.

Where Is Thy Home?

Joy hath brightened my pathway, pleasure and mirth
Have come like a dream to this beautiful earth;
I have bent my ear to the voice of their song
As it floated in music and gladness along;
I have trod through the maze of the giddy dance,
Where joy hath been borne on every glance;
I have knelt in devotion at beauty's shrine,
And the love of the pure in heart hath been mine;
But then, even then in mine hour of pride
That low voice of warning hath been at my side,
And with it came home the first thrill of fear,
"Away! Oh, away! for thy home is not here."

I turned to knowledge, to science, to find
The home of a sorrowing, unsatisfied mind;
By the midnight lamp I have bent o'er the page
That was rich with the lore of the ancient sage;
And deemed that the lustre of wisdom might fling
A joy, or a beauty o'er each sorrowful thing;
But vain was the search, while a spirit is chained
To a world that sorrow and sin have profaned;
Then that low voice of warning hath come, calm and clear,
"Away! Oh, away! for thy home is not here."

Where then is thy home? Go ask of that star
That gleams in the vault of the heavens afar!
It will tell thee of a home where the righteous are blest;
Where the lonely and weary at last find rest.
'Tis the home of affection, where voices of love
Eternally sound in those mansions above.
Oh, who would not yearn to hasten away
From this being of sorrow, these shackels of clay
When that voice like a spirit comes borne on the air,
Away! Oh, away! for thy home is not here."

MOD.

A TRAGEDY AVERTED—TWO LOVE AFFAIRS.

Anywhere else she would have been called Maud, but Smoketon people were too busy making money to pay proper attention to diphthongs; so by them she was simply called "Mod."

Smoketon was not so large a place as one might imagine from the mere number of its factories. It crawled along in a blackly unwholesome manner, upon the banks of one of the loveliest rivers in the world, to a very unfair length, but was in parts scarcely more than half a mile wide, being shut in on the east by beautiful rolling green hills, over which it had made a grimy and ineffectual effort to climb. Among these hills flowed clear mountain streams, doubling and winding many times on the way to the great river to which, when the snow melted in the spring upon the hilltops, they very often brought a larger tribute than was quite convenient.

It was indeed a beautiful country. Champ Preston said, in his languid way, when he visited the place, that the part of Smoketon which the Lord made was a perfect success, adding that he had never before visited a town where the people so bowed down to money, and possessed so little of it themselves, for there were no millionaires in Smoketon.

Mod's surname was Bangs, the vowel of which was unduly prolonged by the Smoketonians, as her diphthong was unjustly shortened. There was nothing visibly heroic about Mod. She was the eldest daughter of a Smoketon operative, teaching in room No. 6, Ward 11, of the Smoketon public schools. She was small and slender, with a protruding forehead, lifeless-looking sandy hair, and small, dull and unexpressive eyes. She was also an enthusiast in her profession, and had dim longings after "culture" and cravings for "sweetness and light." Above all she cherished a romance and worshipped a hero.

Stephen Dare was not all a bad fellow, especially in his own opinion. He was a handsome young giant, with a frank, merry face, unusually obscured by a cloud of soot; for Stephen, though only twenty-five years old, was a "boss" at Brown's mill, the largest nail mill in Smoketon. He was well-off, too—wealthy for a place whose richest men only counted by tens of thousands; so it is not wonderful, perhaps, that he was much petted and spoiled by the Smoketon lasses, even though his "schooling" had scarcely passed beyond an elementary knowledge of the three "Rs."

Stephen and Mod had toddled about in each other's company when both of them wore dresses; they had been deskmates during the boy's brief experience of school life, and had confided their joys and sorrows each to the other, although Mod was rather the better listener.

The Eleventh Ward school house was on Stephen's direct way home from his work, and as Mod always remained there until six o'clock, to study, Stephen had got into the habit of calling for her; and thence, one September afternoon, they were walking home together, when they first saw Myra Tracy.

Stephen's hands were in his pockets, his shoulders well squared under the shabby old coat, and his full breadth of chest displayed in its garniture of blue checked shirt; he was whistling under his breath, and his chin, dark with soot and a three days' growth of beard, was carried proudly in the air. Mod's eyes were red with a fit of weeping into which she had been betrayed at the close of one of those days which come to every teacher, when the spirit of evil seems to get into everything and everybody. She wore a faded, pink gingham dress, and carried a dilapidated lunch basket in her gloveless hand.

In this guise they turned a corner, and came suddenly upon a lady dressed in deep mourning, who was gazing around her in perplexity. She was tall, slender, and exquisitely graceful, with a wild rose complexion, and large pathetic gray eyes, from which, as they approached, she sent a long glance straight into Stephen's heart.

"Excuse me," she said, in low, musical tones, "but I wonder if you can direct me to Mr. Tracy's?"

"L. S. Tracy, of Brown's mill?" asked Mod, as Stephen, without even the presence of mind to remove his hat, could only ram his hands further into his pockets and stare at her in silence.

The faintest possible smile wavered around Myra Tracy's beautiful mouth, as she bowed in silence.

"Oh, then, L. S. Tracy lives on the next street to this. Your nearest way will be to cross the railroad, and go up the hill through that alley by the carpenter's shop; it will bring you out directly opposite his house."

"Thank you, so much," and with another smile and bow, Miss Tracy moved gracefully away, somewhat amused at the novelties which had come into her life, in the shape of alleys by carpenters' shops, and handsome young workmen who were stricken dumb by her charms.

"By jinks! ain't she a daisy?" exclaimed Stephen, recovering his breath and his Smoketon vernacular when the vision was gone.

"You never took off your hat, Steve," said Mod, glancing with a strange, new pain in her heart at the man's flushed face and sparkling eyes.

"Oh, confound the hat! I forgot it! I say, Mod, she must be Tracy's niece. You know his brother died in Philadelphia last month, and I heard his daughter was to come here to teach her uncle's children. This must be the very girl."

"Guess I ought to call, if she is a teacher," said Mod a little bitterly.

Stephen replied promptly:

"I don't see why you shouldn't. She is awfully swell, but I bet you've got as much money, every time. Look here, Mod, don't tell anybody, but I wouldn't mind marrying that girl!"

"Whether she'd have you or not, I suppose?"

"Have me? She'd be lucky to get me; poor as a church mouse—and a teacher! She'd jump at me!"

"I know you'd be sorry for it, then, for those Eastern girls never know anything about housework. She'd just sit and hold her hands———"

"Not she! I'll take care of that," with a loud laugh. "As for work, she'd soon learn, and of course I should expect to keep a girl."

Mod came to a dead halt before a store they were passing.

"Won't you drop in and order your cookstove?" she asked sarcastically; "the rest of your arrangements seem to be complete."

"Don't you worry," replied Stephen, laughing good humoredly; "that will be ready in time for the wedding," and they went on together again.

But Stephen was even more in earnest than Mod supposed.

It was not a difficult matter to obtain an introduction to Miss Tracy, and when he asked permission to call, the girl had not, as she said afterwards, sufficient presence of mind to refuse. Myra, indeed, was profoundly amused at herself, and scarce less so at Stephen. The handsome, illiterate young giant was a new type to the high-bred, "cultured" Philadelphian; and though she considered flirting a very unladylike proceeding, her æsthetic interest was sufficiently visible to afford Stephen all the encouragement he needed.

But for its elements of possible tragedy, the situation would have been rather a comical one to a looker-on who could have read the hearts of those interested.

Stephen Dare was thoroughly accustomed to consider himself a great catch, and it never entered into his calculations to be regarded as an inferior by any one who possessed less money than himself. He was simply and frankly unable to estimate worth by any other standard. Birth, education, refinement, he considered accidental qualities, like the shape of one's nose; the first always valueless, the second and third occasionally useful as a means of support, and not bad for women.

It was no doubt the peculiar delicacy of Myra's beauty, and the dainty polish of her manners, that made her so attractive to him, and perhaps it was scarcely his fault that even on those points he was half incapable of appreciating her. Smoketon manners were by no means elaborately finished; were, in fact, but roughly blocked out. So it is a small wonder that when Myra lifted her great, pathetic eyes to him and murmured:

"Thank you so much," in return for his gifts of fruit and candy, he should fancy that her manner meant far, far more than the very loud-voiced gratitude of the belles of Smokekton.

On the other hand while Myra readily understood that Stephen admired her, it would have been impossible for her to realize that he looked upon her in full security as his—whenever he chose to claim her. The gulf between them was so impassably abyssmal. It was true she had never given him more than a grain—of what her own conscience, or a man in her own circle, would have called encouragement. She had refused his invitations to drives, theatres, etc., without hesitation or exception, but on the plea of her deep mourning, and with eyes of such tender sadness, that Stephen believed to be "only those confounded fashions" that stood in the way. And when he came to the house it was quite impossible to refuse to see him. He was a good-hearted, honest sort of a fellow, Myra thought, though rather monotonous if one saw him seven times a week, for he had absolutely no general information, and his range of thought was narrow in the extreme.

"That terrible Miss Bangs, who had called one afternoon in an apple-green silk and velvet bonnet, which would have been horrible even had she not been so conscious of it, and who was so evidently in love with 'Steve,' as she called him, but she was twice as intelligent as he; a very good wife, for him, too, if he could be brought to believe it. It is so much better for people to marry in their own class."

The truth was Myra, as well as Stephen, judged her fellows by a standard of her own establishing, and the one who most truly measured things by the Eternal verities, was poor, homely, neglected Mod.

Consequently when Stephen, at last, asked Myra to be his wife, and was rejected with a haughty surprise which she could not quite conceal, it was Mod who was the least astonished. Stephen believed he understood the whole matter perfectly, for it was, in fact, the presence of Champ Preston in Smoketon which had hurried him on to a declaration.

"A long, lazy, tow-headed fool," was his terse description of the all-conquering Champ, whose soft voice, handsome face, languid elegance of manner, not to speak of his attractions in the way of stocks, bonds, and landed property, had for several reasons made him the lion of eastern society. He had been abroad at the time of Mr. Tracy's death.

Immediately upon his return he followed Myra to Smoketon, where he coolly informed her, it was his intention to bivouac with the aborigines until she was ready to be married and return with him to civilization.

Myra readily allowed herself to be persuaded. Smoketon was more distasteful to her than ever, since Stephen had taken his dismissal in such vehemently bad part.

"He seemed actually to think I was in love with him, and declined to be convinced that I was not," she confided to Champ.

"They all do, my dear," he replied languidly. "If a fellow is decently civil to one of the daughters of the land she thinks directly he is wildly enamored of her. Don't be afraid of this aspiring but dingy suitor; high tragedy in love has gone quite out of style, I assure you."

"I'm not afraid," she answered; "but you should have heard how he went on. It was thoroughly shocking and disgusting."

"Horribly bad form," assented Champ, meditatively caressing his long, yellow moustache.

Stephen fully believed himself to have been outrageously trifled with.

"I don't blame her," he said to the long-suffering Mod, "for he's got about ten times the money I have; but it's pretty rough on a fellow, all the same, to be sacked like this; and I'll get even with him yet!"

"That's the trouble," said Mod, perfectly unconscious that she was enunciating a profound truth. "That's the trouble, Stephen, about money. You are certain to meet some one who is worth more than you are. For my part, I wish there was no such thing, people care so much about it."

Stephen carried matters with a very high hand. He laughed more, drank more, and talked louder and faster than ever before in his life; but once when he and Mod were passed by the stylish equipage in which Champ and Myra were driving, poor Mod felt her heart sink within her at the dark glances Stephen sent after the pair, muttering under his breath: "Go it while you're young, old fellow; but you ain't married yet."

Mod had ample opportunity to observe him closely, for he set up a rival team to Champ, and took her out behind it every day, usually managing to cross the track of the other couple once at least during the drive. He also purchased a revolver, and practised daily upon a silver half-dime until his incredible performance made poor Mod's blood run cold.

Ought not Champ Preston to be warned? But how, and of what? She could only wait and watch.

The wedding day arrived—a warm February morning—pouring with rain. Indeed, it had rained for two days over all the surrounding country. The river was unusually high, and the Smoketon Daily Trumpet had already warned its readers to expect a flood. But Smoketonians were thoroughly accustomed to floods. Some families on the low ground near the river were washed out regularly every spring, and accepted the misfortune calmly as a necessary part of the inevitable spring cleaning; so the warning blast was less effective than perhaps the foresight of the Trumpet deserved.

"Happy is the bride the sun shines on," quoted Stephen grimly, as he stood at his chamber window carefully examining his revolver; "and blessed is the corpse that the rain falls on," he added a moment later.

Mod's premises adjoined his, and she saw it all. The marriage ceremony was to take place at 9 o'clock, and the happy pair were to go directly to the railway station.

He was not among the spectators whom even the pouring rain could not keep away from the church-door, and once satisfied of this, Mod turned her steps toward the station. There he was, sure enough, deep in conversation with a railway official.

There was a strange glitter in his eyes, and his dark, handsome face was deadly pale. From head to heel he was buttoned carefully in a shining rubber coat, and Mod felt sure that in his bosom lay a harmless-looking toy, bright as a jewel, that needed to be kept dry.

Incased also in rubber, and wearing a heavy green veil, it was easy for the girl to have passed him unrecognized and establish herself in the door of the ladies' waiting-room toward which his back was turned as he leaned a shoulder against the wall, and whence she could have reached out her hand and laid it on his shoulder.

"Goin' away?" asked the official, with that falling inflection which denotes a question in Smoketon.

"Not exactly," replied Stephen, with a grim laugh, "but I know a fellow that is, pretty far, too. I came to see him off."

"Oh!" said the official. "Well, he won't get pretty far to-day. Tracks flooded in every direction; river on a regular high. Hain't a train come in this mornin'; and none ain't a comin'."

Distances were short in Smoketon, and Mod was back at the church with her information before the ceremony was over and set the news afloat so successful, that it soon reached the bridal party. There was a hasty, whispered consultation; then the bride and groom stepped into a carriage and returned to Mr. Tracy's, while the best man sprang into another in order to inquire into the accuracy of the tidings.

Stephen saw the carriage drive up, and, drawing himself up to his full height, plunged his hand into his breast. But only one person stepped from the vehicle, and that was not the one for whom he waited.

As he looked on with fiercely gleaming, bewildered eyes, a hand was laid upon his arm, and Mod, looked up into his face; Mod, in her draggled waterproof, with her green veil pushed up from a face transformed for the moment into beauty by the light of the soul within.

"Stephen," she said, holding his eyes with hers, "they will not leave to-day. The river is rising; all South Smoketon is under water, the people are drowning. Come with me and save them. Come, Stephen," she added solemnly, as he hesitated, gazing in surprise at her transformed countenance, "prove yourself a man worth loving. Let that be your revenge."

"Blamed if I don't!" said Stephen Dare.

He walked forward a step, drew his hand from his breast, and with a whirl of his wrist sent something bright, gleaming, and sparkling into the fast approaching water. Then, taking Mod by the elbow, he hurried her away to her own home, where he put her within the door, saying, briefly:

"Now you're safe, Mod; stay there" and hastened on.

Stephen Dare was the best oarsman in Smoketon, but he found himself surpassed that day, not only in skill, but in cool, ready daring; for Champ Preston had been the crack oar of his college and had pulled stroke in many a boat-race, and now with his bride's kisses warm on his lips, he felt strong with the strength of ten.

"I didn't think he had it in him, the blamed galoot," said Stephen, with unwilling admiration.

The languid, blue eyes were quietly keenly alert; the tall, slender form proved to have muscles of iron under the smooth, white skin Stephen had so much despised. And strongest muscles, the readiest courage had their work cut out for them that day.

Apart at times, at other times together, the rivals toiled, bringing many a boat-load of half-drowed wretches to safety and such comfort as was obtainable, while the rain still fell and the water rose steadily higher. As the darkness increased, it grew more difficult to avoid the logs, beams, are wrecks of all descriptions which the terrible river swept downward with resistless force.

One of these crushed at last into Champ Preston's boat and crushed in its side, as though it had been an egg shell. In half a moment it had filled and sunk, and the rowers were struggling in the black, raging current. Stephen's boat was close at hand, and rushed at once to the rescue.

One, two, were picked up alive; the third, with a small, fatal bruise upon his temple; for the fourth they searched some moments without success.

"And married, too, this morning, poor fellow!" said one of the rescuers, compassionately.

They were pulling away from the place, when Stephen caught a glimpse of a white face and yellow hair entangled in the branches of a tree that hung over the water.

Should he speak? Why endanger the lives of all aboard by going back for perhaps a dead man? Besides, had not fate paid off his score against his rival? Then why interfere?

But Stephen had for hours been spending himself for others, and therefore the struggle was short before he said quietly:

"Hold up, fellows. Yonder he is."

* * * * *

Myra and Mod in the meantime had not been idle. There was much to be done for those taken out of the water, and, as the two worked together, they learned, if not to like, at least to respect each other. Every room in Mr. Tracy's house had been thrown open to the sufferers; mattresses, beds, hastily improvised, couches of all descriptions, covered the floors, and there did not seem to be room for even one more, when suddenly Stephen stood before them, saying anxiously:

"Now, girls, don't either of you fly off the handle. There's no charming young widow in this party, for he's alive and here."

Myra Preston saw the white, unconscious face of a form which four men were bringing carefully in; and sprang toward it with a low cry.

"I saw him when the rest had given him up," said poor Stephen, gazing wistfully after her, as she followed those who bore her husband to a long, sweet recovery. "I picked him out of a tree myself, and broke the news to her as careful as a lamb, and she never even said 'beans'!"

"Did you save him, Steve? O, Steve, did you really?"

Stephen turned and looked for a moment into Mod's face, then, opening his arms, drew her to his breast, where, dripping wet as he was, she said her cheek in rapturous content.

"I won't be left by every girl in town," said Stephen. "I'll marry you, Mod. You kept me from making a blame fool of myself this morning, and I'll make you a good husband."

Mod's only answer was a happy smile, and Stephen, bending his handsome head, repaid with a kiss the lips that had saved his soul.

The cheapest and simplest gymnasium in the world—one that will exercise every bone and muscle in the body—is a flat piece of steel notched on one side, fitting tightly into a wooden frame, and after being greased on both sides with a bacon rind, rubbed into a stick of wood laid lengthwise of a sawbuck.—New York Medical Times.

Baby's On A Strike.

Oh, insurrection, anarchy,
Revolt are in the air!
Our blessed baby's up in arms,
And nurse is in despair.

He lords it with a hand that's high
And mighty, tho' a mite;
He bawls and howls and drives his ma
To desperation quite.

He sits enthroned, a little god,
Tied into his high chair;
His awful nod says, plain as words,
"I won't be good, so there!"

By sisters, cousins, aunts and all
Cajoled, caressed and kissed,
He will not budge an inch, this bold
Young budding Anarchist.

Who shall subdue this pestilent
But precious little tyke?
What's to be said, what's to be done
When baby's on a strike.

FOR THE BREAKFAST TABLE.

During this intermediate season, when winter dishes begin to grow monotonous and early spring products have not yet put in an appearance, then it is that the housekeeper racks her brains in the endeavor to invent new dishes or to improve upon old ones in order that her "gude mon" may go to his work satisfied and with a mind free from the depressing influences of that demon, indigestion. Breakfast is in my opinion, a most important meal, and housewives can scarcely give too much attention to its preparation, eaten as it is, before entering upon the duties of the day. When the stomach is filled with heavy food the strength and vigor of the system is called to the assistance of the digestive apparatus, hence the mind becomes dull, the brain refusing to do its work when the blood has been diverted to other channels.

In the first place, open all the windows in the dining-room, so that the air will be fresh and sweet. Make your table attractive in appearance, bright glassware and china, with a dish of fruit or vase of flowers to grace the center. In the country wild flowers can always be had from May to November, and during the remainder of the year, a handful of evergreen twigs or holly leaves can be arranged with pretty effect in the dish of fruit. If city housekeepers would buy half a dozen pansy stalks in spring, they would be surprised to find what a source of pleasure it is to have a cluster of these blossoms with their quaint faces in the center of the breakfast table. With plenty of moisture and a little sunlight, they will bloom profusely all the summer through.

But now to our bill of fare. Whenever possible begin your breakfast with fresh fruit. When that is not attainable use the canned or dried fruit. Then follows one or the other of the various cereals, oatmeal, hominy, rice, etc., but care must be taken that any one of these does not pall upon the taste. For students and brain-workers fresh eggs or fish is the best morning meal, while laborers and mechanics require more animal food with their bread and butter. Never put pastry of any kind on the breakfast table. Fresh milk or water are the best drinks, though coffee, if taken at all, should always be at breakfast rather than in the evening. Pieces of bread cut round, toasted and arranged upon a platter with a spoonful of delicate scrambled eggs on each piece is a nice breakfast dish. Toasted crackers with a sauce of boiled milk, seasoned, and thickened with grated cheese, makes a pleasant variation, and stewed, fried or roasted potatoes are served with the beefsteak.

What remains of the baked macaroni from yesterday's dinner can be warmed over with milk and placed on slices of toast for breakfast. Milk toast is always a welcome addition. Be sure to season the milk and thicken it with a spoonful of cornstarch. It is more appetizing than is the milk is plain.

A few very light griddle cakes, buckwheat especially, will taste good with molasses or maple syrup. The various brands of prepared flour are a saving of time and eggs in griddle cake baking. Equal quantities of the flour and milk, a few whisks of the beater and your batter is ready.

A little thought the night before, five minutes given to planning, will enable the housekeeper always to have a reply ready for that troublesome question, so apt to harass her mind on awakening, "What shall I make for breakfast?" — Good Housekeeping.

THE BAD LITTLE BROTHER.

A mother on Madison avenue lately requested her daughter, who is approaching womanhood, to give her beau a hint that she must not sit up later than 10 o'clock. This, the girl was reluctant to do, but her little brother threatened that unless she did he would open the parlor door and announce the maternal edict. The sister supposed that she had put a quietus on her brother by reminding him of his playing hookey and forging his mother's name on excuses from school to go skating, not forgetting to mention a litle riding whip his mamma kept in her room. All this, however, was not enough to keep the youth from getting even with his sis's beau for not giving him anything Christmas. The other evening he got an alarm o'clock with a bell as loud as the gong on the Brooklyn bridge bob, and placed it under the sofa where his sister and her betrothed were to do their spooning. The hands were pointed at 10. The unsuspecting girl heard the tick, but took it to be her lover's Waterbury. He was just tickling her ear with a yarn about a horse his papa was going to buy when the gong sounded. There was a pause—and then, as though understanding the meaning, he grabbed his hat and never stopped running until he struck the door-stoop, when he flew. The boy had iced the steps. The little brother now takes a cushion to school with him.—Albany Journal.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 25, 1888.

THE German emperor is maintaining a very decided and cheering improvement of late, and may yet live to be a blessing to his country.

THE Presbyterian general assembly, now in session at Philadelphia, refuses to sanction the use of the revised version of the Bible in public worship.

E. G. WALKER, a colored lawyer, has been nominated for an assessor of Boston by Mayor O'Brien. He will be the first colored man to occupy the position. The mayor is evidently a good politician.

HARVARD students have been voting for president, the result showing 413 votes for Cleveland, 251 for Blaine, 48 for Sherman, 46 for Depew, 25 for Edmunds, 21 for Lincoln, and so on. Now let's hear from Hull.

THE lobby is making itself unpleasantly conspicuous at the state house as the session draws toward its close, nowise abashed by last year's Beverly revelations. The Legislature would add much to its comfort and self-respect by at least keeping the lobbyists off the floor of the Senate and House.

HIGH LICENSE is to receive a crucial test in Philadelphia, when the 5763 saloons now open are to be reduced to 1258. This is a violent change, and if the law is enforced faithfully its effects will be felt deeply throughout the city. The result will be watched closely in every part of the country.

A BILL has passed the Senate at Washington authorizing the erection of post office buildings in all towns where the office receipts have exceeded $3000 annually for three years. The proposition is a good one, and if carried out would bring to a business system the work which heretofore has depended largely on political favoritism.

THE Senate has passed the ballot reform bill promptly and without change, though every Democratic member voted for amendment or delay. It hardly seems possible that the Democrats in the House will adopt an obstructive course toward a measure so excellent as this, and it is to be hoped that it will go though the lower branch with equal promptness.

CARELESS law-making has killed the local option law passed by the last Michigan Legislature, the supreme court of the state having decided that the subject-matter of the law is not expressed in its title, as required by the constitution. This decision nullifies the vote of 35 counties in favor of prohibition, and makes the liquor sellers correspondingly happy.

A GAME of base ball in the suburbs of Philadelphia last Sunday attracted a crowd of nearly 40,000 people. It is safe to say that all the churches in the city did not contain as many worshipers as that during the day. With another game advertised for next Sunday, there would seem to be a good field for active work in that city both by home missionaries and the police.

SOUTHWESTERN ILLINOIS is suffering terribly from the Mississippi river floods. With four hundred square miles of the state under water, people drowned out, crops ruined, cattle and horses drowned, and an enormous destruction of railroad property, it is doubtful if $4,000,000 will cover the loss. The loss of life has been very slight, but thousands are left homeless and desolate.

THERE are four presidential tickets in the field already,—Lockwood and Love of the Equal Rights party; Streeter and Cunningham, of the Union Labor party; Cowdry and Wakefield, representing McGlynn's United Labor party; and Redstone and Colvin, upon an Industrial ticket. The Prohibitionists are yet to be heard from, to say nothing of the Republicans and Democrats, and the smaller fry who may yet blossom out.

BOSTON has been planning to construct a park on Castle Island, where Fort Independence is located, and otherwise improving and beautifying the place, but a bill giving the city permission to make the changes has been vetoed by President Cleveland, as Gen. Sheridan, the secretary of war and the chief of engineers strongly objected to the scheme, on military grounds, as they regard the island as important to the defense of the city.

AN interesting railroad scheme is thus hinted at by the Hartford Courant:

> "What if the Boston and Maine Railroad should lease the New York, New Haven and Hartford and the New York and New England and operate both as a part of its line from New York clear through to the far 'down East?' The Boston and Maine, paying 10% dividends, with its stock above 200, has already taken in the Eastern and the Boston and Lowell, and consequently the Massachusetts Central. Its policy is decidedly aggressive, and long ago the story spread that New York was its destination. It has fought the Boston and Albany already, and is not afraid of it, as the Consolidated Road is. If the Consolidated takes the New England that is supposed to mean war with the Boston and Albany. But if the Boston and Maine takes both, it will only be extending a policy that it has already initiated, and it can work its two acquisitions together."

JUDGE JULIUS ROCKWELL of Lenox, father of Congressman Rockwell, and for 27 years an honored judge of the superior court, died at his home last Saturday, in consequence of being thrown from his carriage on the 11th inst. Judge Rockwell was the first nominee of the Republican party for governor in this state, in 1855. Prior to that time he had been a Whig, and had served several terms in the Legislature and in Congress, besides filling out Edward Everett's term in the United States Senate. He had just passed his 83d birthday.

IN a recent interview Mr. Blaine said to a reporter that "he could not see why so many should assume, even in matters of greatest importance to his domestic and personal interests, as well as those of his party, that it was impossible for him to be honest." The trouble is with Mr. Blaine's fool friends, who appear determined to place him in the attitude of secretly desiring the nomination for the presidency, while publicly withdrawing from the field. It is a great pity that he does not squelch them with a few decisive words which could leave no shadow of doubt as to his purpose, even in the mind of the most blind devotee.

The Boston and Albany road will sell round-trip tickets June 1–6 to the annual meeting of the American Home Missionary Society at Saratoga for $5, good returning until June 18.

The match game of ball on the park Satday forenoon between the Palmer high school nine and the Monson Academy club resulted in a victory for the home team, the score standing 30 to 4.

A large canvas banner, announcing the base ball games, the time at which they are to be played and the clubs participating, is to be hung across Main street on the morning preceding the contests.

O. L. Slader, formerly proprietor of the restaurant at the old New London Northern station in Palmer, is now proprietor of Hotel Conanicut, on Conanicut Island in Narragansett Bay, near Newport.

Work on the electric light plant seems to progress very slowly, due in some measure to the delay in the arrival of the engine for the station. Some new poles have been set this week, and hoods placed thereon.

A nine from the intermediate school in this village played a nine at the state primary school last Saturday afternoon, and were beaten by the score of 50 to 21. The same teams will meet again to-morrow afternoon.

The Eastern Hampden Medical Society held its regular monthly meeting at the Converse House yesterday afternoon with a large attendance. Dr. G. E. Fuller of Monson read a paper, after which the physicians sat down to a fine supper.

About $40 was netted by the strawberry and ice cream social given by the Patterson Club at St Paul's Universalist church Tuesday evening. There was a good attendance, and the musical programme by the Palmer Orchestra was much enjoyed.

The Woman's Relief Corps invite all interested to contribute flowers and refreshments for Memorial Day. Donations of flowers are requested to be sent to G. A. R. hall next Tuesday afternoon, and refreshments to the same place Wednesday forenoon.

There was an unusual number of drunken men on the streets last Saturday night, and it was neither pleasant nor safe for a woman to pass through Main street. Several were arrested, and there were many more who ought to have spent the night in the "cooler."

J. A. Ryan, a Boston commercial traveler, had his room broken into at the Weeks house Wednesday night and about $20 stolen by some unknown person or persons. The entrance was made by turning the key with pliers. The amount stolen was made good by Landlord Weeks.

The Central street store of Brooks Brothers, the insolvent hardware dealers, has been closed indefinitely. Frank L. Brooks, one of the members of the firm, has gone to Westfield, where he has accepted a position as clerk in a hardware store. His place as local correspondent for the Springfield Republican is being filled by F. E. Cady.

The Second Baptist church has voted to build a two-story addition to the rear of its church edifice, 12 x 18 feet, which will give room for a commodious kitchen and other conveniencies on the ground floor, with choir and dressing rooms above, an arched opening into the audience room being made back of the pulpit platform. Work has been begun on the foundations this week.

At the adjourned meeting held in the district court room last Friday evening the Palmer Reading Room Association was formed, and these officers elected: President, W. H. Stowe; vice presidents, O. P. Allen and M. J. Dillon; secretary, A. C. Merritt; treasurer, L. E. Chandler; directors, H. P. Holden, Rev. T. J. Sullivan, W. A. Breckenridge, E. P. Ball, C. E. Fish, L. H. Gager, C. E. Fuller, C. L. Alexander, M. J. Dawson, L. E. Moore.

An effort is being made to have the Ruggles Street Quartette of Boston, said to be the finest in the city, at the closing exercises of the high school next month, and also to give a concert in the evening. The expense will be considerable, however, and the managementdoes not feel like engaging them unless a certain number of tickets can be engaged in advance. A paper will be left at LeGro & Lynde's drug store, and those who will take tickets are requested to leave their names there.

The match game of ball on the park tomorrow afternoon, between the Palmers and the Northampton Firemen, will doubtless be witnessed by a large crowd. The visiting team is an exceedingly strong one, and claims the championship of Western Massachusetts. The local team expects to be defeated, but they will try at any rate to give the visitors a good game. On Memorial Day Manager Kenefick has arranged for a game with the Thorndikes in the morning at that village, while in the afternoon the Thorndikes will meet the Palmers on the park here.

A subscription paper has been circulated among the business men this week to obtain money for the purchase of new uniforms for the Palmers, and donations have been very liberal. Manager Kenefick went to Boston Wednesday to select the uniforms, which the manufacturers will try and have ready by Memorial Day. They will cost about $90, and of that amount $80 has been subscribed. The new suits will be made from a fine quality of goods, and will probably last several seasons with careful usage, the present uniforms being of very cheap material and not expected to last very long.

A new train will be put on the Boston & Albany Railroad Monday, which will leave Springfield at 6.30 p. m., run accommodation, and arrive at this place at 7 p. m., for the accommodation of those who have long desired such a train. The new train will remain here over night and will start from here at 6.10 a. m. for Worcester, instead of from Springfield, as at present. The new arrangement is highly satisfactory to all residing at stations between Springfield and Palmer, and at points on the Ware River and New London Northern roads. The train on the latter road now going north at 5.30 p. m. will be help until 7, and instead of stopping at Amherst will be run through to Brattleboro.

Rev. C. H. Eaton of New York, formerly pastor of St. Paul's Universalist church in this place, sailed for Europe Tuesday, accompanied by Andrew Carnegie, the well-known steel manufacturer of Pittsburg, Pa. At London they are to be met by Mr. and Mrs. James G. Blaine, Miss Blaine, and others to the number of ten or twelve, and June 7th the party starts on a coaching trip of nearly 700 miles to Mr. Carnegie's summer residence at Cluney Castle, in Scotland. They will proceed with a tally-ho and four-in-hand, traveling leisurely along the east side of England and the old historic highways of England and Scotland, stopping at the old-fashioned taverns and being some five weeks on the road. Before his departure Mr. Eaton's congregation presented him with a purse of nearly $1000.

A Lawn Tennis Club.

A meeting was held at the parlors of the Weeks House last evening for the purpose of forming a lawn tennis club, and it was voted to call the new organization the Palmer Lawn Tennis club. These officers were elected: President, W. T. Wait; vice president, W. W. Hall; secretary and treasurer, J. P. Lynde, Jr.; honorary members, Clayton Chilson and E. G. Hastings. The membership fee for gentlemen is fixed at $3, while it was voted to exempt the ladies belonging to the club from paying any dues or assessments that may be required to maintain the organization, which starts off with a good membership and in a very prosperous condition. A vote of thanks was passed in recognition of the time and labor rendered by W. T. Wait in superintending the construction of the courts on Knox street, which are as fine as any club need ask for. The grounds will be open to members of the club at all times.

Death of Mrs. H. S. Burleigh.

In the death of Mrs. H. S. Burleigh Tuesday morning at her late residence near Mount Dumplin, the town loses an estimable and well-known resident, who passed away of heart failure at the age of 69. The deceased came to Three Rivers in 1839, being the widow of the late Benjamin A. Burleigh and the only surviving sister of the late Mrs. L. E. Strong. She was one of the oldest members of the Second Congregational church, and a woman of a hospitable and kindly nature, whose givings to the needy were generous and never-ceasing. She was the mother of nine children, seven of whom survive her: Dr. William E. Burleigh of San Diego, Cal., Miss Minnie S. Burleigh, one of the oldest teachers in the public schools of the town, and Miss Inez Burleigh, who is now attending Smith College, being among the number. The funeral was held at the Second Congregational church this afternoon at 2.30 o'clock, Rev. H. W. Pope officiating.

Memorial Day Programme.

The following order by the commander of L. L. Merrick Post will be the programme for the observance of Memorial Day:

GENERAL ORDER NO. 1.

In compliance with General Orders from National and Department headquarters, and the rules and usages of our order, the following observances of the approaching Memorial Day are hereby announced:

On Sunday, May 24th, this post, accompanied by the Woman's Relief Corps, will attend evening services at the Second Congregational church, Rev. H. W. Pope, pastor. This will be a union service. The comrades, with members of the Woman's Relief Corps, will meet at the Post rooms promptly at 6.30 p. m., and proceed from there to the church, where the services will commence at 7. The uniform for the day will be (so far as the members have them) the Grand Army uniform, white belt and gloves, and the G. A. R. and Memorial badges worn prominently on the left breast.

On Memorial Day, May 30th, the comrades will meet at the Post room promptly at 8 o'clock a. m., in full G. A. R. uniform and Memorial badges, to be ready to move promptly at 8.30 a. m. The Post, will move in the following order, preceeded by the Ware Cadet Band of 20 pieces and accompanied by invited guests, will proceed to Three Rivers and decorate the graves of deceased comrades in old cemetery, from there to cemetery at Four Corners, then through Thorndike to Catholic cemetery, from there to cemetery in Depot Village, where the ceremonies will be concluded, after which the Post with invited guests, will proceed to banquet hall to partake of a collation prepared by Woman's Relief Corps. After the collation the memorial address will be delivered in the Universalist church by the pastor, Rev. F. W. Betts, to which all are cordially invited.

A cordial invitation is extended to all old soldiers and sailors to accompany the Post Sunday evening before Memorial, and also on Memorial Day. It is the earnest wish of the commander that every one who bore arms in defense of our country will see the importance of properly observing the day set apart for the consecration of the memory of our departed heroes. This day, with the memories, comes to us with each returning anniversary with vivid force which others cannot feel.

As this is a legal holiday it it hoped that every old soldier will suitably observe the day, and it would be very pleasing to the members of L. L. Merrick Post if business would be generally suspended during the hours of decoration. By command of H. E. W. CLARK, Commander.

C. W. CROSS, Adjutant.

Palmer, May 24th, 1888.

Miss Ida Smith and Mrs. G. C. Ellis sang at St. Paul's Universalist church last Sunday, owing to the absence of Mrs. H. E. Huntley and Miss Van Wagner.

Plans for the Coming Season at Forest Lake Garden.

The coming season at Forest Lake Garden, the town's popular summer resort, promises to be a very successful one under the new management. The season opens there to-day, and will terminate about Oct. 1st, which will afford the local pleasure-seekers ample opportunity to secure rest and recreation, as the season has been considerably lengthened in order that all may be accommodated. The new management has decided to call the resort Forest Lake Garden, and that name appears upon all the time cards issued by the Boston & Albany Railroad. The largest sign in this section, 36 by 6 feet, has been built and will soon be erected at the station, and can be seen for miles up and down the Ware river valley, and from either of the railroads in that vicinity. The management has been unusually busy during the past few weeks making improvements and putting things in readiness for the rapidly-approaching season, and it is safe to state that much more labor will be required before the work is completed. The grounds have been thoroughly cleared of the brush and other collected rubbish that has been so noticeable there ever since the resort was opened to the public, while twelve new streets have been built through the forests, and small signs erected bearing the name of each, so that it now has the appearance of a little village. Circular flower gardens are being built upon the slopes, which will add greatly to the beauty of the place. Another notable improvement will be the construction of four very pretty rustic houses in different parts of the grove, while the two drinking places will be encircled by similar rustic structures, and there is a prospect that several new cottages will be added to those already there, but these will be constructed and owned by outside parties. F. P. Clark and M. L. Lane of Ware are among those who contemplate building some unique little cottages there, while there are several others undecided as yet regarding the matter. The management offers to lease a tract of land large enough to erect a cottage thereon for $3 per annum, and as many respectable persons as desire can have land at that price. The new feature, which will tend to make the resort a favorite place with the better class of pleasure seekers, is the religious services which will be held every Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, under the direction of Rev. E. Hitchcock of Ware, who will be assisted by the clergymen from the surrounding towns, while the management will continue to prohibit the sale of liquor on the grounds at all times. In the line of amusement a fine tennis court is among the probabilities, while a shooting range and a base ball diamond will be built before the season ends. The erection and provision of other places where the amusement lovers can find attraction and enjoyment are also contemplated by the proprietors. The old wharf at the steamboat landing has been removed and a new one built. The steamer "Lila-Maud" will hereafter be known as the "Favorite," having been thoroughly overhauled, repaired and repainted. There is every indication that boating will be as popular as ever, and several sailing craft have already been placed in the water. General Passenger Agent Hanson of the Boston & Albany road has placed tickets to the Lake on sale at nearly all the stations between Boston and Palmer, while he has also arranged so that on application at any time excursion parties can have a train at greatly reduced rates. Tickets are also on sale at the stations on the Athol branch and Central Massachusetts roads. A reunion will be held there next Thursday to celebrate the birthday anniversary of Miss M. A. Oliver. On the day following the Wesleyan Academy students will go there for an outing, while on Memorial Day the management announce a general picnic, with a dance in the evening. A Grand Army reunion will be held there about June 15, and the following day will be an event that the Unitarian society of Springfield will commemorate. The management is now arranging dates with several other parties, and altogether the season will be a busy one.

BONDSVILLE.

Adolph Girouard sells his horses, carriages, and other livery stock at auction to-morrow.

The young men of the town announce that they will give a picnic in the grove next Wednesday.

O. B. Smith is having a new concrete walk and driveway put in at his grounds.

The Ladies' Aid Society held a sociable Wednesday evening.

The village is having a small-pox scare, and everybody is being vaccinated, as the Caven family who lived over McNulty's in Springfield have moved into South Belchertown, just across the river, and the baby has come down with the disease.

THREE RIVERS.

Miss Libbie Porter of Belchertown visited friends here Tuesday.

Agent E. L. Derby is having his house connected with the N. L. N. depot by telegraph.

G. W. Cheney, overseer of the weave-room, has returned from a two-weeks' vacation.

Mrs. Andrew Hall was called to Spencer Thursday on account of her daughter being very sick.

The school teachers had a vacation last Friday to attend the teachers' convention in Springfield.

Mrs. E. L. Derby and son started Wednesday on a month's vacation, stopping at Orange, Athol and Gardner.

Mrs. A. E. Orcutt has added a new department to her store, a nice assortment of ladies' and childrens' shoes.

Rev. A. B. Cruchet, French Protestant minister, of Montreal, P. Q., will preach at the Union church next Sunday.

The members of the choir of the Union church gave H. E. Willis and wife a surprise last Monday night, they having gone to housekeeping recently. Mr. Willis has been a member of the choir for several years. Refreshments were served, and a dozen silver fruit knives and picks and a dozen china fruit plates were left them as a token of esteem.

WEST WARREN.

Rev. B. F. Kingsley is suffering with malaria.

Peter Cote and his brother Charles are spending a few weeks in Canada.

The proposed concert and ball for the benefit of the band has been postponed for a time.

Mrs. Charles Sherburn of Long Island is spending a few days with her mother, Mrs. Neu.

Geo. Maxfield, formerly of this place and recently of Holyoke, has moved to South Framingham, and will have charge of the Everett House.

The Knights of Labor are to have an afternoon social in Washington hall on Memorial Day. Messinger's orchestra will furnish music, and refreshments will be served in the hall.

The contract for building the new school house on South street has been awarded to Edward Bigoness, who bid $3600. The other proposals were $3725, $4202 and $4225. The building is to have two rooms, and be finished by the middle of August.

Burglars called at Hebert & Loiselle's store Friday night, but only secured a dollar or two in pennies, some cigars and a little jewelry. In "the dive" under Crossman's block they got a little refreshment for the inner man, and some more smokers. The glass in William Clark's store door was found smashed, but nothing indicated that they had been inside. Some suspicious looking tramps had been seen around the village that day and the day before, but whether they, or home talent did it, is not known.

LUDLOW.

The programme for Memorial Day is nearly complete. The veterans attend service on Sunday at the church in the village, Rev. Edward Day, pastor. Mr. Bowen, commander of the Springfield Post, G. A. R., is to be the orator Memorial Day, and to accommodate him, the services will be in the forenoon in the Congregational church at the Center at 10.30 o'clock, the decoration of the graves being early in the morning. The Indian Orchard band is engaged, and vocal music is to be provided.

A large number of citizens attended the town meeting Monday to take action upon the proposition of Mr. Hubbard, treasurer of the Ludlow Mills Mfg. Co., to erect and deed to the town a memorial building in memory of his father. Mr. Hubbard was present and showed plans of the building, which is to be built of brick with stone trimmings, to be two stories high, built and furnished in the most substantial manner. The upper story is to be used for a library and reading room, the lower story for social and literary purposes. No town or political meetings are to be allowed. The conditions are very simple and favorable to the town. Mr. Hubbard proposes to bear the expense of caring for the building as long as he should be in his present position and circumstances, but wished its acceptance by the town to insure its perpetual use for the purposes proposed. The town, with no dissent whatever, accepted the gift and also the library which the company already have, consisting of 1500 carefully-selected volumes. Appropriate resolutions were passed expressing the grateful feeling of the town for the two bequests. It is just what the town most needs to stimulate more literary interest among the young people.

THORNDIKE.

D. J. Mahoney has accepted a position with Medcalf & Lawton.

R. Thurston has sold his horse and carriage to Francis Mayett.

The Great Eastern Circus, which was to have exhibited here Wednesday, cancelled their date and will not show here.

The dye house and cloth room hands will have a match game of ball to-morrow after the Thorndikes and Actives have played.

John Crowley jumped from a freight train near the crossing at No. 1 mill Tuesday, and was badly injured about the head and face by striking against a switch.

New seats have been put up on the ball ground this week, though the kindness of Agent Greene, and a dressing room is to be built, which will answer for a ticket office also.

John Barber, aged 70 years and one of Thorndike's oldest citizens, died at his home last Saturday after several weeks' sickness. His funeral took place at his late residence on Wednesday.

One of the Thorndike Company's double teams took fright one day this week and ran from No. 2 mill down the street as far as Crowell's blacksmith shop, where they were caught without doing any damage.

There will be a social dance at Union Hall next Tuesday evening, with Lyons & Luman's orchestra, assisted by Misses Southland and Hoyt of Springfield. A good prompter will be in attendance, and a good time is in store for those who attend.

The Thorndikes play the Actives of Chicopee Falls to-morrow, and will play two games with the Palmers on Memorial Day. The first game will be played at 10 o'clock in the forenoon on the church ground here, and the second at Palmer in the afternoon. The attendance at these games will no doubt be large.

The village was alive with base ball last Saturday. The Thorndikes played their first game of the season with the Homesteads of Springfield, and defeated them with ease. The visitors played good ball until the fourth inning, when their pitcher was batted hard. Sullivan pitched for the home team and did good work, being well supported by Greene behind the bat. The other members of the home team played remarkably well for coming together without practice, and did good batting. After the above game the Hansons of this place defeated a picked nine from Palmer by a score of 10 to 7 in a five-inning game. The Young Stars of this place also defeated for the second time a team from Three Rivers by a score of 17 to 7.

WILBRAHAM.

The gentlemen of the senior class of the Academy have new class canes.

Rev. M. S. Howard exchanged pulpits with Rev. Mr. Hatch of Monson last Sunday.

Dr. G. M. Steele returned to Wilbraham Monday evening from his visit to the general conference at New York city.

Mrs. William Herrick of Natick has been visiting at her father's, Rev. Franklin Fisk's, the past week.

Rev. Dr. Bradford Pierce of Newton will deliver the address before the alumni at the Academy commencement week.

Mrs. Sarah Means, who has been spending the winter with her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Scofield, at Boston, returned home last week.

Mrs. M. Pierce, who has been spending a year with her daughter, Mrs. Fred Hitchcock, in Colorado, will return home next week.

Rev. J. L. R. Trask of Lawrence, for several years the beloved pastor of the Second Congregational church of Holyoke, has been called to the pastorate of Memorial church in Springfield.

Prof. Benjamin Gill will preach the Memorial sermon at the Methodist church next Sunday morning, and after the services the veterans will decorate the graves of the soldiers at North Wilbraham and Glendale.

At the annual meeting of the Methodist parsonage aid society the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. R. H. Welch; vice-president, Mrs. G. M. Horn; secretary, Mrs. J. R. Cushing; treasurer, Miss Jennie Fisk.

John Stevens will hereafter have the JOURNAL for sale every Friday evening, receiving them at 7 o'clock. Persons desiring papers left at their house will have them delivered promptly by leaving their orders with him.

The senior class of the academy gave its farewell reception to the juniors in Philo and Club halls Saturday evening. The affair would have passed off very pleasantly had it not been for the sudden appearance of red pepper, which was thrown on the carpet by some miscreant.

The Wesleyan base ball nine and the Amherst freshman played a close game at Wilbraham Saturday afternoon, in which the Wesleyans were defeated by a score of 9 to 7. To-morrow the Wesleyans play the Amherst Aggies at Amherst in the morning, and the Willistons at Williston in the afternoon.

The Memorial address will be delivered at the Congregational church, Memorial Day, at 1 p. m., by Capt. Flagg, after which the veterans of the late war will march in a body and decorate the graves of the soldiers in Woodland Dell and South street cemeteries, from thence to a lot in Woodland dell, recently purchased by the veterans, and dedicate it to the soldiers of Wilbraham who died in the South, and whose graves are among the unknown. Rev. M. S. Howard will deliver the address.

MONSON.

J. M. Wright of Wales is to build a house on State street.

J. M. Ward is out with the Palmer and Monson stage newly painted.

Miss Annie Hughes of Springfield spent Sunday among friends here.

Stewart and Harvey have contracted to build Truman Watross' new barn.

The clerks are trying to arrange a game of ball with the clerks of Palmer.

The next lecture at the Academy will probably be delivered by Dr. F. W. Ellis.

The last series of examinations this term at the Academy was commenced this week.

Geo. C. Flynt hold the reins over a new stepper, which is expected to show a lively clip.

The Academy base ball nine played the Palmer High School nine on Flynt's Park this afternoon.

G. M. Edson of Willimantic was in town Tuesday, and offers his residence on Squier avenue for sale.

Edward H. White is at home from Westboro, where he has been employed in the straw shops the past winter.

The Shamrock base ball club has organized for the season, and is ready to make dates with outside teams.

The Academy base ball nine will cross bats with a picked nine on Flynt's Park Memorial Day at 10 o'clock a. m.

Rev. J. H. Emerson returned from New York Monday, where he has been attending the general M. E. conference.

Julius Graves has the contract to build a new house for Luther Peck of State street. Sullivan & Son will do the stone work.

Prof. S. C. Chandler and wife of Lebanon Springs, N. Y., have been the guests of Mrs. Walker on Washington street this week.

The place known as the "Old Homestead" was sold at auction on Thursday to Rufus Chandler of Springfield, for $3500.

W. G. Orcutt of Boston was in town Wednesday, representing a Boston clothing firm and calling on some of his old acquaintances.

Hook and Ladder Company No. 1 held a meeting in the town hall Thursday evening, and adopted the rules and regulations of the company.

Ground is being broken for Fr. Lee's new parochial residence. A. H. Danforth has the contract to build the house, and Sullivan & Son do the stone work.

Prof. S. C. Chandler of Lebanon Springs, N. Y. preached at the Universalist church Sunday morning, and in the evening gave a discourse with special reference to Monson granite.

Arrangements are being made for a game of ball between Monson and North Monson on Sullivan's park to-morrow afternoon. Boyle, who pitched for the Milfords last year and who is said to be a fine "ball tosser," will be given a trial in the box for the Monsons.

The Academy base ball nine went to Palmer last Saturday and were "taken into camp" by the Palmer High School nine by a score of 30 to 4. The Academy nine lost the game through their inability to hit the Palmer's pitcher safely, and in running bases.

Mrs. J. M. Summer's class of music scholars will give a concert in Academy hall, June 16th, consisting of solos and duetts, and the Ladies' Quartette under her direction will make their first public appearance. The proceeds of the concert go toward the piano fund at the Academy.

The lecture by Rev. F. S. Hatch, pastor of the Congregational church, on "Sights in London," illustrated by stereopticon views, at the Academy last Eriday evening, was not as largely attended as it deserved to be. The lecture was instructive and profitable to all who attended, and the proceeds were $31, which goes toward buying a stereopticon for the Academy.

The fairy opera "Laila" will be presented by the young ladies connected with the Congregational church at Central Hall next Tuesday evening, with the following cast of characters:

|---|---|
| Laila | Miss Addie L. Peck |
| First Mountain Child | Miss Minnie A. Smith |
| Beggar Mother,Fairy Queen, | Miss Myrta E. Fisk |
| Second Mountain Child | Miss Edith Holmes |
| Third Mountain Child | Miss Ida L. Smith |
| Chorus of Mountain Children, Beggars and Fairies. | |
| Pianists, | Miss Hattie RichardsonMiss Gertrude Hall |
| Director | Spencer Lane |

The ball game between the members of the Windsor Club will be played on Flynt's Park Memorial Day. The teams are composed as follows:

|---|---|
| W. J. Randall, Capt. | A. T. Robinson, Capt. |
| C. F. Jordan, | A. L. Squier, |
| C. W. King, | G. L. Fuller, |
| G. E. Knowlton, | Fred Fay, |
| F. P. Williams, | Fred White, |
| G. C. Flynt, | L. C. Flynt, |
| Rufus Flynt, | S. F. Cushman, Jr. |
| Ralph Clifford, | R. F. Bradway, |
| Dr. F. W. Bancroft. | C. E. Smith. |

The game will be called at 2.30 o'clock, and a turkey supper will be served at the Monson House after the game.

The gentlemen connected with the Universalist church gave a very pleasant entertainment in Central Hall. Although disappointed by the non-appearanee of Ike Brown, the comedian, the programme was well gotten up, and the singing by the male quartette and the recitation by William J. Rickets were specially enjoyable. Lane and Danforth's orchestra furnished the music.

Base ball interest is reviving. A meeting of the association, which has never been dissolved, will probably be called next week and a new one formed, and there is a good prospect that a club will be organized at that meeting. It is reported that some of the manufacturers have agreed to run on the half-holiday system, giving Saturday afternoon. In this case there is no doubt but what a ball team would be a success.

Personal.

J. E. Dutton of Niantic, Ct, was in town Monday.

Miss Carrie E. King has been at home a few days this week from Middletown.

L. Rathburn, for five years clerk at Fuller's boot and shoe store, has accepted a position in Broadhurst's shoe store in Springfield. He is succeeded at Fuller's by P. Hughes.

Memorial Day Services.

Arrangements for Memorial Day are nearly complete, and the day will be observed much the same as in previous years. On Sunday afternoon preceeding, Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R. will meet at Grand Army hall at 1.30 o'clock and attend the memorial service in Memorial Hall at 2 o'clock. Rev. F. S. Hatch, pastor of the Congregational church, will preach the sermon. At 10 o'clock on the morning of Memorial Day the Post will asemble at Grand Arny hall and proceed to Moulton Hill cemetery, where services will be held at 11 o'clock. At two o'clock in the afternoon memorial services will be held in Memorial Hall, and Rev. E. A. Perry of Hudson, N. Y., formerly of Palmer, will deliver the oration of the day. The interior of the hall will be decorated with flowers and the national colors. At the conclusion of the service the soldiers will form in front of the hall, and, preceeded by the Monson Drum Corps, will march to the center cemetery, where the graves of deceased comrades will be decorated with flowers. All soldiers and sailors are invited to join with the post in the exercises of the day, and contributions of flowers are solicited, and may be left at the town hall at any time previous to 12 o'clock, Wednesday.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Clair Scott is expected to play a week's engagement in the town hall some time in June.

P. J. Mulvany has put an elegant soda fountain in his store. He is also enlarging his store by an addition in the rear.

There was a narrow escape from drowning up the river Sunday evening, when a boat which contained David O'Rourke, James Buckley, Thomas Sullivan and John O'Rourke was overturned. Being heavily clothed they could swim only with great difficulty. Two managed to reach the shore, while the other two clung to the overturned boat and were rescued by John Sullivan, who went to their relief.

The town meeting Tuesday afternoon was well attended for a special. There were probably nearly 300 present. The Otis Company's tax case was the thing that called them together. The principal speakers were H. C. Davis and Edwin H. Baker, agent of the Otis Company. The final result was that the town fully sustained the former action by a vote of 128 to 83, that the committee elected at a former meeting, consisting of F. D. Gilmore, J. H. Storrs and P. J. Downey, be the proper committee of the town to present the case to the county commissioners at their meeting next Tuesday.

THE Methodist conference at New York has extended the time limit of pastorates from three to five years, by a vote of 296 to 131, the ministers being largely in favor of the change. Five new bishops have been elected, as follows: Rev. Dr. J. H. Vincent, the well-known originator of the Chautauqua idea, Rev. Dr. James N. Fitzgerald, Rev. Dr. Isaac W. Joyce, Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman and Rev. Dr. D. A. Goodsell.

LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, May 23, 1888.

Thursday's development on water gas was that both parties were willing to take time in getting ready for their next grapple. On motion of one of the coal gas leaders, it was assigned to Tuesday without opposition.

But of equal interest was the defeat of the oleo bill in the Senate by 18 to 19, on passing to be engrossed. Mr. Hathorne of Suffolk tried in vain to have it amended to forbid the coloring of butter, and then he voted against it. The record was as follows on the engrossment:

YEAS: Clark of Hampshire, Crosby, Gleason of Plymouth, Gleason of Worcester, Hartwell, Howland, Keith of Plymouth, Kimball, Ladd, Marble, Messinger, Palmer, Pike, Sleeper, Spellman, Sprague, Towne, Tucker—18.

NAYS: Boardman, Collins, Cook, Dwyer, Fletcher, Glines, Hathorne, Howard, Howe, Keith of the Cape, McAlpine, Perkins, Roads, Shea, Slattery, Southworth, Stevens, Sullivan, Walker—19.

PAIRED, Wheelock, yes, with Kingsley, no.

Senator Clark of Essex did not vote, but if he had voted for the bill, it would have made no difference, as a majority in favor is necessary.

The House on Thursday went on record in favor of elevated roads in Boston by a large vote without a count.

Friday was another of the exciting days which have marked the record of the week. In the Senate the opponents of oleo determined to reverse the vote of Thursday, if possible. Senator Gleason of Worcester moved to reconsider the vote and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. Debate on the latter motion had but just begun when it was learned that Senator Tucker of Norfolk, who had voted for the bill, was absent unpaired. Then the members began to talk against time till he should return. But he was gone all the forenoon, and all the forenoon the talk against time went on, the friends of the bill not allowing the question to come to a vote. In the afternoon the absent senator did not appear, but the vote on tabling the motion to reconsider was lost, 12 to 12. Finally the matter was postponed to Monday, the motion to reconsider still pending.

Without any debate the Senate on Friday passed to be engrossed the bill to provide for the Australian system of voting. It also engrossed the bill to regulate the management of political caucuses.

The House on Friday suspended its rules and engrossed the Meigs elevated road bill. It was soon after brought in and enacted by both branches, and then the governor signed it at once. Capt. Meigs has the pen as a trophy.

The House debated the Hinckley elevated road bill nearly all Friday afternoon, and then engrossed it without any change. They also engrossed the bill to establish the office of pension agent.

The firemen have gained a victory in the Senate in the favorable action on the appropriation of $10,000 from the state treasury for the benefit of the Massachusetts State Firemen's Association. The petition had been reported adversely by the committee, but a substitute was admitted, and on Tuesday it was given its last stage in the Senate by vote of 22 to 9.

On Monday came the effort to reconsider the rejection of the oleo bill, and the vote was 17 to 17, with three pairs, President Boardman voting to make a tie. It will be noticed that every member of the Senate was put on record by this vote. Including pairs, they stood as follows on the motion to reconsider:

YEAS: Clark of Hampshire, Clark of Essex, Crosby, Gleason of Worcester, Gleason of Plymouth, Hartwell, Howland, Keith of Plymouth, Kimball, Ladd, Marble, Messinger, Palmer, Pike, Sleeper, Spellman, Sprague, Towne, Tucker, Wheelock—20.

NAYS: Boardman, Collins, Cook, Dwyer, Fletcher, Glines, Hathorne, Howard, Howe, Keith of the Cape, Kingsley, McAlpine, Perkins, Roads, Shea, Slattery, Southworth, Stevens, Sullivan, Walker—20.

A long debate in the House on Monday on how much should be paid per week by cities and towns for the support of their insane paupers in the state hospitals, resulted in a compromise on $3.40, to cover all charges, instead of the present $3.25, with extras for clothing and breakages.

The committee on education reported on Tuesday a bill for registration of pupils of private schools, which is a very small outcome of the great agitation a few months ago about parochial schools and the growing Catholic influence. Instead of supervision by the public authorities, as was proposed in the bill sent to the education committee, it is merely proposed to have a register of pupils kept, and, after a long discussion by the committee they have voted, Mr. Lyman of Belchertown dissenting, not to provide any penalty if the law is violated.

The Iron Hall has completed its successful career by the adoption by the Senate on Tuesday of the amendment to the beneficiary bill which was adopted in the House, permitting the order to pay benefits at the end of a term of years. Thus it triumphs over the insurance committee and the commissioner.

On Tuesday the finance committee reported unanimously against appropriating $10,000 to the House of the Good Shepherd, and in favor of the bill to allow small towns to provide themselves with superintendents of schools.

A long debate on the water gas bill resulted in its engrossment by vote of 108 to 87, after a hostile substitute had been rejected by 97 to 101, and the Bay State Gas Company's bill was engrossed by 80 to 66. Both bills were enacted to-day.

The two branches have settled their differences over the bill in regard to the legal weight of apples, beans and peas, by making it apply to cider apples only.

On Wednesday the whole agitation over parochial schools came to a ridiculous end. The bill which was reported on Tuesday came up in the Senate for action. At the forenoon session it was opposed a little, but was amended so that returns of the number of private schools and of their pupils should be made to the state board of education. In the afternoon, Senator Hartwell of Worcester spoke against the bill as one that would do no good if enacted, and the Senate defeated it, 5 to 14. Thus ends this whole business.

The Senate also amended the charter of the Iron Hall by striking out the words "white male," which have caused much criticism of the order.

The finance committee reported that the bill for a half-mill school tax ought to be referred to the next Legislature. It would involve a tax of $966,274, and the state tax is to be large this year. Besides, the direct war tax will probably be repaid to the state before March 4, 1889. That will be $700,894, and might be used as a school fund.

By 58 to 51 the House rejected the resolve appropriating $10,000 to the House of the Good Shepherd. The chief objection was that it was a sectarian institution, but its friends said it admitted all sects.

I have been a great sufferer from dry catarrh for many years, and I tried many remedies which helped me, but I had none which did me so much benefit as Ely's Cream Balm. It completely cured me. —M. J. Lally, 39 Woodard Ave., Boston Highlands, Mass.

From the Pastor of the Olivet Baptist church, Philadelphia, Pa.: I was so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—B. F. Liepsner, (A. M.)

A STRANGE FREAK.

The wife of our esteemed citizen, Mr. John Rowell, while suffering under a severe attack of blues, tried to commit the crime of infanticide, but was prevented by the opportune arrival of a neighbor. Her case has been considered by the best doctors incurable, but her husband was highly pleased after using a course of Sulphur Bitters, to find that she was entirely cured.—Kingston Herald.

A WOMAN'S DISCOVERY.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made, and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hamrich & Co., of Shelby, N. C.—Get a free trial bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store.

THE VERDICT UNANIMOUS.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 2

INTERESTED PEOPLE.

Advertising a patent medicine in the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam for coughs and colds does, is indeed wonderful. He authorizes all druggists to give those who call for it, a sample bottle free, that they may try it before purchasing. The large bottles are 50c. and $1. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption.

NEWS ABOUT TOWN.

It is the current report about town that Kemp's Balsam for throat and lungs is making some remarkable cures with people who are troubled with coughs, sore throat, asthma, bronchitis and consumption. Any druggist will give you a trial bottle free of cost. It is guaranteed to relieve and cure. The large bottles are 50c. and $1. (4w8)

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS. HAMPDEN, SS. May 24, A. D. 1888.—By virtue of an execution which issued on a judgement recovered in the Superior Court at Springfield, within and for our County of Hampden, on the seventh day of May, A. D. 1888, in favor of Isaiah Hiscock of Wales, in said County, and against John King of Southbridge, in our County of Worcester, I have this day taken all the right in equity that the said John King had, on the twentieth day of September, A. D. 1887, the day when the same was attached on mesne process in this action to redeem certain mortgaged real estate, situated in said Wales, and bounded and described as follows, to wit: A certain tract of land, with the buildings thereon, bounded northerly by land now or formerly of William Nelson, Andrew A. Needham and George Mixter, easterly by land now or formerly of George Mixter, southerly by land now or formerly of Alvin Andrews, Whipple Thompson and Julius M. Lyon, and westerly by land now or formerly of William Orcutt, containing 107 acres, more or less, and being the same conveyed by Elijah Shaw to the said John King, and recorded in Hampden County Registry of Deeds, book 297, page 81, and on Thursday, the twenty-eighth day of June next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, in front of the Court House in Palmer, in said County, I shall offer for sale by public auction to the highest bidder, said right in equity of redemption, to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

PURIFY YOUR BLOOD.

Impurities in the blood produce diseases. Bodily and mental health depend upon a healthy condition of the blood. The blood, particularly in the spring and during the hot summer months, becomes clogged with impurities, which poison it and generate disease. A harmless blood purifier, without a particle of mineral poison in it, such as mercury or potash, is necessary to remove these impurities and to restore the healthy tone of mind and body. The best purifier and tonic known to the world is Swift's Specific (S. S. S.). In regard to its wonderful purifying and tonic powers we give a few testimonials as follows:

Mr. Wm. A. Siebold, with Geo. P. Rowell & Co., 10 Spruce street, New York, writes March 29, 1888: "I feel it my duty, for the benefit of others who may be afflicted as I was, to write you this letter, which you can use as my testimony in any way you choose. I will answer any inquiry from others in relation to the facts herewith stated. In February last I suffered great pain and inconvenience from boils all over my neck; I could not turn my head without acute pain, and my blood was in poor condition. After trying all the usual remedies in such cases, and finding no relief, by the persuasion of Mr. J. W. Fears, manager of the New York office, I usedone bottle of S. S. S., and improved rapidly, and very soon I was entirely relieved of my 'Job's Comforters.' Now not a sign of my affliction can be seen. I feel strong and cheerful. S. S. S. is a fine tonic as proved in my case. I sleep soundly and my appetite is good."

"Dr. J. N. Cheney, a well-known physician, writes from Ellaville, Ga.: "I use S. S. S. in convalescent fever cases with the best results. It will, in my judgment, prevent summer dysentery, if one will take a few bottles in the spring, thus preparing the bowels for the strains of summer."

Mrs. Scott Liston, 116 Zane street (Island), Wheeling, West Virginia, writes: "Having used S. S. S. for the blood, I can safely say that it beats anything I have used to cleanse the blood and make a new being out of a person."

Mr. M. S. Hamlin, Winston, N. C., writes: "I use it every spring. It always builds me up, giving me appetite and digestion, and enabling me to stand the long, trying, enervating, hot summer days. On using it I soon become strong of body and easy of mind."

The Stove In The Village Store.

When the twilight had deepened to darkness
They gathered from far and near,
Old farmers who plodded the distance
As pilgrims their shrines to revere;
At the shabby old store at the "corners"
They met and they entered the door,
For the Mecca of all these old cronies
Was the stove in the old village store.

It was guiltless of beauty or polish,
And its door was unskillfully hung,
But they made a glad circle around it,
And the genial warmth loosened each tongue;
And they talked of the crops and the weather,
Twin subjects to gossips most dear,
And the smoke from the pipes as it blended,
Gave a tinge to the whole atmosphere.

Full many the tales they related,
And wondrous the yarns that they spun,
And doubtful the facts that they stated,
And harmless the wit and the fun!
But if ever discussion grew heated
It was all without tumult or din,
And they gave their respectful attention
When a customer chanced to come in.

When the evening was spent, and the hour
For the time of their parting had come,
They rapped from the pipe the warm ashes,
And reluctantly started for home;
Agreeing to meet on the morrow
When the day with its labors was o'er,
For the Mecca of all the old cronies
Was the stove in the old village store.

Two brothers, not living more than fifty miles from Harrodsburg, look so much alike that when one of them joined the Baptist church, and was about to be immersed, he found that he had no clothes suitable for the occasion, as he expressed it, and paid his brother ten cents to be baptized in his place, which was done. This story seems incredible, but it is nevertheless the fact, and would never have been found out had not one of the brothers got angry and gave it away.—Harrodsburg Democrat.

COMPARISONS ARE DANGEROUS.

Johnny was guilty of an infraction of household law, and the frowning mother reached for her slipper.

"Here, mother," said Johnny, soberly, If you're goin' to do anything like that, use the fire shovel. Your slipper ain't half big enough to do any sort of good."

The slipper was a five, several sizes wider than the fire shovel, but Johnny's mother was a woman, and he got a cookie with raisins in it, in lieu of a paddling.

Two hours later Johnny related his scheme to little Dick, who stowed it away in his not very capacious tow-head for future use.

An occasion came betimes. "Mother," cried little Dick in his fulsome eagerness to be of service to the angry dame, "use snow-shovel. Your slipper is too big."

When little Dick recovered from the effect of the seance that followed, he sought out Johnny and gave him a sound thrashing.

Johnny's shrewdness, it is thus seen, could not preserve him from this result of another's stupidity, which is often the case in this world, and shows the folly of sharing a valuable but dangerous secret with a blunderhead.—Binghampton Republican.

COAL GLEANERS.

It is estimated that 500 families in Buffalo get their winter supply of fuel from the long trains of coal cars that come into East Buffalo. After unloading her cargo of black diamonds the trains are switched and sidetracked. The "empties," as they are called, are lawful prey, and scores of persons may be seen supplied with bags, hatchets and axes ready for business. Men, women, boys and girls, down to young children not a dozen years old, climb into the train among the moving cars, scrambling for the ones in which there remains the most coal and staking out their claims, so to speak. Sometimes there is a scuffle when more than one "homesteads" the same car. Long before the train reaches the side track the harvesters are busy with their work. The coal is stuck fast to the sides and in the corners of the cars by the snow and ice, and be loosened with ax or hatchet. It is then gathered into bags and drawn home on sleds. The smaller children are generally detailed to pick up loose coal scattered along the tracks by the passing engines. It is estimated that at one point in East Buffalo there are at least 100 tracks side by side. During seasons of the year when the loads cannot be sledded, one will see men and women with enormous bags of coal or pieces of wood on their backs which must weigh 200 pounds. Women who will not tip the scale beams at over 100 pounds, will carry loads on their backs which would test the strength of the strongest men. The business thrives the year round, but is particularly active now when so many cannot find other employment. Such cold snaps as that of the past week, when the weather goes down below nothing, brings out a full force. Many Polacks take this way of being economical, but it is only too true that others are forced to use this means of providing fuel to keep the warm.—Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

SOAP VS. LAW.

A Missouri constable rode out to a farm near St. Joe armed with a subpoena for a woman who was wanted as a witness in a case in court. He found her in her backyard, busily engaged in stirring a boiling, bubbling mass, in a large black kettle. He stated his business, and she said:

"I can't go to-day."

"But you must."

"What's the hurry?"

"Why, court's in session, and the case is now on trial. They want you by noon."

"Well, I aint going. You think I'm going off and leave this hull kittle o' saft soap to spile, just to please your old court? No, sirree!"

"Why, my dear madam, you must. You really don't seem to understand—"

"I understand that I've got a big kittle o' splendid soap grease on to bile, and it'll make thin, sticky soap, if it aint finished to-day. You go back and tell the jedge so."

"You'll be fined for—"

"Pooh! I'd like to see the Missoury jury that'd fine a woman for not leaven' her soap-billin' when it was at a critcal p'int, as one might say. Tell the jedge I'll come to-morrow, if we don't butcher our peegs then; an' if we do I'll come some day next week."

"But I tell you that won't do. You must come now."

"Lookee, young man, you think I'm a fool? I reckon you never made any soap, did you? If you had, you'd know that—"

"What does the jedge care about your soap?"

"Well, what do I care 'bout the jedge, if it comes to that? Law's law and soap's soap. Let the jedge 'tend to his law, an' I'll 'tend to my soap. The good book says there's a time fer everything, an' this is my time fer a bar'l o' saft soap."

"Well, madam, if you want to be fined for contempt of the court, all right. You will be fined sure as—"

"Bah! I know all 'bout the law, an' there aint anything in it, nor in the Constitution of the United States, nor in the Declaration of Injeependence, nor in nothin' else, that says a woman's got to leave a kittle o' half-cooked soap, and go to court when she aint a mind to. I guess I know a little law myself."—Tid Bits.

A GOOD RESOLVE.

Hugh Miller has told how, by one act of youthful decision, he saved himself from one of the subtle temptations so peculiar to a life of toil. When employed as a mason, it was usual for his fellow-workmen to have an occasional treat of drink, and one day two glasses of whisky fell to his share, which he swallowed. When he reached home he found on opening his favorite book, Bacon's Essays, that the letters danced before his eyes, and that he could no longer master the sense. "The condition," he says, "into which I had brought myself, was, I felt, one of degradation. I had sunk by my own act, for the time, to a lower level of intelligence than that on which it was my privilege to be placed, and though the state could have been no very favorable one for forming a resolution, I, in that hour, determined I would never again sacrifice my capacity of intelligent enjoyment to a drinking usage; and, with God's help, I was enabled to hold by this determination."

CURIOUS MARRIAGE SUPERSTITION.

A curious superstition was revealed during the performance of a marriage ceremony in a justice's office in Omaha. The magistrate had commended the contracting parties to stand before him, and was about to begin the ceremony when a woman rushed in, and ordered the judge to stop a moment. The woman, who proved to be the bride's mother, looked at the carpet on the floor, and said:—

"Judge, I am a little superstitious; which way do the cracks run in this floor?"

This was a puzzler for the judge, but, being of an accommodating spirit, he ripped up about two yards of the carpet beneath his feet, and found that the seams of the floor ran crosswise of the feet of the young couple he was about to unite.

The position of the bride and groom was changed. The old lady gave a sigh of relief, and the ceremony proceeded. A mother-in-law so careful as that about the cracks in the floor is likely to make her son-in-law toe the mark every time.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; but is often lost owing to the poverty and impurity of the blood and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion and giving strength to the whole system.

"I had been troubled with pimples on my lower limbs, loss of sleep and appetite, and in fact was generally run down. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla the pimples disappeared, my appetite was renewed, and I feel better in every respect." P. DEVLIN, S. E. corner 10th and Buttonwood Sts., Philadelphia.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon I felt as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

WHAT A CHANGE.

D. H. Brigham began the Ready-Made Clothing business in Springfield more than 40 years ago, and it took him a score of years to gain a foothold.

It is now about a month since we (D. H. Brigham & Co.) announced in these columns that our time henceforth would be devoted to the manufacture and sale of ladies', misses' and girls' complete outfits of the higher grades not to be found in dry goods stores, yet we are already compelled to enlarge our present quarters and also to put in a passenger elevator so as to use three floors for the display and sale of ladies', misses' and girls' outfits.

Before doing this we must dispose of our entire stock now on hand, and that at the earliest moment possible to make room for masons and carpenters.

90 days' business must be done in 30.

We have bought these elegant goods at prices enabling us to place them within the reach of all. In many cases the prices will be less than the original cost of the material. We have everything from a fine wash dress to the elaborately made silks, and in prices from $5.00 to $75 00, also wraps from $7.50 to $60.00.

We are crowded with customers from far and near, with too little room for the successful display of our hot weather goods, although we show a magnificent assortment suitable for the season. Dress makers from all the adjoining towns after a careful examination pronounce our stock superb, our styles faultless, our finish and prices beyond competition.

JOURNEYMEN TAILORS are employed on our ladies' suits and top garments, and we guarantee artistic outfits in all sizes from 2 years up to 40 and 50 bust measures. This is the opportunity of a lifetime. Ladies', misses' and girls' outfits complete at maker's wholesale prices, from a stock never equaled outside of the great cities.

Within a month we have bought the entire stock of the best New York manufacturers of misses' and girl's costumes, including their Paris models. For elegant workmanship and quality of material they cannot be matched. This stock includes besides the best line of seasonable jackets, newmarkets and summer cloaks for misses and little girls, the richest dresses for the same ever shown in this city. Dress makers in providing for children's wear and parents also will be able to get perfect satisfaction and save themselves untold worry and delay by selecting from this stock. White suits for all ages will be put on sale as soon as room will allow. Early selections can be made for delivery at vacation season at manufacturers' wholesale price. Our misses' and childrens' lawn tennis suits are handsome and cheap.

TO THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.—Respectfully represents the undersigned, that public convenience and necessity require the discontinuance of so much of the county highway in the towns of Brimfield and Palmer, as lies between a point on the Tower Hill road near the house of Theodore Farrell, in said Brimfield, to near a house formerly owned by Col. John Fenton, in said Palmer.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that said highway be discontinued.

INHABITANTS OF THE TOWN OF BRIMFIELD.
By OSCAR F. BROWN, FRANK R. NEWTON, JOSIAH STEBBINS, Selectmen of Brimfield.
April 23d, 1888.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, SS.—At a meeting of the county commissioners, holden at Springfield, within and for said county, on the sixteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord 1888.

And now upon the petition aforesaid, the county commissioners, deeming a view of the premises expedient and proper, give notice that they will meet for the purpose of said view, and hearing all parties interested, at the station of the Boston & Albany Railroad in Palmer, on Monday, the twenty-fifth day of June next, at 10.15 o'clock a. m.; and it is ordered by the county commissioners that a copy of said petition be served by the sheriff of said county, or his deputy, upon the clerks of the towns of Palmer and Brimfield, in said county, thirty days at least before the said twenty-fifth day of June, and that all other persons and corporations interested therein be notified by publishing a copy of said petition and this order thereon, once a week, in the PALMER JOURNAL, a public newspaper printed in said county, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the time of said view and hearing. And it is further ordered by the commissioners that copies of said petition, or abstracts containing the substance thereof and this order be posted by said sheriff or deputy in two public places in the towns of Palmer and Brimfield, fourteen days before said twenty-fifth day of June, and that notice be given in manner aforesaid, to all persons and corporations interested, that the county commissioners deem a view of the premises expedient and proper, and that a view of the same will be taken by them at the time and place aforesaid, and that they will hear the parties interested at the time of said view. ROBERT O. MORRIS, Clerk.

ATTEST: ROBERT O. MORRIS, Clerk.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE AT BRIMFIELD, MASS.—By virtue of a certain mortgage deed and power of sale given by Adelia Stebbins of Brimfield, Hampden County, and state of Massachusetts, to Emeline M. Lombard, now or formerly of Wales, in said County, dated February 28th, 1880, and recorded in Hampden County Registry of Deeds, book 367, page 232, and for a breach of the conditions of said mortgage, and for the purpose of foreclosing said mortgage, will be sold at public auction at the dwelling house on the below described premises, on Saturday, June 16th, 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the following real estate, being the same as described in said mortgage, to wit: "All and several, the tracts and parcels of land situate in said Brimfield, in the westerly part thereof, conveyed by George Puffer to Dwight Lombard by deed dated April 12th, 1879, and recorded with Hampden County deeds, book 359, page 154, which may be referred to for a more full and particular description of said premises. Said tracts contain together about 49 acres, with the dwelling house and barn thereon, and are the same conveyed by said Dwight Lombard to the grantor."

Said premises will be sold subject to any taxes heretofore or hereafter to be assessed.

Terms of sale: cash.

JOHN A. SMITH, Assignee of said mortgage.

THE FLYNT GRANITE COMPANY'S QUARRIES, MONSON, MASS.

No town in Massachusetts contains better quarries than Monson, where the works of the W. N. Flynt Granite Co., an excellent cut of which is given above, are located. The granite quarried here is well known throughout the country for its fine shades of color, extreme durability, and the fine polish it will take, making it peculiarly adapted for architectural purposes. The company was incorporated under the laws of the state of Massachusetts in January, 1885, with $100,000 capital, W. N. Flynt being president and George C. Flynt treasurer, and owns 500 acres of land, all of which is underlaid with granite. The first stone was quarried by the United States government, for the armory buildings at Springfield, and in 1824 the quarry was opened and worked on a small scale by Rufus Flynt. In 1839 it came into the possession of W. N. Flynt, president of the present company, who has steadily enlarged the business until now the yearly output is 30,000 tons of stone, valued at not less than $200,000. The stone is shipped to all parts of the country as far west as Iowa and Kansas. Only a small portion of the land owned by the company has yet been opened, but the supply of stone now in sight is seemingly inexhaustible. The works are most conveniently located for quarrying operations, being on a side hill about 75 feet from the top, but high enough to easily drain the workings and keep them dry. By nature the rock is divided into horizontal layers from 1 to 12 feet in thickness, and wedges are mainly depended upon for getting out even the largest masses, powder being used merely to lift the loosened layer from its bed. The largest single piece which has yet been taken out was 354 feet long, 11 feet wide and 4 feet high, and 1104 wedges were used in detaching it. The demand for the stone was necessarily local up to the opening of the Boston & Albany Railroad in 1839, but advantage was instantly taken of the new transportation facilities, and the business pushed rapidly forward. The nearest station was three miles away, the stone being hauled there by teams, but in 1865 a side track was built to within two miles of the quarry, and in 1875 Mr. Flynt built a railroad track direct to the works. From March to December about 200 quarrymen are employed, and an almost equal number is kept at work in winter, the handling of the stone being done with steam derricks, and the cars moved about the quarry by a locomotive owned by the company, which their increasing business compelled them to purchase last year.

Among the many buildings constructed of Monson granite are: Horatio Lyon Memorial Library and Memorial Town Hall, Monson; Republican Block, Boston & Albany Railroad building, Agawam Bank, Springfield Court House, and Dr. Corcoran's and A.L. Fennessy's houses on Crescent Hill, Springfield; City Hall, Holyoke; Universalist church, Palmer; G. Henry Whitcomb's residence and two business blocks, Worcester; Boston & Albany Railroad depot, at Boston and Palmer; Walker Hall, Amherst College, Amherst; fronts of St. Fancis' Xavier church, Sixteenth street, the New Isabella Home, One Hundred and Ninetieth street, and the pastoral residence, corner of Eighty-fourth street and Fourth avenue, New York city; Catholic church, Norwich, Conn.; Hall Memorial Chapel, Watertown, Conn.; South P. Avenue M. E. church, Chicago, Ill. The granite for the new hotel buildings at Ware and Warren, Mass., and the stone for Judge Henry Hilton's mansion, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., are from this famous quarry.

At present they are furnishing stone for residences at Buffalo, N. Y., Waterbury and Stafford Springs, Ct., basement and first story of a house at Willimantic, Ct., and trimmings for the Republican and Wight blocks at Springfield. They have the contract to furnish the foundation stone for the new Sacred Heart church at Springfield, which will require about 300 car-loads, also for the boiler house and stables connected with the Isabella Home, on 190th street, New York.

The season's work has just commenced with 150 men, which number will be increased to over 200 in a few weeks.

ZATHOE.

It's a gray, spirited sort of a name, and suggests dancing black eyes, sun-burnt cheeks, jetty curls, cherry lips and brown, unjewelled fingers.

Well, my old housekeeper's grand-daughter, pretty Zathoe Lynn, possessed them all.

And she was seventeen that summer; I, twenty-one. For two months and a single day I had been the envied possessor of "Hazelcroft." She had grown up with the other wild flowers on the place, herself the wildest flower of them all.

One remembered August morning she stole into the library with a glorious bunch of water-lilies.

"They're for you, Mr. Rupert," she said, offering them slyly.

I patted the shapely brown hand extended.

"Thanks, little Zathoe. They are a pretty parting gift."

Her black eyes were fixed upon the carpet.

"You are going away, then?"

"Yes, to Europe."

"But you will come back?"

"Not for three long years, at least. I must see the world, Zathoe. And now, good-bye! I shall not see you again before starting."

She looked up then, her eyes seeming two coals of living fire. I wondered why I had never noticed how beautiful they were.

"You'll be married and settled long before I return," I added, teasingly.

She gently laid the lilies down.

"Good-bye, Mr. Rupert. I shall not forget you!"

And in another instant she had escaped from the room like a frightened bird.

My resolve to travel had been a sudden one, but by eleven o'clock I was ready to go. The day was perfect, so I decided to walk across the fields to Hazelcroft station. The distance was scarcely a mile. When just half way, and passing through a narrow lane, I suddenly heard a moan. Then came some unexpected, impassioned words:—

"Oh, Mr. Rupert! My dear Mr. Rupert! I'll never see him again!"

I looked around, but there was no one in sight. Then I glanced over the low edge. There, on the ground, with her head pillowed on a mossy stump, lay little Zathoe Lynn.

I was at her side in a moment, but so intense was her grief, she had not heard my approach.

Then I knelt down and spoke her name.

She sprang up in bewilderment, but I drew her to me.

"You are sorry that I am going, Zathoe?"

"Yes."

There was a world of sorrow in the outspoken word.

I took her tear-stained face between my hands.

"Zathoe Lynn, look at me; is it true—can you care for me?"

She struggled from my grasp. "I hate myself! Oh, Mr. Rupert! I never meant that you should know!"

"But I am glad—very glad," I answered, kindly. "It is sweet to know that you will miss me when far away. I am, as you have heard, an orphan. All my life, until now, I have been unloved. I have never even had a sweetheart. You shall be my first and only one."

She crept back to my arms with the confidence of a child, and I smoothed her damp curls, and kissed her red lips. How pretty and innocent she was!

"Zathoe," I whispered, "are you sure that you love me?"

She passionately flung her plump arms around my neck, for answer. It was her first pure caress.

Then we sat down on a fallen log together, and I clasped her hot brown fingers.

"How would you like to attend school during my absence?" I asked, presently.

Her tear-stained face brightened. "I love books, Mr. Rupert! And I would study hard!"

"That is well. Now listen, Zathoe. Three years from this day, if you still love me, you shall be my wife. But the mistress of Hazelcroft must be cultured and refined. Promise that you will try to become all I could desire."

"I promise," she said simply.

"Remember," I added at parting, "you are still as free as the air you breathe. But you will think of me sometimes?"

"Always, Mr. Rupert!" she corrected.

"Then kiss me good-bye."

Her trembling lips just touched my cheek. I returned it three-fold, and put her from me. Then I hurried away, without once looking back. But my love for Zathoe Lynn began that day.

We did not meet again for four long years. But I often heard from my little protegé. Her letters fill my desk to-day, a sweet record of the gradual unfolding of her heart and mind.

Old Mrs. Lynn died soon after my departure, and then, at my earnest request, Zathoe entered a neighboring seminary. Nobly did she keep her promise, graduating with honor at the completion of her three years' course. I would have returned to her then, but she would not permit it.

"Give me another year," she wrote. "I want to be perfect in your sight." And so I yielded.

But she sent me her portrait. Oh, what a face it was! Her dark, rich beauty had grown glorious.

The picture reached me while in London. I walked the streets all that night, for I was too restless to sleep. I wanted to go to her at once. But she had said no.

During the last year of waiting I began to think that it was I who would prove the unworthy one. Zathoe would find me wanting. It was indeed a foreshadowing of the bitter truth.

But at length, her last loving letter called me home.

I had begged that she would meet me at the Hazelcroft. So with Margaret Lynn, a widowed cousin, she went down and reopened the old house which had once sheltered us both.

It was dark when I reached it. I half fancied she would be waiting for me at the gate. I forgot that she was no longer the passionate child I had left weeping by the hedge.

The low windows were all open, and I peered into the room. It had but one occupant, a tall, stately woman. She stood by the table, her gaze fixed upon a jar of water lilies.

It was Zathoe Lynn. I entered softly, and stood before her. I could frame but two words:—

"My darling!"

She drew back, instinctively. But her lustrous eyes shone like stars.

"You are Rupert Hazelcroft."

I caught her white, unjewelled hand. It lay cold and still in my grasp. I would have kissed her brow, her cheek, her lips—but I dare not.

"Zathoe!" I cried passionately. "Have you no welcome for me?"

Her eyes were reading my face.

"You have changed," she said, sadly. "I—was not—prepared for it. But I can say—welcome back to Hazelcroft."

Her courteous words lacked the true love-ring, but I went closer.

"Zathoe, do you remember our parting, four years ago? You loved me then—to-day, I love you. We have both changed."

She trembled at my touch.

"You seem like a stranger!" she exclaimed, bitterly.

Then, with something of her old impetuosity, she drew from her bosom a tiny locket. It was one I had sent her soon after leaving Hazelcroft, and it held my picture.

"Look," she continued, a great sob in her voice. "This is the face I have loved so long—that I shall love until I die! Rudert Hazelcroft, you have not brought it back to me!"

"That was an impossibility, Zathoe," I answered, gravely. "I was a boy then—to-day, I am a man. And your face is changed also, yet I love you the more for it. Zathoe, accept me as I am. But tell me—is my former self my only rival?"

"Yes," she breathed, rather than spoke.

"Then I will win you over again," I said, resolutely. "Zathoe Lynn, you shall yet be my wife! Until then, you are free as you have ever been."

She laid her hand in mine, impulsively. It was burning hot. "Rupert Hazelcroft," she cried, "I will not accept the freedom you offer. Your generosity has made me all that I am to-day. I belong to you alone. I cannot love you, but that, too, may come in time."

I took from its velvet case a costly diamond ring. "This was to have been the token of our betrothal," I said. "Zathoe, will you wear it for my sake? for the sake of the world-hardened man, who would gladly be a boy again, if he could."

She looked up tearfully, as I placed it on her finger. "I shall wear it always in remembrance of this hour," she murmured.

For moments I restlessly paced the old familiar room. The ocean no longer rolled between, but time had parted us quite as effectually. I glanced at Zathoe. How lovely and lovable she seemed. And she was mine—she had said it. The thought was reassuring.

"Sing to me," I begged, at last.

Without a word she glided to the open piano, and soon, a tender love-song filled the room. Her whole soul was in it. She went on from one to another, unconsciously. She seemed to have forgotten my presence. The glory of her voice kept me spell-bound. When she had finished, at last, her head drooped upon her hands. I bent over, and reverently kissed her forehead.

She sprang to her feet.

"Forgive! Music is my meat and drink! I love it next to heaven!"

"Then I can only hope for a third place in your affections," I said, pointedly.

She did not reply, and we passed out to the veranda, her hand just touching my arm.

The silvery moonlight was over everything, and Zathoe glanced about her appreciatively. "Hazelcroft is a beautiful place," she said, at last. "I have loved it from childhood."

"Then why not become its mistress to-morrow," I asked, eagerly.

But she shook her head. "To-morrow I am going away with Cousin Margaret. Her home is in Boston."

"I will follow you there," I continued, boldly. "You shall not escape, Zathoe Lynn! I love you more than life itself! Promise that you will try to love me a little in return!"

"I have began to try, already," she answered, naively.

"Then, at our next meeting, I can hope for a different welcome?'

"Yes."

I drew her beautiful face to mine, and covered it with passionate kisses.

* * * * *

We were married the following winter. For ten happy years, Zathoe has been my cherished wife, and I have every reason to believe that she has long loved me, far better than she ever did the boyish face in the locket.—Norristown Herald.

VENTILATION OF DWELLING-HOUSES.

But few things, so important, receive so little attention as that of properly ventilating the sleeping and sitting rooms of our dwellings. In the days of open fire places the houses were built so that the fresh air could find an entrance through the walls and floors so readily that there was a constant rush of air into all parts of the room, to replace that which was continually passing up the chimney; but since the open fireplace has been abandoned and stoves introduced, it has been the constant study of all classes how to build tight houses, and thus prevent the entrance of fresh air, especially to the rooms that are most constantly occupied by the family. The walls on the outside are first covered with thick paper, on which the clapboards are so laid as to make two thicknesses; these, to make them as nearly air tight as possible, are kept well painted. The inside walls are covered with plaster, and one or two thicknesses of paper. Thus the walls have at least seven coverings for the air to pass through. The floors are made tight with a covering of boards first, and then a layer of plaster or thick paper, and another covering of matched boards. The ceiling is covered with plaster. Thus the floors, the walls, and the ceilings are made nearly air-tight; the only places left for anything like a free pasage of pure air are the doors and windows, the former are made tight with weather strips applied to every joint. One would naturally suppose that with all these methods to keep the air out, most of men would be satisfied, but many are not; they touch the window panes and find them cold, they suspect that somehow the cold gets through the glass, and so they order another set of windows and put them on outside, thus cutting off all chances of airing the house occasionally by opening a window. With a house thus constructed and protected, the owner comes home at night to wonder why his wife and children, shut up most of the time in air-tight dwellings, are out of health so much of the time. When we pass a modern house with double windows, we cannot help thinking that the inmates are being slowly murdered with impure air. It is true an air-tight room can be ventilated, but not one in fifty is provided with a ventilator of any description. Let every man pause to consider the consequences of keeping his family in a room that is nearly air-tight.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

HE WOULD SEE STEBBINS.

There was an old couple at the Third-street depot the other day who had been to Niagara Falls, and were waiting for a train to their home in the interior of the state. They just felt that they had accomplished a big thing, and were consequently elated. They had scarcely taken seats in the waiting room before the old man turned to a stranger, and said:—

"We've just got back from Niagara Falls. Powerful sight, them Falls are. Hain't nuthin' like them Falls in this hull country."

"Never heard of 'em," gruffly replied the man.

"You didn't? Lor' bless me, but that's astonishing! Never heard of Niagara Falls?"

"Never. What is it anyhow?"

"Why, it's the biggest lot of water you ever saw, falling over the awfullest precipice you ever heard of. Why, it makes folks shiver to look at it."

"Singular that none of the papers have ever mentioned it."

"They haven't? Why, them Falls have been there for thousands of years."

"Wasn't it a freshet or a dam broke loose, or something of that sort?"

"No, sirree! That water keeps a-pouring and roaring and humming all the time."

"Must have been some trick about it," carelessly observed the cynic. "If it was a real thing there'd be some excitement about it. You don't drink?"

"Me drink? I've never drank a drop in my life!"

"Well, it's too bad. Anyone who will swindle an old man like you ought to be horsewhipped."

"Swindled? Do you pretend there hain't no Niagry Falls?"

"Never heard of any such thing," replied the man, as he got up and left.

"Say, Hanner," replied the old man, as he turned to his wife after a while, "did you hear that?"

"Every word."

"Say, when we git home we'll keep mum until I see Stebbins, and feel around, and see if there is a Niagry Falls. If we've been fooled we don't want to be laffed at; if it's all right, we kin do our blowing when it's safe and will count. Don't say Goat Island, nor Hors' Shoe Falls, nor Bridal Vail to no livin' soul until we find out whether that ginger ale flew to our heads, for the show was all right, and wuth the money."

House-Cleaning.

Unannounced by the marching of columns
  Of soldiers, or bugle's loud blare,
A war of invasion is waging
  All over our land, far and near,
More fierce than the "War of the Roses,"
Filling eyes, lungs and throat, and our noses
With dust, while peace ne'er reposes
  On our flag 'till we victory share!

No booming of gun, or of cannon,
  No falling of ranks of brave men,—
Our weapons, the wall-brush and scrub-brush,
  The duster, the broom and dust-pan,
Sand, soap, and hot and cold water;
Our soldiery, many a daughter
Fair and wise (Nature, Science, both taught her),
  Of kitchen and parlor the queen.

So, woe to the moth and the spider
  That's spun his silk hammock so fine;
The buffalo-bug, and each insect
  That in house seeks to live, or to dine!
Their haunts and their homes are demolished,
Their free rights of way are abolished,
And everything's garnished and polished,
  And shinable things made to shine.

There's a moving of furniture, nick-nacks,
  In parlor, and sitting-room, hall,
In chamber, and bed-room, and wardrobe,
  And pictures from easel and wall.
There's dusting, and wiping, and rubbing,
There's washing, and rinsing, and scrubbing,
Reviewing, renewing, and drubbing
  Of things that are large, and are small.

There's a raid on dirt, dust, and rubbish,
  From attic to cellar remote,
On pantry, and closet, and cupboard,—
  On which all good housekeepers dote;
There's planning, and matching, and making,
There's ripping, and shifting, and shaking,
There's putting down, mending, uptaking,
  With more colors than Joseph's coat!

There's a slamming of blinds, and the rattle
  Of window-sash, swish of the broom,
The swash of soap-suds, and the whisking
  Of duster in every room!
There's a banging of doors, smell of varnish,
Fresh paint, things that cleanse, and will burnish
Aught in house that will soil or can tarnish,—
  Alas, for the house-cleaning boom!

There are harsh sounds that vacant walls echo
  From library, hall-way, and stair,—
Footsteps on the bare floors, that empty
  Rooms catch and repeat everywhere.
Gay rugs on the clothes-line are flying
Like banners; beneath them are lying
Bright carpets, o'er which the breeze sighing,
  Wonders why from such flowers, no sweets there!

Oh, masculine,—you who so shudder
  At thought of the house-cleaning raid,
While the ghosts of cold dinners and "pick-ups,"
  Flit past your remembrance with dread,—
Let me give you a sign that's unfailing,
  (For your consolation 'tis said,)
When you hear the quick sound like a stammer,—
"Rap-rap-rap," of the carpet tack hammer,
There's nearly an end to the clamor,—
  Peace will soon reign in your home instead!

MAKING MONEY.

Some people can hardly make a living, and some lay up money. Why is it? Into a village of a few hundred inhabitants a young man came and was employed as a clerk in a store; he lived there fifty years and laid up $100,000. Other men worked as hard, but did not lay up money. Near that village was a large and beautiful farm. The owner of it had it from his father. He did not drink nor gamble, and yet he could not make a living, and so borrowed money, and to secure it gave a mortgage on the farm. In a few years the farm was sold and he was obliged to move away. A Scotchman, but with little money, and with a large family, passed by and saw the house was vacant and struck a bargain with the owner. He began to work, to save, and to pay, and in ten or twelve years he was the entire owner. Then he went on and laid money, and is now a rich man. The art of making money is one that should be carefully studied. If you take a dollar and lend it out at six per cent interest, it will double itself in sixteen years. If you take a dollar and buy something with it, and then sell that at a profit, and so keep doing, you increase your capital. These three ways are the foundation ways of money-making. All business is in one of these three forms. Those who succeed the best are those who know the most about what they do.—School Journal.

A PREVALENT VICE.

Surely profanity is one of the glaring vices of the day, and nowhere is it exercised more freely than in a country village. In cities, profane swearing is not common in the streets. The individual in such communities acquires a respect for the rights of his neighbors, and among multitudes he has to be cautious in regard to the prejudice of all. Any such act as obtrusive swearing in the streets would soon arouse the attention of the policeman as the representative and agent of public sentiment. In many country villages a different state of things seem to prevail. Profanity is not regarded as a thing to be ashamed of, but as a sort of manly accomplishment. In the bar room and the corner grocery the air is blue with strange oaths flung out, not in anger or by way of execration but merely to strengthen, adorn and emphasize discourse. An expletive is the rural American's great figure of rhetoric. It serves to describe a girl's beauty, to estimate a horse's speed, to measure a yeild of a wheat field. It is the climax of invective against an enemy, the chief argument in a discussion, the point of every witticism. Two men cannot meet in the street without adding to each others' health choice specimens of profanity. Plenty of decent people passing by must feel shocked, but they are powerless to express their indignation, for profanity has got to be a country habit. This vice of indiscriminate swearing, setting aside its indecency, tends to corrupt the use of language and destroy its capabilities for expressing any strong emotion. A bad habit, neighbor, master it ere you become its slave.

The meek are not those who are never at all angry, for such are insensible; but those who, feeling anger, control it, and are angry when they ought to be. Meekness excludes revenge, irritability, morbid sensitiveness, but not self-defence, or a quiet and steady maintenance of rights.—Theophyl.

Johnny's First Night.

Golly, what a high place!
Sposin' we should drop
Down among the 'ristocrats—
Wouldn't it make them hop?
Seventy-five cent folks
Sits there y' see;
One ole ivory-top
Right under me.
Let's drop a peanut
(Wish I had a peck.)
Hi! Bill it went down
Th' back of his neck.

Here, you apple boy—
Five cents? Too high!
I ain't resumed yet,
Guess I won't buy.
Feel sort o' panicky—
Just lost my dad.
What's good for panics, Bill?
One's took me bad.
Look out, you young fellah;
Who you shovin'—say!
'Les' you want your ear singed
Y' better keep away.

There goes the curtain up,
Now we're off, Bill.
Better have your clapper fixed—
Can't you keep still?
Gosh! What a pretty gal—
Everlastin' white;
Complected like whitewash—
Hi! There's a fight!
One feller's go'n to shoot.
Take away his gun!
'Nuther feller knocks him down—
Cracky, what fun!

Gals without petticoats—
Well, I'm blamed!
Never see a bally 'fore—
Bill, I'm ashamed.
Never knowed that sort clo's
Made 'em look so;
Shaped the same as feller is—
Purtier color, though.
One's got the stars and stripes—
That's the gallus rag!
Hip, hip! Hooray! Hooray!
Bully for the flag.

Bill, ain't it sing'ler how
It all comes right?
Bad feller gets knocked
Higher nor a kite;
Good feller gets his gal,
Lands on his feet;
Nothin' don't happen so
Round in Water street;
Things is mighty apt to go
Crooked thereabout.
Well, the curtain's coming down;
Let's be shovin' out.

CARL DUNDER.

HE HAS SEVERAL NEW EXPERIENCES TO RELATE.

"Well?" queried Sergt. Bendall yesterday, as Carl Dunder entered the Woodbridge street station for the first time in three weeks.

"I vhas gone to Chicago und back," replied the visitor with pride in his tones.

"Is that possible! did you take a guardian along?"

"Sergeant, vas I some greenhorns?"

"The biggest one I ever saw."

"Vhell, maype dot vas so. Vhen I goes mit der train, a young mans comes oafer to me und says vas I Carl Dunder? I vhas. All right. Say, Mr. Dunder, I haf got a new parlor game I like to show you. Maype I make you my agent in Detroit, und der salery vhas $25 per week. He dakes three cards oudt of his pocket und throws 'em around't like so."

"Exactly. That's the old game of three-card monte. You bit of course?"

"Vhell, he says he likes me to pick oudt dot Shack of hearts, und I do so. Den he likes to bet me ten dollar I can't do her again."

"And you bet?"

"Yes."

"And you lost?"

"Yes."

"Served you right."

"Vhell, maype so, but vhen I take dot young mans by der throat und shoke him until his tongue comes oudt he makes a bargain mit me. He gifs me twenty dollar to shtop off on him.

"He did?"

"Dot's how it vhas. Maype I vhas green like some grass, und maype I know how to come in vhen she rains. Vhen I go so far as Niles, an oldt man's comes in der car und says vhas I Carl Dunder? I vhas. All right. Say Mr. Dunder, here vhas a big telegram from your vife. Don't be oxcited. Maype your house vhas on fire, und maype she likes you to do some errand in Chicago. Keep cool und be prepared. Der sharge it vhas twelve shillings."

"I'll bet it was a bogus dispatch!"

"Vhell?"

"And you got caught?"

"Vhell, I take along some bogus silver dot Shakes takes in from der boys, und I gif him tree bad half-tollers. He vhas in a great hurry to go, but I see him pooty soon again. He comes by der car window und runs his tongue out at me, und says he can lick me in two minutes. Dot dispatch vhas all blank paper. Maype I vhas so soft as pumpkins, eh Sergeant?"

"You did well. Anything else?"

"Vhen I goes into Chicago, I meets a very nice gentlemen, but I don't know him. He knows me. Vhas I Carl Dunder? I vhas. Dot vhas goot. He like to tell me dot I draw a prize in some lottery."

"That's the old bunko game, and you bit, of course?"

"Vhell, if I draws some money I like to get him, don't I?"

"Of course."

"Und I haf to go along?"

"Certainly."

"Vhell, we don't go more ash two blocks pefore we meet a policemans, und I grab dot party und lay him on his back, und gif him avay for some bunko. Der officer dakes him avhay und makes it hot for him. Vhas I some cabbage-head?"

"I guess not. Anything else?"

"Vhell, when I vhas coming home, und shust before we vhas in Detroit, somepody picks my pocket."

"I thought it would end that way. How much did you lose?"

"Lose? I don't lose nothings. I takes oudt all my money, und writes on a slip of paper 'How vhas chestnuts?' und der man who got him comes around pooty soon und says if he lives two tousand years he vhill knock me oudt. I vhas only an olt Dutchmans, Sergeant, und I vhas so green der cows bite at me, but maype I goes to Chicago und back und don't got lost—eh?"

"No, James," said the young wife. "I don't like that house we looked at. Why, there isn't a cobweb in the whole pantry." "What do you want a cobweb in the pantry for?" asked her husband. "Why, to hang the spider on, to be sure."—Judge.

MISTAKES IN LANGUAGE.

A professor of English literature has prepared the following list of words and phrases to be avoided in conversation and writing:—

Guess, for suppose or think.

Fix, for arrange or prepare.

Real, as an adverb, instead of really; as, real good.

Some, for somewhat; I have studied some.

Some ten days, for about ten days.

Storms, for rains.

Try an experiment for make an experiment.

Singular subject with contracted plural verb; She don't skate well.

Plural pronoun with singular antecedent; every man or woman should do their duty.

Expect, for suspect.

First-rate as an adverb.

Party, for person.

Promise, for assure.

Posted, for informed.

Depot, for station.

Stopping, for staying.

Try and do, for try to do.

Cunning, for small.

Cute, for acute.

Funny, for odd.

Above, for foregoing.

Looks good enough, for well enough.

Somebody else's, for somebody's else.

Like, for as.

Not as good, for not so good.

Feel good, for feel well.

Between seven, for among seven.

Seldom or ever, for seldom if ever, or never.

More than you think for, for more than you think.

These kind, for this kind.

Nicely, in reply to inquiry for health.

Healthy for wholesome.

Kind of, to indicate a moderate degree.

The matter of, instead of the matter with.

THE WELL-BRED GIRL.

She never laughs or talks loudly in public places.

She never turns around to look after any one walking on the street.

She never accepts a seat from a gentleman in a street car without thanking him.

She does not wear her monogram about her person or stick it over her letter and envelopes.

She never accepts a valuable present from a gentleman acquaintance unless engaged to him.

She never wears clothing so singular or striking as to attract particular attention in public.

She does not permit gentlemen to join her on the street unless they are intimate acquaintances.

She never snubs other young ladies, even if they happen to be less popular or well-favored than herself.

She never raises her lorgnetté and tries to stare people she doesn't know out of countenance on the street.

She never forgets her ball-room engagements or refuses to dance with one gentleman and immediately dances with another.

She never speaks slightingly of her mother, and says "she don't care whether her behavior meets with maternal approbation or not.

She never takes supper or refreshments at a resturant with a gentlemen after attending the theatre unless accompanied by a lady much older than herself.

NEVER HEARD FROM HIS LETTER.

In one of Boston's suburban towns, on the Old Colony R. R., where reside several gentlemen who are frequently in the city and ride in and out together, is one whose name is Paul, and the name of another may be Smith. The last-named is "a jolly dog," with a weakness—a propensity to over-load with intoxicants, and sometimes he becomes so overcome that he does not know his nearest neighbors. On one of these occasions when the two were returning from the city, in the kindness of his heart Mr. Paul undertook to escort the bewildered man to his home.

"What's yer name, friend?" Smith asked.

"My name is Paul. Don't you know me?"

"Paul?—not old Paul?"

"Yes; people sometimes so call me."

"Well, that is curiss," said he of the thick tongue and weakness, "an' I want to ask ye a question."

"Very well—go ahead."

"I want to ask—if you are Paul—if ye ever got an answer to yer letter to the Corinthians?"

Mr. Paul was obliged to answer in the negative, and soon after landed Smith at home.—Lowell Mail.

WHAT MAY BE EATEN WITH FINGERS.

There are a number of things that the most fashionable and well-bred people now eat at the dinner table with their fingers. They are:—

Olives, to which a fork should never be applied.

Asparagus, whether hot or cold, when served whole, as it should be.

Lettuce, which should be dipped in the dressing or a little salt.

Celery, which may properly be placed on the table cloth beside the plate.

Strawberries, when served with the stem on, as they usually are in the most elegant houses.

Bread, toast, and all tarts and small cakes.

Fruits of all kinds, except melons and preserves, which are eaten with a spoon.

Cheese, which is almost invariably eaten with the fingers by the most particular people.

Either the leg or other small piece of a bird is taken in the fingers at fashionable dinners, and at most of the luncheons ladies pick small pieces of chicken without using a fork.—Chicago Herald.

An agent who was selling a humorous book made a speech to a crowd of men in a Tennessee town. W'y gentlemen," said he, 'this is the funniest book ever printed. Over here at Winchester I sold one to a lady and she laughed until she died—actually laughed herself to death." "Here," said a man, I want a copy of that book." "Yes, sir, you shall have it, Judge. Shall I send it to your office?" "No, send it to the house. I want it for my wife."—Arkansaw Traveler.

A BUSINESS TRANSACTION.

The inaptitude of the female mind (in rare instances we mean) to take a comprehensive view of a business transaction is marvelous. At a dry goods store in this city a woman recently called for some sort of trimming, which we will not attempt to describe because we could not. She was told that the piece, containing ten yards, would cost her 30 cents. Then a conversation something like the following ensued:

Customer—"O, I don't want a whole piece. How much is it by the yard?"

Sales Woman—"We have to charge five cents a yard when we cut it."

C.—"Five cents? Well, I guess seven yards will be enough. [Here the stuff is measured.]

S W.—"Thirty-five cents, please."

C.—"How much is there left?"

S. W.—"Three yards."

C. (presumably reckoning that ten times five are fifty)—"How much for the whole ten yards?"

S. W. (demurely, but with an eye to business)—"O, you could have the ten yards for 45 cents."

C.—"Very well, I guess I'll take ten yards. [Planks down 45 cents and departs satisfied.]—Newburyport Herald.

Result of a swear.—On New Year's Day two well-known Detroiters took their solemn affidavits not to refer to the weather again for the next twelve months. While both were acquainted, neither knew of the other's resolve. They met yesterday on a street corner. One was holding his ears and the other rubbing his nose. "Well?" queried one as he humped over to the icy blasts. "Well?" replied the other as he vigorously stamped his feet. They looked at each other and waited. Then they looked around them and waited. "Umph!" grunted one. "Umph!" grunted the other. Then they looked at each other and waited some more. It was cold enough for them, but they had sworn off. Yes, it was a regular blizzard, but they were bound not to say so. They finally walked away from each other, and both were heard growling: "Well, that Blank has got to be a regular doughhead!"—Detroit Free Press.

"I swear by those tall elms in yonder park—" he commenced, but she interrupted him. "Swear not by them," she said imploringly. "Why not?" "Because those trees are slippery elms," she said simply.—Merchant Traveler.

Words were given us to conceal our thoughts, eh! Just listen to the man who steals down stairs in the stilly night and catches his bare toe in the upturned corner of zinc that lurks near the firelight's ruddy glow.—Philadelphia Call.

"What do you publish a paper for, I'd like to know?" sarcastically inquried an irate politician, tackling a country editor. "For two dollars a year, in advance," responded the editor, "and you owe for four years."—Boston Transcript.

Scientists have found that blonde hair is the finest and red the coarsest. This is not a very important contribution either to physiology or to tonsology, but nevertheless, in order to prove it, a German physiologist has counted the hairs on four heads of equal weight-brains, bone, et cetera excluded—with the following result; The red head contains 90,000 hairs; the black, 103,000; the frown, 109,000; and the blonde, 140,000.

A pithy definition of a lover is the following: "A lover is a man who endeavors to be more amaiable than it is possible for a man to be; and this is the reason why almost all lovers appear ridiculous."

Farmers, Please Notice.

Why is it so many farmers trade with A. F. NILES & SON? You will hear a great many ask. The reasons are these: They can get more for their produce there than they can anywhere else, no matter whether it is butter, eggs, chickens, fowls, potatoes, beef, veal or almost anything else they raise, and then they can buy almost everything in the eatable line there. In their meat department you will find everything pertaining to a first class market, all kinds of early vegetables in their seasons. Their grocery department is the finest one in the city, and everything in its line can be found at its lowest prices. Their fish department contains everything pertaining to that line, both salt and fresh. So you see by trading with them you can get almost everything, and all under one roof. A good chance to hitch your horses, and away from the cars. They do the largest business in their lines of any firm in Springfield, so you will readily see that, handling so many goods, they don't have time to get stale. Now, when you come to Springfield, call and see us, get our prices, examine our goods (as we have men for that business alone) whether you want to buy or not. If it is so you cannot come, send your orders or goods by some one else, and we will do just as well by you as though you came. If you take the Springfield Republican you will generally see our advertisements on the first page, at the top of the column next to the last one. It will pay you to read them. Remember the place. A. F. NILES & SON, 128, 130, 132 MAIN STREET, SPRINGFIELD.

Any reasonable orders delivered free at any railroad depot within fifty miles of Springfield. (4w6)

READ AND CONSIDER the merits and advantages of the TAYLOR ADJUSTABLE LADIES' SHOE over all others:
1st. A lady can wear one size narrower than any other made.
2d. Requires no breaking; is worn with comfort from the first. A blessing to tender feet.
3d. The upper will not crack or break away from the sole.
4th. The principles of the Taylor shoe are such that a lady can wear the Opera pattern, who has been obliged to wear Common Sense styles heretofore.
5th. This shoe retains its original shape; the sides of the upper will not spread out over the sole.
Manufactured from a superior grade of selected material; elegantly stitched with silk; no nails; no lasting tacks; no wax; fair stitched; prices moderate. MR. and MRS. D. W. WHEELER will call at your house and take your orders in next two weeks. Inquire at No. 9 Pleasant-st, Ware, Mass., evenings. (2w7)

The Two Loves.

The sweetest notes among the human heart strings
Are dull with rust;
The sweetest chords adjusted by the angels
Are clogged with dust;
We pipe and pipe again our dreary music,
Upon the self-same strain,
While the sounds of crime, and fear, and desolation
Come back in sad refrain.

On through the world we go, an army marching,
With listening ears,
Each longing, sighing for the heavenly music
He never hears;
Each longing, sighing for a word of comfort—
A word of tender praise—
A word of love to cheer the endless journey
Of earth's hard, busy days.

They love us and we know it; this suffices
For reason's share;
Why should they pause to give that love expression
With gentle care?
Why should they pause? But still our hearts are aching
With the growing pain
Of hungry love, that longs to hear the music,
And longs, and longs in vain.

We love them, and they know it; if we falter,
With fingers numb,
Among the unused strings of love's expression,
The notes are dumb,
We shrink within ourselves in voiceless sorrow
Leaving the words unsaid,
And side by side with those we love the dearest,
In silence on we tread.

Thus on we tread, and thus each heart in silence
Its fate fulfills—
Waiting and hoping for the heavenly music
Beyond the distant hills.
The only difference of the love in heaven
From the love on earth below
Is, here we love and know not how to tell it,
And there we shall know.

THE PARSON OF THE GULCH.

He was known in the Gulch as the Rev. B. Hopkins; but it was generally understood that the title was an honorary one extorted by his many eminent qualities, and not borne out by any legal claim which he could adduce. "The Parson" was another of his sobriquets, which was sufficiently distinctive in a land where the flock was scattered and the shepherds few. To do him justice, he never pretended to have received any preliminary training for the ministry or any orthodox qualification to practice it. "We're all working in the claim of the Lord," he remarked one day, "and it don't matter a cent whether we're hired for the job or whether we waltzes in on our own account," a piece of rough imagery which appealed directly to the instinct of Jackman's Gulch.

We were certainly in need of a regenerator at Jackman's Gulch about the beginning of '53. Times were flush then over the whole colony, but nowhere flusher than here. Our material prosperity had had a bad effect upon our morals. The camp was a small one, lying better than 125 miles to the south of Ballarat, at a spot where a mountain torrent finds its way to join the Arrowsmith river. History does not relate who the original Jackman may have been, but at the time I speak of the camp, it contained 100 or so adults, many of whom were men who had sought an asylum there after making more civilized mining centers too hot to hold them. They were a rough, murderous crew hardly leavened by the few respectable members of society who were scattered among them.

Communications between Jackman's Gulch and the outside world was difficult and uncertain. A portion of the bush between it and Ballarat was infested by a redoubtable outlaw named Conky Jim, who, with a small gang as desperate as himself, made travelling a dangerous matter. It was customary, therefore, at the Gulch, to store up the dust and nuggets obtained from the mines in a special store, each man's share being placed in a separate bag on which his name was marked. A trusty man, named Woburn, was deputed to watch over this primitive bank. When the amount deposited became considerable, a wagon was hired, and the whole treasure was conveyed to Ballarat, guarded by a certain number of miners, who took it in turn to perform the office. Once in Ballarat it was forwarded on to Melbourne by the regular gold wagons. By this plan the gold was often kept for months in the gulch before being dispatched, but Conky Jim was effectually checkmated as the escort of the party were far too strong for him and his gang. He appeared at the time of which I write, to have forsaken his haunts in disgust, and the road could be traversed by small parties with impunity.

Comparative order used to reign during the daytime at Jackman's Gulch, for the majority of the inhabitants were out with crowbar and pick among the quartz ledges or washing clay and sand in their cradles by the banks of the little stream. As the sun sank down, however, the claims were gradually deserted, and their unkempt owners, clay bespattered and shaggy, came lounging into camp, ripe for any form of mischief. Their first visit was to Woburn's gold store, where their clean-up of the day was duly deposited, the amount being entered in the store-keeper's book, and each miner retaining enough to cover his evening's expenses. After that, all restraint was at end, and each set to work to get rid of his surplus dust with the greatest rapidity possible. The focus of dissipation was the rough bar, formed by a couple of hogsheads spanned by planks, which was dignified by the name of the "Britannia drinking saloon." Here, Nat Adams, the burly barkeeper, dispensed bad whisky at the rate of two shillings a noggin, or a guinea a bottle, while his brother Ben acted a croupier in a rude wooden shanty behind, which had been converted into a gambling hell, and was crowded every night. There had been a third brother, but an unfortunate misunderstanding with a customer had shortened his existence. "He was too soft to live long," his brother Nathaniel feelingly observed, on the occassion of his funeral. "Many's the time I've said to him, 'if you're arguin' a pint with a stranger, you should always draw first, then argue, and then shoot, if you judge that he's on the shoot.' Bill was too purlite. He must needs argue first and draw after, when he might just as well have kivered his man before talking it over with him." This amiable weakness of the deceased Bill was a blow to the firm of Adams, which became so short handed that the concern could hardly be worked without the admission of a partner, which would mean a considerable decrease in the profits.

Additions to the population of the Gulch were not numerous, and such as came at the time of which I speak were rougher and fiercer than the original inhabitants. In particular, there came a brace of ruffians named Phillips and Maule, who rode into camp one day and started a claim upon the other side of the stream. They outgulched the Gulch in the virulence and fluency of their blasphemy, in the truculence of their speech and manner, and in their reckless disregard of all social laws. They claimed to have come from Benigo, and there were some among us who wished that the redoubted Jim was on the track once more, as long as he would close it to such visitors as these. After their arrival the nightly proceedings at the Britannia bar and the gambling hell behind it became more riotous than ever. Violent quarrels, frequently ending in bloodshed, were of frequent occurrence. The more peaceable frequenters of the bar began to talk seriously of lynching the two strangers who were the principal promoters of disorder. Things were in this unsatisfactory condition when our evangelist, Elias B. Hopkins, came limping into the camp, travel-stained and foot-sore, with his spade strapped across his back and his Bible in the pocket of his moleskin jacket.

His presence was hardly noticed at first, so insignificant was the man. His manner was quiet and unobstrusive, his face pale, and his figure fragile. On better acquaintance, however, there was a squareness and firmness about his clean-shaven lower jaw, and an intelligence in his widely-opened blue eyes, which marked him as a man of character. He erected a small hut for himself, and started a claim close to that occupied by the two strangers who had preceded him. This claim was chosen with a ludicrous disregard for all practical laws of mining, and at once stamped the new comer as being a green hand at his work. It was piteous to observe him every morning as we passed to our work, digging and delving with the greatest industry, but, as we knew well, without the smallest possibility of any result. He would pause for a moment as we went by, wipe his pale face with his bandanna handkerchief and shout out to us a cordial morning greeting, and then fall to again with redoubled energy. By degrees we got into a way of making a half-pitying, half-contemptuous inquiry, as to how he got on. "I haint struck it yet, boys," he would answer cheerily, leaning on his spade, "but the the bed-rock lies deep just hereabouts, an' I reckon we'll get among the pay gravel to-day." Day after day he returned the same reply with unvarying confidence and cheerfulness.

It was not long before he began to show us the stuff that was in him. One night the proceedings were unusually violent at the drinking saloon. A rich pocket had been struck during the day, and the striker was standing treat in a lavish and promiscuous fashion which had reduced three parts of the settlement to a state of wild intoxication. A crowd of drunken idlers stood or lay about the bar, cursing, swearing, shouting, dancing, and here and there firing their pistols into the air out of pure wantonness. From the interior of the shanty behind there came a similar chorus. Maule, Phillips, and the roughs who followed them were in the ascendant, and all order and decency was swept away.

Suddenly amid this tumult of oaths and drunken cries, men became conscious of a quiet monotone which underlay all other sounds and obtruded itself at every pause in the uproar. Gradually first one man and then another, paused to listen, until there was a general cessation of the hub-bub, and every eye was turned in the direction whence this quiet stream of words flowed. There, mounted upon a barrel, was Elias B. Hopkins, the newest of the inhabitants of Jackman's Gulch, with a good-humored smile upon his resolute face. He held an open Bible in his hand, and was reading aloud a passage taken at random—an abstract taken from the Apocalypse if I remember right. The words were entirely irrelevant and without the smallest bearing upon the scene before him, but he plodded on with great unction, waving his left hand slowly to the cadence of his words.

There was a general shout of laughter and applause at this apparition, and Jackman's Gulch gathered round the barrel approvingly, under the impresssion that this was some ornate joke, and that they were about to be treated to some mock sermon or parody of the chapter read.

When, however, the reader, having finished the chapter, placidly commenced another, and having finished that rippled off into another one, the revelers came to the conclusion that the joke was somewhat too long-winded. The commencement of yet another chapter confirmed this opinion, and an angry chorus of shouts and cries with suggestions as to gagging the reader or knocking him off the barrel rose from every side. In spite of roars and hoots, however, Elias B. Hopkins plodded away at the Apocalypse with the same serene countenance, looking as ineffably contented as though the babble around him were the most gratifying applause. Before long an occasional boot pattered against the barrel or whistled past our parson's head; but here some of the more orderly of the inhabitants interfered in favor of peace and order, aided curiously enough by the afore-mentioned Maule and Phillips, who warmly espoused the cause of the little Scripture-reader. "The little cuss has got grit in him," the latter explained, rearing his bulky red-shirted form between the crowd and the object of its anger.

At last the drunken portion fell asleep under the drowsy refrain, and the others with many a sullen glance at the imperturable reader, slouched off to their huts, leaving him still perched upon the barrel. Finding himself alone with the more orderly of the spectators the little man rose, closed his book after methodically marking with a lead pencil the exact spot at which he stopped, and descended from his perch. "To-morrow night, boys," he remarked in his quiet voice, "the reading will commence at the 9th verse of the 15th chapter of the Apocalypse." With this piece of information, disregarding our congratulations, he walked away with the air of a man who has performed an obvious duty.

Never was a moral revolution brought about more rapidly and completely. Our parson carried his principle into private life. I have seen him, on hearing an unguarded word from some worker in the gulches, rush across, Bible in hand, and perching himself upon the heap of red clay which surmounted the offender's claim, drawl through the genealogical tree at the commencement of the New Testament in a most earnest and impressive manner, as though it were especially appropriate to the occasion. In time, an oath became a rare thing amongst us. Drunkenness was on the wane too. Casual travelers passing through the Gulch used to marvel at our state of grace, and rumors of it went as far as Ballarat, and excited much comment therein.

There were points about our evangelist which made him especially fitted for the work he had undertaken. A man entirely without redeeming vices would have no common basis on which to work, and no means of gaining the sympathy of his flock. As we came to know Elias B. Hopkins better we discovered that in spite of his piety there was a leven of old Adam in him, and that he had certainly known unregenerate days. He was no teetotaler. On the contrary, he could choose his liquor with discrimination and lower it in an able manner. He played a masterly hand at poker, and there were few who could touch him at "cut-throat euchre." He and the two ex-ruffins, Phillips and Maule, used to play for hours in perfect harmony except when the fall of the cards elicited an oath from one of his companions. At the first or these offenses the parson would put on a pained smile and gaze reproachfully at the culprit. At the second he would reach for his Bible and the game was over for the evening. He showed us that he was a good revolver shot, too; for when we were practising at an empty brandy bottle outside Adam's bar he took up a friend's revolver and hit it plumb in the center at twenty-four paces. There were few things that he took up that he could not make a show at apparently, except gold-digging, and at that he was the veriest duffer alive. It was pitiful to see the little canvas bag, with his name printed across it, lying placid and empty upon the shelf at Woburn's store, while all the other bags were increased daily, and some had assumed quite a portly rotundity of form, for the weeks were slipping by, and it was almost time for the gold train to start off for Ballarat.

We reckoned that the amount which we had stored at that time represented the greatest sum which had ever been taken by a single convoy out of Jackman's Gulch.

Although Ellias B. Hopkins appeared to derive a certain quiet satisfaction from the wonderful change which he had effected in the camp, his joy was not yet rounded and complete. There was one thing for which he still yearned. He opened his heart to us about it one evening.

"We'd have a blessing on the camp, boys," he said, "if we only had a service o' some sort on the Lord's Day. It is a temptin' o' Providence to go on this way without takin' any notice of it, except that maybe there's more whisky drunk and more card playin' than on any other day."

"We h'aint got no parson," objected one of the crowd.

"Ye fool!" growled another, "h'aint we got a man as is worth any three parsons, and can't he splash texts around like clay out o' a candle. What more d'ye want?"

"We h'aint got no church!" urged the same dissentient.

"Have it in the open air," one suggested. "Or in Woburn's store," said another. "Or in Adam's saloon."

The last proposal was received with a buss of approval, which showed that it was considered the most appropriate locality.

Adam's saloon was a substantial, wooden building in the rear of the hut, which was used partly for storing liquor and partly for a gambling saloon. It was strongly built of rough-hewn logs, and the proprietor rightly judging, in the unregenerate days of Jackman's Gulch, that hogsheads of brandy and rum were commodities which had best be secured under lock and key.

A strong door opened into each end of the saloon, and the interior was spacious enough, when the table and lumber were cleared away, to accommodate the whole population. The spirit barrels were heaped together at one end by their owner, so as to make a very fair imitation of a pulpit.

It was well that the building was of such a size, for the assembly upon the Sunday morning was the largest which had ever occured in the annals of Jackman's Gulch. At first it was thought that the whole population was present, but a little reflection showed that this was not so. Maule and Phillips had gone on a prospecting journey among the hills, and had not returned as yet, and Woburn, the gold-keeper, was unable to leave his store. Having a very large quantity of the precious metal under his charge he stuck to his post, feeling that the responsibility was to great to trifle with. With these three exceptions the whole of the Gulch, with clean red shirts, and such other additions to their toilet as the occasion demanded, sauntered in a straggling line along the clay pathway which led up to the saloon.

The interior of the building had been provided with rough benches, and the parson, with his quiet good-humored smile, was standing at the door to welcome them.

"Good morning, boys," he cried cheerly, as each group came lounging up. "Pass in! pass in! You'll find this as good a morning's work as any of you have done. Leave your pistols in this barrel outside the door as you pass; you can pick them out as you come out again, but it isn't the thing to carry weapons into the house of peace." His request was good-humoredly complied with, and before the last of the congregation filed in, there was a strange assortment of knives and firearms in this depositary. When all had assembled the doors were shut and the service began—the first and last ever performed at Jackman's Gulch.

The weather was sultry and the room close, yet the miners listened with exemplary patience. There was a sense of novelty in the situation which had its attractions. To some it was entirely new, others were wafted back by it to another land and other days. Beyond a disposition which was exhibited by the uninitiated to applaud at the end of certain prayers, by way of showing that they sympathised with the sentiments expressed, no audience could have behaved better. There was a murmur of interest, however, when Elias B. Hopkins, looked down on the congregation from his rostrum of casks, began his address.

He had attired himself with care for the occasion. He wore a velveteen tunic, girt around the waist with a sash of China silk, a pair of moleskin trousers and held his cabbage tree hat in his left hand. He began speaking in a low tone, and it was noticed at the time that he frequently glanced at the aperture which served for a windew which was placed above the heads of those who sat beneath him.

"I have put you straight now," he said in the course of his address; "I have got you in the right rut if you will stick in it." Here he looked hard out of the window for some seconds. "You've learned soberness and industry, and with these things you can always make up any loss you may sustain. I guess there isn't one of ye that won't remember my visit to this camp." He paused for a moment and three revolver shots rang out on the quiet summer air. "Keep your seats, d—— ye!" roared out our preacher, as his audience rose in excitement. If a man of ye moves, down he goes! The doors locked on the outside, so you can't get out anyhow. Your seats, ye canting chuckle-headed fools! Down with ye, ye dogs, or I'll fire among ye!"

Astonishment and fear brought us back into our seats, and we sat staring blankly at our pastor and each other. Elias B. Hopkins, whose whole face and even figure appeared to have undergone an extraordinary alteration, looked fiercely down on us from his commanding position, with a contemptuous smile on his stern face.

"I have your lives in my hands," he remarked; and we noticed as he spoke that he held a heavy revolver in his hand and that the butt of another protruded from his sash. "I am armed and you are not. If one of you moves or speaks he is a dead man. If not, I shall not harm you. You must wait here for an hour. Why, you fools" (this with a hiss of contempt which rang in our ears many a long day,) "do you know who it is that has been playing it upon you for a parson and a saint? Conky Jim, the bush-ranger, ye apes. And Phillips and Maule were my two right-hand men. They're off into the hills with your gold—Ha! would ye?" This to some restive member of the audience, who quieted down immediately before the fierce eye and ready weapon of the bush-ranger. In an hour they will be clear of pursuit, and I advise you to make the best of it and not follow or you may lose more than your money. My horse is tethered outside this door behind me. When the time is up I shall pass througn it, lock it on the outside, and be off. Then you may break your way out the best way you can. I have no more to say to you except that ye are the most cursed set of asses that ever trod in boot-leather."

We had time to indorse mentally this outspoken opinion during the long sixty minutes that followed; we were powerless before the resolute desparado. It is true that if we made a simultaneous rush we might bear him down at the cost of eight or ten of our number. But how could such a rush be organized without speaking, and who would attempt it without a previous agreement that he could be well supported? There was nothing for it but submission. It seemed three hours at least before the ranger snapped up his watch, stepped down from the barrel, walked back wards, still covering us with his weapon, to the door behind him, and then passed rapidly through it. We heard the cracking of the rusty lock, and the clatter of his horse's hoofs as he galloped away.

It has been remarked that an oath had, for the last few weeks, been a rare thing in the camp. We made up for our temporary abstention during the next half hour. Never was heard such symmetrical and heartfelt blasphemy. When at last we succeeded in getting the door off its hinges all sight of both ranger and treasurer had had disappeared, nor have we ever caught sight of one or the other since. Poor Woburn, true to his trust, lay shot through the head across the threshold of his empty store. The villians, Maule and Phillips, had descended upon the camp the instant that we had been enticed into the trap, murdered the keeper, loaded up a small cart with the booty, and got safely away to some fastness among the mountains, where they were joined by their wily leader.

Jackman's Gulch recovered from this blow, and is now a flourishing township. Social reformers are not in request there, however, morality is at a discount. It has been said that an inquest has been held lately on an unoffending stranger who chanced to remark that in so large a place it would be advisable to have some form of Sunday service. The memory of the one and only pastor is still green among the inhabitants, and will be for many a long year to come.—A. Conan Doyle, in London Society.

OUR DISABLED HEROES.

The newest public building in Washington is the Pension Office. It is a great red brick structure, located in Judiciary square, just north of the District building. In its material and architecture it is a marked departure from the style heretofore prevailing. Only in the matter of cost can it be considered an improvement, it having been completed for $1,000,000. Outwardly the building is very ugly; and sets at defiance all laws of architecture. It is 400 by 200 feet, and is 151 feet high. It took 15,500,000 of bricks for its walls, and the floor space is 188,258 square feet. The eight enormous columns which support the roof, each a small Bunker Hill monument, are the largest in existence, and each contains 80,000 bricks. The tile space in this room is 56,300 square feet. There is a fountain in the centre of the court, and upon gala occasions its rim is surrounded by palms and other tropical plants, while the galleries are hung with the flags of all nations.

No government that ever existed has had so many pensioners upon its rolls, or disbursed so many million of dollars for sick, poor and disabled. More money is taken from the Treasury to be paid out through the Pension Bureau than is required by any branch of the government. The lists of pensioners numbers 420,000, and there is a net gain of 20,000 a year. The annual charge to the government for these is $60,000,000, and it has run as high as $75,000,000. Last year 9000 pensioners died. There has been an increase of twenty-seven per cent in the death list. To look after this army of pensioners requires a force of 150 clerks in Washington, while the total number of employes in the country, including surgeons and speciai examiners, is not far from 4500.

The largest pension ever allowed by the government was granted a few weeks ago to a man from the village of What Cheer, Keokuk county, Ia. His name is Cyphert P. Gillette, and he based his claim on the fact that he is totally blind from the effects of his services in the army. He receives $16,480 in arrears and his allowance hereafter is to be $72 a month. Up to this time the largest pension allowed was to a man named Patterson from Elmira, N. Y., who was allowed $13,332 as arrears and $70 a month. In this case, however, after the matter had gone through the department it was discovered that the claim was a fraudulent one and the money was withheld. The government has been very liberal to a few other veterans lately. Jacob Duigman of Iowa, who claims to have lost his sight in the army, received $12,491 as arrears and W. S. Stevens of Ohio, for a like cause, has been paid $12,346, Frederick Goslin of Vermont $11,212 as back pay because he is laid up with inflamatory rheumatism, and there are a dozen of others whose names are now on the rolls whose claims aggregate nearly as high sums as those mentioned. During the past week this list of big pensions has been increased by the allowance of the claim of John Vice of Owingsville, Ky., for a pension on account of total blindness. The pension dating back to the beginning of Vice's application in the first year of the war of the rebellion, now foots up something over $14,000. The beneficiary was abjectly poor, with a helpless family, and this large sum is something beyond his wildest dreams.

RELATION OF BRAIN WORK TO BLOOD SUPPLY.

If it is true that the larger and healthier physique affords more blood for brain use, it does not follow that the larger the supply the greater the amount of brain work possible. The argument assumes that the brain has no limit to its activity, except in the quantity of blood that can be prepared for it. But it needs no scientific education to know that there are other influences which limit the thinker's activity, and that these limitations are somewhere in the mysterious recesses of the brain, or in the forces of which the brain is the organ. The physical health of the brain-worker may be perfect, his digestion unimpaired, his power to assimilate food the same, and yet he may not be able to concentrate his thoughts or carry on a complicated train of reasoning. The defect is not in his body; that is as healthy as ever; nor is it in any of the processes of blood-making—these go on as before. The trouble lies in the brain itself, whose capacity for work is measured by some hidden standard of its own, which gives warning a cessation of brain work is imperative. The body is a furnace whose power of consuming fuel is greater than the capacity of its boiler, the brain, to generate power. To keep the latter in good working condition, something more is necessary than building and feeding the fires. A supplementary but important consideration is, whether the steam beyond a certain point will not be so productive of unpleasant consequences in the form of an explosion.—Popular Science Monthly.

"Miss Lucy," exclaimed the young man eagerly, as the lovely girl made room for him to sit down by her side, "may I ask you a question?" "I—I think you may, Mr. Hankinson," said the young lady timidly, but with her heart throbbing wildly. And the infatuated young man asked her the question about the hen and a half and the egg and a half.—Chicago Tribune.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 1, 1888.

BENEVOLENCE and prodigality appear to be vieing with each other at the Hampden county-seat to see which shall contribute the most lavishly to the growth and prosperity of that city. We heartly congratulate our neighbor upon the public spirit and business energy of its citizens. If western Massachusetts ever decides to have a capital of its own we pledge to Springfield our unqualified support.

THE leading question now forcing itself upon the attention of the active politicians of this state is whether the present executive shall be permitted to again succeed himself? It is to be hoped that some issue of more importance to the general public will be discovered before the campaign is very far advanced, as the fortunes of Gov. Ames alone are hardly sufficient to awaken any considerable amount of enthusiasm. Whether Col. Campbell or Gen. Draper commands the Republican forces in a presidential year, the result of the contest cannot be regarded as doubtful.

THE annual recurrence of Memorial Day cannot fail to impress the veteran soldiers with the rapidity with which time is passing, and the extent to which the unseen enemy is quietly thinning their ranks. Many of those whom fortune permitted to escape the carnage of battle, and to cherish for a while the memories of their fallen comrades, have since gone to their rest, and left their own honored names a sacred legacy in the keeping of those who yet survive. The beautiful spring flowers strewn by loving hands upon their graves will keep forever green the memory of their deeds, but upon those who still remain advancing age will leave its ineffacable mark, and love and friendship are powerless to restore to them the vigor and freshness of youth. Ere long the harvest of death will gather them in, and they too will pass to that peaceful shore where martial strains will never again fall upon their ears, but instead thereof the music of the angels.

THE Legislature for 1888, which was prorogued last Monday, can hardly be said to be either better or worse than its predecessors of recent years. It has done something for the cause of temperance by adding further restrictions to the license law, which will have the effect to demonstrate the policy of the Republican party to restrain the liquor traffic to the full extent which public sentiment will appear to justify. That the late session has been under the lobby influence to a degree which is hardly consistent with Massachusetts notions of political purity, it would be the height of folly to deny. This however, is one of the evils for which there would seem to be no remedy, and so of course there is nothing to be done but submit to it. The good people of the commonwealth will have from this time until the first Wednesday of January next to become acquainted with the new laws and find out what old ones have been repealed. After the next session they will have the same lesson to learn over again, and so on perhaps to the end of time. How ridiculous to pretend that lawyers are a useless appendage to society!

THAT the great conflagration in Chicago was due to the perverse disposition of Mrs. O'Leary's cow appears to be well authenticated in history, but whether President Cleveland's sheep will prove equally disastrous to the Democratic party yet remains to be determined. It would seem from the general discussion which has sprung up as the result of the president's little essay on wool, that the product is an important item in the manufacture of textile fabrics throught the world. If this be true, it will be a great surprise to those who have been led to believe that it is one of the things that most manufacturers of this class have learned to do without. However this may be, it is not at all likely that an intelligent consideration of needed reforms in our tariff laws will result in any serious injury to the manufacturing interest of the country. There is undoubtedly a strong feeling at present that most industries require protection. Whether this theory is correct or not it evidently has the earnest support of a large class who are thoroughly convinced that a system of free trade would prove disastrous to their business. For this reason it seems obvious that the discussion thus far has proved decidedly advantageous to the Republican party, and that the result of the approaching election is sure to demonstrate this fact.

REPUBLICAN candidates for the presidency are springing up in great numbers, so that at present nearly every one of the middle and western states has its favorite son. Notwithstanding this fact so earnest has been the support of Blaine, in spite of his letter some months ago, that until the present week he seemed likely to outstrip all his competitors. He has now written a second letter informing his friends of his purpose not to accept a re-nomination in language so positive as to leave no doubt that his decision is final and conclusive. This last letter will have the effect to greatly encourage the friends of other candidates, and the few days remaining before the convention will be marked by an activity in political circles quite up to the standard of any previous year. A number of candidates whose names have become prominent have already secured a large and enthusiastic following, and their defeat would occasion a feeling of bitterness among their friends which would be sure to make itself felt in a greater or less degree, during the remainder of the canvass. This result however is inevitable when a new candidate is to be selected, but the Republican voters will as a rule acquiesce in the action of the convention, whether in their judgment it was the best thing that could have been done or not. The two leading parties are so much at variance upon questions of policy vitally affecting the material interests of the country, that no intelligent Republican should be willing to jeopardize success by reason of any consideration of a purely personal nature. If the Republican party does what it can by its platform and its candidates to deserve the votes of the people, it can depend upon a support which is almost certain to restore it again to power.

W. F. Tracey, the confectioner, will probably open an ice-cream parlor in conconnection with his present store.

A special meeting of the Palmer Lawn Tennis Club will be held at the Weeks House parlors Monday evening at 7.30.

The Palmer Fire department has been invited to participate in the grand parade and celebration at Bridgeport, Ct., July 4th.

The ladies of the Universalist society will serve their annual strawberry supper at the vestry of the church next Thursday evening.

Quite a valuable horse belonging to L. G. Cushman of Monson, dropped dead on Thorndike street last Sunday night from over-driving.

The selectmen are negotiating for a quantity of signs to be erected upon the various streets about the villages and the highways of the town.

The receipts of the ball game on the park Memorial Day amounted to over $176. Half of the above sum was given to the Thorndike base ball club.

An adjourned committee meeting of the Palmer Reading-Room Association will be held at the district court room next Tuesday evening at 7.30 precisely.

The Flynt Building and Construction Company has been awarded the contract to erect a new silk mill and other buildings for William MacFarlane & Co., at Centerville, N. J.

Several of the local sportsmen who had engaged to go to Worcester Memorial Day, and contest in the shooting tournament there, gave up the proposition and remained at home.

The Patterson Clubs' meeting at the residence of W. C. Hitchcock, on Knox street, last Friday evening, was largely attended. A fine musical programme was the feature of the occasion.

Hastings's bridge, near the works of the Palmer Wire Manufacturing Company, is being re-constructed and thoroughly overhauled, so that travel by that route to Springfield is temporarily impeded.

The match game of ball at Monson last Friday afternoon between the High School team and a nine representing Monson Academy, was an easy victory for the visitors. The score stood 12 to 5 at the finish.

The base ball diamond on the park was re-surveyed and laid out new last Saturday morning by one of the Boston and Albany railroad company's civil engineers, and the distance between the bases is now according to rules.

The highway surveyors are making a marked improvement upon the roads in different parts of the town. The roads in this village are under the supervision of J. S. Loomis, who has already put some of them in better condition than have been in for years.

Capt. Clarion M. Kimball will give his illustrated lecture on the "Battle of Gettysburg" next Wednesday evening at the Baptist church. During the war he was in Berdan's famous sharp-shooters, and in the 18th New Hampshire regiment; now a distinguished clergyman.

The Actives of Chicopee Falls, which are considered one of the strongest amateur nines in Western Massachusetts, will meet the Palmers on the park to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock in a match game of ball. It is expected that a large number will come from the surrounding towns to witness the contest, which promises to be a lively one.

A large wagon heavily loaded with wood, and drawn by a pair of horses, was somewhat smashed Friday afternoon by the horses becoming frightened at some unknown object while descending a hill near the state primary school. George Dean and Miles Sartwell were somewhat injured by the accident. The team is owned by by Mrs. E. N. Fay, who resides on the Monson road.

The fire steamer was taken out for practice Wednesday morning, and made a record which the engineers are not a little proud of. The trial was made at the Tenneyville pond, with these results, the boiler being filled with cold water and time being taken at the moment smoke first issued from the stack: 2¾ minutes, 5 pounds steam; 3.25, 10 pounds; 4.24, 20 pounds; 5.15, 40 pounds; at 5.20 the pumps were started, and in 6.15 from starting fire had water through two lines of hose each 150 feet long; in 11 eleven minutes the water pressure was 240 pounds, in 12 minutes 250, in 12½ minutes 270; the safety valve blew off at 110 pounds. With a 1⅛ inch nozzle, 150 feet of hose, a stream was thrown 189 feet 9 inches.

Forepaugh's Show.

The great Forepaugh show, reinforced by the famous "Wild West" exhibition, will exhibit at Palmer Friday, June 15. It is safe to say that no such gigantic exhibition as this has ever been seen here, as even Forepaugh himself has this year surpassed all his splendid managerial achievements of the past. A great sensation has been created by the displays of lasso-throwing, buffalo hunting, riding bucking horses, an attack on the Deadwood mail-coach by real Sioux Indians, exhibitions of shooting afoot and on horseback by Dr. W. F. Carver, the noted scout and dead shot; a grand, picturesque and startling partrayal of "Custer's Last Rally," introducing the savage survivors of that historical horror, and a score of other sensational and hitherto unattempted features. Adam Forepaugh, Jr., is gaining additional renown by his soul-stirring 30-horse bareback act, while his remarkable success with the lower animals was never more vividly exhibited than in the performance of "Eclipse," the trapeze-leaping pony, the dancing, fighting, and clown elephants; the rope-walking "Blondin" horse, and "Jack" and "Rose," the somersault-throwing dogs, will also be seen here on the occasion of the approaching visit, in conjunction with over one hundred acrobatic, gymnic and equestrian stars, and the intensely exciting chariot and jockey races that have helped to make the Forepaugh show famous.

Memorial Day and its Local Recognition.

The day was very appropriately observed locally, notwithstanding the threatening weather. The announcement that two exciting base ball contests were to take place during the day had a tendency to arouse much interest, not only here but in the surrounding towns and villages, and the incoming trains and other conveyances brought scores of people to help swell the crowd that thronged the streets. Many spent the day out of town, while others came home to see their friends and renew acquaintanceship. Early in the morning the streets had a patriotic appearance, for many of the business places and private residences were tastefully decorated with the national colors, while the sound of the drum and its accompanying melodies inspired the average veteran as he patrolled the sidewalks before the day's programme began. At 8.30 a. m. L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R., formed on Central street, and preceded by the Ware Cadet Band, was followed by a delegation from the Woman's Relief Corps, invited guests in carriages, and others. The procession moved in the above order down Central to Main, up Main to the Point of Rocks, where barges were taken for the cemetery at Three Rivers, where the graves of many departed comrades were carefully strewn with flowers. The cemetery at Four Corners was next visited, in which very fitting exercises were held, succeeding which the procession proceeded to decorate the graves in the Catholic cemetery in Thorndike. The cemetery on Thorndike street in this village was reached about noon, and special exercises were held. Subsequently the line reformed and marched down Thorndike to Main, down Main to Central street, where a collation was served in the banquet hall of Thomas Lodge, F. and A. M., to the members of the band, post, invited guests and others, under the supervision of the Woman's Relief Corps. At 2 o'clock p. m. the memorial exercises were held in St. Paul's Universalist church. The interior of the structure was very artistically decorated with flowers, beautiful potted plants and the national colors. Upon the platform were seated Col. H. R. Stoughton of Shelby, Ala., Commander H. E. W. Clark, Dr. William Holbrook, Rev. Mr. Virgin of Bondsville and Rev. F. W. Betts, the orator of the day. Commander H. E. W. Clark introduced the speaker in a few well-chosen words, who said substantially: Members of the Woman's Relief Corps and L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R., I bid you welcome:

"The profound thinker is always a moralist. Not that he who thinks actively and truly must always teach a moral, nor is it necessary to illustrate the moral of every thinker. He is poorly provided for the sharp contests of life who keeps his mind continually in the mood of death-bed experiences. There is a time for all things, a time to be born and a time to die; a time to rejoice, and a time to be sad. Nor will the careful teacher teach by rule and square. He is a moralist because he finds the universe leading humanity up to higher moral purposes, not in one given way, but by divers paths. Life is not crowned with unity or completeness. The chemist or naturalist each in his department considers his specialty, and however far-reaching his understanding, is but a minute part of a great whole, moved and controlled for a great central purpose. All experience indicates a never-ceasing outreaching for a loftier ideal, that ideal laying hold upon the divine. Burns finds upon his plow-share marks of deity, and the Nazarene finds in the lily a reminder, a wise, loving, ceaseless care. The universe is a mighty tapestry in the warp and woof of which are woven divine plans. In this broad view let us study the events which bring us together to-day. Twenty-seven years ago the war of the rebellion commenced, and many will say it was the result of human plans or of mere accident. To the philosopher there are no accidents, but ever a mighty moral purpose working by various methods in and through human affairs, through the most highly-trained and most humble of earth, through a Napoleon, a Washington, a Grant, or the most humble miner a thousand feet below the surface of the earth. True, the war developed much that was unwholesome. There were mean purposes served, hatreds gratified, and selfishness and avarice coined into gold. Yet not here lies the golden thread of truth in the matter of this mighty contest. Upon every battle field and each heart has been taught the grand truths of liberty and fraternity. If we are to have a nation of one faith, one desire, one law, one purpose, we must abolish the spirit of hatred. At the close of the war two classes returned to their homes, the northern soldier flushed with his victories, and the southern soldier defeated and mourning the lost cause. Now we should study the relations of the individual to each and all, even up to the fulness of national life. Prominent among the results of the war stands the emancipation of the colored race. Four millions of ignorant people, for two hundred years in bondage to a higher race, were given their liberty. The four millions are increased to between six and seven millions. I know that in considering this matter I am on dangerous ground, yet I am persuaded that the causes which will most severely try our institutions in the coming years are just here, and I must speak faithfully the facts as I find them. A Yankee does not love a colored man any better than does a Southerner. We protest against the coming of Chinese and Italian laborers, and yet we have between six and seven millions of people who never had a dignified idea of manhood. Capitalists from the North have gone South for dollars and little else, except when such a man Col. Stoughton carries his religion with him and tries to practice it. Given that I believe the negro is inferior, and I shall never do much to build him up in matters I believe he can never be built up in. Here is one race developed by two hundred years of culture, and another debased by two hundred years of servitude. The problem is deeper than politics. The blacks are cheated and wronged in every way, and will be until they are better taught. The right to vote does not necessarily elevate the negro. The Yankee must lose some of his selfishness and the Southerner some of his narrowness, and by united efforts good will result. The laws of human history demand that the wheels of civilization shall not stop where there are to-day. We must perfect the work of the fathers. We must be one people and one brotherhood, or the forces loosened by the breaking of the millions of chains will swamp our institutions. Brotherhood, sympathy, helpfulness and education, are the great needs."

Base Ball.

PALMERS, 9; NORTHAMPTON FIREMEN, 5.

Another victory was gained by the Palmers in the game on the park last Saturday afternoon with the Northampton Firemen. The features of the game were the excellent pitching of Cotter and Keating and the able support given the former by Kane, the Palmer's catcher. The members of the local team batted Keating hard at times, Cotter, Kane and McGrath each making two-base hits. The Palmers fielded well with the exception of Martin Rooney's errors in center field. Betts made some very difficult stops, but his throwing was wild, and something unusual for him, he giving the visitors three runs that they would not have otherwise had. The following is the score:

| INNINGS, | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Palmers | 3 | 3 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 2 | 0 | 0 | —9 |

PALMERS 7, THORNDIKES 6.

About 600 people saw the Palmers defeat the Thorndikes in a closely-contested game of ball on the grounds of the latter club Wednesday morning. Rooney proved a puzzle to the Thorndike team, except in one inning, when he was batted hard. In the first inning the Thorndikes went to the bat. Greene and Byars fouled out, while Connor hit a hot one to Kee, who threw him out at first. Kee went to bat in the Palmers' first and struck out. Kinnare hit safely and reached first. McGrath lined one to Flynn and got out, while Kinnare reached second base. Haley batted a pretty ball, but Shackley struck out and left them all on bases. In the Thorndikes' second inning Flynn and Daily went out on hits, and Gallagher struck out. The Palmers' left fielder went to bat in the second and made a nice base hit, Martin Rooney hit safe and Betts struck out, while St. John made a good hit and Michael Rooney brought in the first run. Kee struck out while three men were on bases, but Kinnare's fly sent in Rooney and St. John. Kinnare got out stealing second. Brosnahan struck out in the next inning, while McElroy and Byars hit to Betts and were both put out at first. Some good hitting was done by McGrath, Haley and Shackley in the Palmers' third, but the ball went each time in unfortunate places. Chapman flied out to McGrath in the first of the fourth, and Connors made a two-base hit. Daily and Gallagher were the next two victims of Rooney's pitching. The fourth inning for Palmer was noticeable for the heavy batting made. Betts sent a high ball into left field, which was secured by Brosnahan, who made a fine running catch. St. John made a good hit, stole third, and came in on a hit by Kee. Kinnare made a long hit which sent Kee to third, but was declared out on a close decision. McGrath made a clever strike, but the ball was captured at second base. The Thorndikes batted heavily in the fifth, Brosnahan leading off with a base hit. McElroy made a two-base hit while Greene did likewise, which sent Brosnahan in with the first run. McElroy and Greene came in on a two-base hit of Byars', who also brought in a run by a hit of Connors', who got out at first. Flynn hit safely and came in by another hit made by Gallagher, who was thrown out at first. Brosnahan struck out. The fifth inning for the Palmers made no difference with the standing of the score. In the sixth for the Thorndikes McElroy got out by a hit to the Palmers' pitcher. Chapman and Connors struck out. In the last of the sixth Betts made a great hit and reached first base. Kee struck out. Kinnare's fly sent in Betts, and the score was tied. St. John was caught out in right field, while McGrath hit out to Gallagher. Daily and Brosnahan made safe hits in the seventh, and when McElroy hit the ball he was thrown out at first, and a double play closed the inning. The Palmers batted well in the seventh, but unfortunately. Greene went to the bat in the eighth and hit to Betts. Byars reached first on a safe hit, Chapman hit to Betts, and Shackley passed the ball to second and put Byars out while running. Good batting was the feature of the Palmers' eighth, but Betts, St. John and Rooney were left on the bases. Connors, Flynn and Gallagher proved the victims in the Thorndikes' last inning. The score was tied and somebody had got to make a run. McGrath went out by a foul to the catcher. Haley followed and made a base hit. He stole second on the next pitched ball, and Shackley came to the rescue with one of the highest and longest hits out into center field that was ever made on the grounds. Haley brought in the seventh run amid enthusiastic cheering. The score follows:

PALMERS 10, THORNDIKES 4.

Much interest was manifested in the result of the second game between the Palmers and Thorndikes, and fully 1500 people gathered on the park Wednesday afternoon to witness that which proved an easy victory for the home team. The chief feature of the contest was the remarkable pitching of Cotter of the Palmers, and the excellent support given him by Kane. McElroy of Boston pitched a fine game for the visitors. The Thorndikes took their innings at the bat. Greene, Byars and Chapman made small hits and were thrown out at first by McGrath and Betts. In the Palmers' first Kee went out on a hit to McElroy, while Shackley made the first bag safely. McGrath struck out and Kinnare got out while stealing second. Connors, Flynn and Daily all struck out in the second inning for Thorndike. Shackley made the first run for the Palmers in the second inning. Gallagher, Byars and McElroy all struck out in the third. The third inning for the Palmers failed to record a run. In the first of the fourth Greene hit safely, Byars got first on being hit by a pitched ball, Chapman made a clean hit, and Greene came in with the first score. Flynn, Daily and Gallagher couldn't "get on" to Cotter's twists. Kinnare made a base hit in the Palmer's fourth and brought in the second run by a hit of Shackley's, who reached first. McGrath, Martin Rooney and Betts struck out. In the fifth Brosnahan and McElroy struck out, while Chapman got out by a hit to Kee and an assist to first base. The Palmers made no runs in fifth inning. Connors, Flynn and Daily again faced Cotter and struck out. Kinnare hit a liner and reached first. McGrath made a clean strike and the ball landed in center field. Kinnare attempted to score, but was thrown out. Betts and McGrath came home on Shackley's two-base hit, while the latter stole third and then scored. Gallagher hit to Betts in the seventh and was thrown out. McElroy reached first. Greene made a two-base hit and the former scored, followed by Greene. Great batting was the feature of the seventh inning for the Palmers. Kee, Kinnare and Shackley brought in the runs by a fine hit of Mike Rooney's. Flynn brought in a run in the Thorndikes' eighth, while the others struck out. Betts brought in one run in the Palmers' eighth, while Cotter fouled out to Flynn, Kane struck out and Kinnare was thrown out at first. The Thorndikes were shut out in the ninth inning by Cotter's effective work. The Palmers did not play their last inning, owing to the standing of the score, which follows:

HAMPDEN.

Miner Noble has sold his house to I. Prillings for $1300.

The infantile whistle of the creamery is heard, and John Warren gathers the cream.

Rev. E. P. Root of East Hampton, Ct., was telegraphed for to attend the funeral of A. O. Thresher, but was unable to come.

Orrin Harwood of Stafford, who lacks but three months of being one hundred years old, has come to live with his grandson, Erwin Temple. Mr. Temple is putting up a new barn the same size as his old one, and attached to it, but so situated as to spoil a beautiful outlook from the front part of his house.

The funeral of Allen O. Thresher was largely attended at his life-long home on Sunday, Rev. Mr. Merriam conducting the services. For several years he was connected with the Congregational society, serving as a member of the parish committee when Rev. E. P. Root, who was his warm personal friend, was pastor. He served as deputy sheriff for six years and did a large business for a country deputy, and any case committed to him was attended to with dispatch and carefulness, so much so that he was never drawn into a law suit or paid any damages. He was a Mason, and insured in the Masonic Mutual Relief Association. For two years he had fought bravely a bronchial trouble, which terminated in consumption. He leaves an aged mother, a wife and six children, one daughter being a teacher at Ludlow.

THORNDIKE.

M. W. Flynn has accepted a position with Dentist Hill of Palmer.

Miss Mabel Armour of West Warren spent Sunday with friends in town.

The cloth room hands defeated the dye house hands at a game of ball last Saturday, in six innings.

John Crowley, who was injured about the head and face by jumping from a freight train last week, is around as usual.

James H. Lyons has gone to Springfield to work, having accepted a position with B. Frank Steele, the wholesale fruit merchant.

Mrs. McLaughlin, who injured her collar bone by a fall, and who was attended by Dr. Flynn, is doing nicely, and will soon recover.

Mr. and Mrs. John Riley have the sympathy of the community in their deep bereavement, having buried two children the past week, who died of scarlet fever.

The reunion of the Royce family, which was held at Forest Lake Garden last week, was a pleasant affair, about 50 being present. The Junior class of Wilbraham picnicked there on Friday and enjoyed a pleasant time.

The Thorndikes met with a defeat Saturday at the hands of the Chicopee Falls club, due to the home team failing to play any kind of a fielding game. Gallagher pitched for the Thorndikes, but was in no condition to play, owing to a ride on the cars all the night before in order to reach here Saturday. The score was 15 to 8.

WILBRAHAM.

"Pieria" society gives a strawberry festival at Rich Hall this evening.

Dr. G. M. Steele preached in the M. E. church at Hazardville Sunday morning.

Prof. Gill of the academy preached the memorial sermon to the G. A. R. post in the M. E. church Sunday.

Rev. J. R. Cushing and wife returned to Wilbraham Tuesday, after having a very pleasant visit to the general conference.

The Junior class of the the academy had their annual ride last Friday. The place visited was Forest Lake, and all had a very enjoyable time. The programme at the pavilion was well rendered and consisted of the following, W. L. Eaton being toastmaster: "Class of '89," R. H. Guilbord; declamation, Ida C. Rogers; trio, Misses Garner, C. A. Hall, Mr. Guilbord; "Our Girls," Claudia A. Ross; class song.

The memorial services held in the town on Wednesday last were very appropriate to the occasion. The G. A. R. post was addressed in the Congregational church by Dr. Flagg, a veteran captain. Immediately after which the veterans, accompanied by all the Wesleyan students, marched to the Dell cemetery, where Rev. M. S. Howard made a very touching address, which was followed by the singing of an original hymn, written for the occasion, by Rev. M. S. Howard. After the services the veterans decorated the graves of their fallen comrades with many beautiful flowers.

The Wesleyan base ball team, accompanied by a party of admiring students, took their annual trip on Saturday last. In the morning they played the Aggies at Amherst. The game began with the Aggies at the bat, who succeeded in scoring two runs. Then came the Wesleyans, who made a brilliant score on batting. In this inning, Sullivan, the Wesleyan's catcher, severely injured his hand while running bases, but he kept on playing during the remainder of the game, much to the pleasure of the Wesleyans. The Aggies became completely discouraged, and the remainder of the game was well played on the Wesleyan's side, until the end of the seventh inning, when they were compelled to stop in order to have time for the game in the afternoon with the Willistons. The score at the end was Wesleyans 23, Aggies 9. In the afternoon the Wesleyans contested with their old rivals, the Willistons, at Easthampton. The Wesleyans were shut out in the first inning, and becoming rattled made several wild throws, allowing the Willistons to score four runs. The next inning each side made two runs. During the third inning the Wesleyans succeeded in raising the number of runs to six, as did also the Willistons. At this point a dispute arose which was continued until a shower came up and they were compelled to stop, the score being six to six, although at the close of the game Wesleyan had but one man out and three were on bases. The Willistons play the Wesleyans at Wilbraham to-morrow.

MONSON.

Duncan Clark's female minstrels are to occupy Central Hall this evening.

Forepaugh's advertising car passed through here Saturday morning.

Mrs. I. A. Priest will form her last class in painting this season next Monday.

Rev. F. W. Betts of Palmer will occupy the pulpit of the Universalist church next Sunday, in exchange with Rev. Mr. Priest.

The Monson vs North Monson ball game was not played last Saturday owing to the non-appearance of the latter nine.

The ball game between the Palmer High School and the Academy nines on Flynt's Park last Friday was won by the former.

Parley S. Anderson, while at work at Bliss & Moulton's steam saw mill Monday, had his leg broken above the ankle.

The new stone wall on the grounds of St. Patrick's church on Main street is completed, and is one of the finest in town.

Quite a number from this place attended the ball game between the Palmers and Northampton Firemen at Palmer last Saturday.

The heavy thunder shower of Monday was very severe. Lightning struck in several places, but no particular damage was done.

Tony Pastor made his annual appearance here Saturday, and dispensed his perfection soap to a large crowd that gathered around his wagon to hear his street entertainment.

There will be a meeting of the base ball association at Memorial hall Thursday evening. All who are interested in the game and organization of a club are requested to be present.

Mr. Flynt intends grading and otherwise improving his base ball park, which when completed will add greatly to the beauty of the grounds.

The ball game between the clerks and Academy base ball nines at Flynt's Park Memorial Day at 10 o'clock resulted in a victory for the latter team by a score of 19 to 14.

Hook and Ladder Co. No. 1 held their annual meeting last night and elected these officers: Foreman, E. J. Osborne; 1st assistant, H. H. Wood; 2d assistant, C. E. Smith; clerk, H. C. Norcross.

The operetta "Gyp, Junior," was presented by the children of St. Patrick's church at Central Hall last evening. The little ones were all well trained and the entertainment was much enjoyed, after which a social followed.

The fairy opera, "Laila," was very acceptably presented by the young ladies of the Congregational church at Central Hall Tuesday evening to a large audience. The singing by the children was good, and the proceeds will net quite a handsome sum.

The lawn party at the Academy last Friday evening was a very enjoyable affair. The grounds were beautifully lighted by Chinese lanterns, ice cream, strawberries, and fruit were served on the grounds, after which the party adjourned to the Academy hall for a social.

The graduating exercises will take place Tuesday morning at 10.30 in Memorial Hall, and after these exercises the alumni dinner will be served at the Cushman House. Tuesday evening a public reception of the alumni will be held in Academy hall. Class tree exercises will take place Wednesday morning at the academy.

There will be a musical entertainment at Academy Hall next Wednesday evening by the vocal pupils of Mrs. M. J. Sumner, assisted by Mr. Orcutt and Mr. Williams, vocalists, Miss Keefe and Miss Cantwell accompanists. The admission will be 25 cents, and the entire proceeds go toward paying for the grand piano.

A club of young girls, called the Busy Bees, connected with the Universalist society, will have a sale of fancy articles in Central hall next Tuesday evening. Ice cream, cake and strawberries will be served. At the urgent request of many, the young people will repeat "Mother Goose and her temperance family," at this time.

The following is the programme of the closing exercises of this term at the academy: On Sunday evening, June 17th, the baccalaureate sermon will be delivered at the Congregational church by Rev. P. W. Lyman, formerly of Belchertown. There will be a public meeting of the Linophilian society in the Academy hall on Monday evening.

The ball game between the two nines composed of members of the Windsor club was played before a large crowd on Flynt's Park Memorial Day, at 2.30 o'clock. A. T. Robinson's side led until the 7th inning, when their catcher give out and W. J. Randall's side finally won by a score of 26 to 21. A turkey supper was served at the Monson House after the game.

Memorial Day was fully observed here. The memorial sermon at Memorial hall was largely attended Sunday afternoon. Rev. F. S. Hatch, pastor of the Congregational church, preached from Paul's second epistle to Timothy, 2d chapter, 3d verse, "Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." The singing was furnished by a large choir, under the direction of Lane's Orchestra. On Memorial Day Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., assembled at headquarters at 11 o'clock and proceeded to Moulton Hill cemetery, where the graves of the deceased comrades were decorated. At 2 o'clock the exercises of the day were held in Memorial Hall, and were well attended. The Grand Army post attended in a body. The oration was delivered by Rev. Mr. Perry of Hudson, N. Y., formerly of Palmer, after which a line of march was formed and the soldiers, preceded by the Monson Silver Drum Corps, marched to the village cemetery and decorated the graves of departed heroes. After the services there, the post re-marched to headquarters and dispersed.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The Amateur Orchestra played at the Chanfrau entertainment Tuesday evening.

Memorial Day proved to be one of the finest of the season, the rain in the early morning laying the dust and making it much easier and finer getting about. A detachment of J. W. Lawton Post, G. A. R., visited the cemetery at Ware Center in the early morning and decorated the graves of comrades there. About 9 o'clock a procession was formed by the post and members of the fire department, F. P. Clark marshal and E. E. Richardson adjutant, met and were escorted to the several cemeteries. Aspen Grove cemetery was visited last and prayer offered at the soldiers' monument by Post Chaplin Rev. Silias A. Spooner. After the decoration of the graves, over 50 in number, the procession proceeded to the Unitarian vestry, where a bountiful collation had been prepared by the ladies. In the evening the Town Hall was well filled to listen to the address of Rev. E. A. Horton, Department chaplin of Boston, and music by the Amateur Orchestra. The address was one of the most interesting ever delivered in Ware. The soldiers monument was beautifully decked with evergreen and flowers by the sophomore class of the high school.

A FEELING of universal sorrow was awakened by the announcement made early in the week that Gen. Sherman was lying at death's door as the result of a complicated affection of the heart. Since the first serious attack there has been at times marked improvement, but the favorable symptoms have usually been followed by a relapse, so that there seems to be little hope of his ultimate recovery. Few living men hold a warmer place in the hearts of the American people than Gen. Sheridan, and the course of his disease will be watched with the greatest interest until the final result is definitely known.

THE national Republican convention promises to be so much of a show that tickets for admission are said to be selling as high as $150 and upwards. It is very doubtful if purchasers at these rates will ever become quite satisfied that they have got their money's worth.

LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, May 30, 1888.

The eastern Hampden senatorial district has had a satisfactory representative in Senator Spellman of Springfield, and his politics has not prevented him from doing service to the Republicans as well as to the Democrats. It is doubtful whether he will be returned, for the district is naturally Republican. In the House the tenth Hampden district has had a good representative in Mr. Grosvenor of Ludlow, a man who is popular with his fellow-members, and has been a material contributor to the shortening of the session. His district would do well to send him for a second term.

Thursday's session brought bad luck to the bill to incorporate the Boston and Suburban Elevated Railroad Company, which had passed so smoothly through the House. It was quietly defeated in the Senate without a word of debate, so that no one could tell from looking on what ailed it. But its death showed the fine, active work of the lobby, which is sometimes most skilful when it makes the least show.

The Senate also defeated, 15 to 19, the House bill to make $3.40 the price which cities and towns shall pay per week for the support of their insane poor in the state lunatic hospitals. Reconsideration was refused, 16 to 18.

Some of the members of the House, led by Mr. Keene of Holyoke, tried on Thursday to procure the admission of a bill for the protection of section men on railroads from being run over while they are at work. But the House could not see that the scheme was practicable, and the bill was voted down, 56 to 104.

Most of Thursday afternoon was given by the House to the bill to enable the Hartford and Connecticut Western road to build its line to Springfield, but Southern Berkshire worked hard to defeat it on the ground that it would kill the proposed New York and Massachusetts road through that section, and the bill was defeated by 70 to 85 and 29 pairs.

The finance committee on Friday reported the bill for the state tax. It is for $2,250-000, or the same as last year. The estimated expenses were $5,748,485.78, and the Legislature has authorized the expenditure of $6,242,380.29, or an excess of $457,894.51 above the estimate. Of this sum, $259,500 is for public buildings; $103,277 is for special grants, and $28,691 is for deficiencies. By counties the tax is as follows: Barnstable, $23,715; Berkshire, 48,870; Bristol, $145,305; Dukes, $4005; Essex, $234,630; Franklin, $23,017; Hampden, $102,285; Hampshire, $34,245; Middlesex, $374,242; Nantucket, $3487; Norfolk, $132,637; Plymouth, 67,072; Suffolk, $862,942; Worcester, $193,545.

The House on Friday forenoon engrossed the bill to compel the putting of electric wires underground, and it was taken into the Senate where they killed it at once without debate by 6 to 24.

On Friday afternoon the House became satisfied that it could not be prorogued May 26, as voted, so they passed an order to meet Monday at 11 and to be prorogued Tuesday.

A long debate occurred on the bill for school superintendence for the country towns, and though it was sharply opposed, yet it was ordered to a third reading by a large majority. Among the speakers for it were Messrs. Griswold of Greenfield, Wilde of Malden, Vanderhook of Gay Head, Wadlin of Reading, Smith of Athol, Hartwell of Ayer, Slocum of Newton and Brigham of Marlboro.

This week has seen the end of the Legislature, and it is singular how close the record of legislation runs to that of last year. Then there were 452 acts and 107 resolves, and this year there were 444 acts and 104 resolves. It was only by forcing matters that prorogation was reached Tuesday night, and at the usual gait of the Legislature they would have finished in good shape on Friday, but there was a session of three hours and a half Monday evening, and they were prorogued by Secretary Pierce at quarter past eleven o'clock Tuesday night.

The only veto of the session came at the very end. It was on the resolve appropriating $10,000 to the State Firemen's Association. Party pressure was put upon the Governor to make him sign the resolve. Senator Kingsley of Middlesex, told him it would cost him 10,000 votes to veto the measure, but the Governor replied it was not a question of how many votes it cost if it was a resolve that ought not to be signed. Members who were opposed to the appropriation denounced it as a most outrageous piece of legislation. Every one acknowledged the services of the firemen, but it did not appear why their respective localities should not help them, especially as a payment from the state treasury would put a tax on many towns, including the whole of Barnstable county, which would get no benefit from the money. Governor Ames showed himself courageous and equal to the emergency, regardless of his personal fortunes.

But he did not veto the bill for the benefit of the Iron Hall, an order which Commissioner Tarbox condemned, and on which Commissioner Merrill made a sharp attack. He was labored with persistently by both sides, Commissioner Merrill trying to influence him to veto the bill, and ex-Gov. Robinson and ex-Councillor John H. Butler, counsel for the Iron Hall, exerting their powers to get his signature. At the same time that he signed that bill he also signed the bill to permit the gas commissioners to license the manufacture of water gas.

Educational matters came out well at the last. Though the bill for a half-mill tax for a permanent school fund was defeated, yet there was substituted for it an appropriation of $40,000 to be used to help the schools in towns of less than 3.000,000 valuation, which have levied as much for the public schools as they have averaged to levy for the previous five years, and which do not have less than the average tax rate of the state. The bill to permit the union of towns into districts for the employment of superintendents also passed and received the Governor's signature. These measures have received the earnest support of the state board of education, which is particularly interested in overcoming the illiteracy of the poor towns, where they have not money enough for good teachers and cannot afford to hire superintendents.

Other matters of importance which may be mentioned are these: The bill for the relief of poor soldiers and their families was signed. Its opponents predict that it will draw to Massachusetts a horde of men from other states who have no possible claim on our bounty, to get the aid which the bill permits. The bill to permit judges to sentence convicts to death by electricity was defeated, but the resolve for an investigation by the prison commissioners was passed. The House defeated the Senate bill for the better prevention of fraudulent marriages, and by 65 to 85 voted down the bill to raise the auditor's salary from $3000 to $3500. A lease of life has been given to the car stove by the resolve for an investigation of the matter by the railroad commissioners, and a report to the next Legislature. The Australian ballot bill and the bill to regulate the holding of caucuses were both signed. The Senate defeated both the elevated road bills which had passed the House. An appropriation of $100,000 was made for the Framingham normal school, only $50,000 to be spent this year.

The session has been the shortest since 1882, when they were prorogued May 27. It has been a good Senate, but it has not had opportunity to show its powers for work, because it has been compelled to wait for the House. The lower branch has been the best working body since 1879, and has attended faithfully to business. The Legislature broke up with the air full of political schemes about making President Boardman a congressman, Speaker Noyes governor, and so on for the Legislative offices for next year.

are the effects produced by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Sores, Scabs, Glandular Swellings, Boils, Carbuncles, and all kinds of Humors disappear, as if by magic by the use of this

STANDARD BLOOD-PURIFIER.

F. C. James, of Albany, Greene County, Tenn., writes: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla saved the life of my only child. When three years old her head was covered with Scrofulous Sores. She became almost helpless. Skillful physicians did all they could to relieve her, but failed. At last I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, gave it to her according to directions, and she immediately began to improve. Encouraged by the result, I continued to give her this medicine until the cure was complete."

PURIFY YOUR BLOOD.

Impurities in the blood produce diseases. Bodily and mental health depend upon a healthy condition of the blood. The blood, particularly in the spring and during the hot summer months, becomes clogged with impurities, which poison it and generate disease. A harmless blood purifier, without a particle of mineral poison in it, such as mercury or potash, is necessary to remove these impurities and to restore the healthy tone of mind and body. The best purifier and tonic known to the world is Swift's Specific (S. S. S.). In regard to its wonderful purifying and tonic powers we give a few testimonials as follows:

Mr. Wm. A. Siebold, with Geo. P. Rowell & Co., 10 Spruce street, New York, writes March 29, 1888: "I feel it my duty, for the benefit of others who may be afflicted as I was, to write you this letter, which you can use as my testimony in any way you choose. I will answer any inquiry from others in relation to the facts herewith stated. In February last I suffered great pain and inconvenience from boils all over my neck; I could not turn my head without acute pain, and my blood was in poor condition. After trying all the usual remedies in such cases, and finding no relief, by the persuasion of Mr. J. W. Fears, manager of the New York office, I usedone bottle of S. S. S., and improved rapidly, and very soon I was entirely relieved of my 'Job's Comforters.' Now not a sign of my affliction can be seen. I feel strong and cheerful. S. S. S. is a fine tonic as proved in my case. I sleep soundly and my appetite is good."

"Dr. J. N. Cheney, a well-known physician, writes from Ellaville, Ga.: "I use S. S. S. in convalescent fever cases with the best results. It will, in my judgment, prevent summer dysentery, if one will take a few bottles in the spring, thus preparing the bowels for the strains of summer."

Mrs. Scott Liston, 116 Zane street (Island), Wheeling, West Virginia, writes: "Having used S. S. S. for the blood, I can safely say that it beats anything I have used to cleanse the blood and make a new being out of a person."

Mr. M. S. Hamlin, Winston, N. C., writes: "I use it every spring. It always builds me up, giving me appetite and digestion, and enabling me to stand the long, trying, enervating, hot summer days. On using it I soon become strong of body and easy of mind."

The Old Broken Bucket.

How sad to my heart are the memories of childhood,
When passing reflections present them to view,
The cane of rattan that, when I had been wild, would Descend on my back in a lively tattoo.
The wide-spreading woodpile, the axe that stood by it,
The torture these caused me no language can tell;
And, oh, how I pale as in fancy I spy it,
The bucket on wash day I bore to the well,
The paint-covered bucket, the bale-rope bound bucket,
The old broken bucket I bore to the well.

The bony old horse and the wreck it dragged after,
The quaint village schoolhouse that stood near the hill;
The church where our features, distorted with laughter
We could not suppress, I can picture them still.
The motley attendance of overgrown children,
Who rallied at school to the sound of the bell—
But, oh, the deep cup of my anguish was filled when
The bucket on wash day I bore to the well.
The wire-handled bucket, the lop-sided bucket,
The old broken bucket I bore to the well.

The fussy schoolmaster, who frowned on all pleasure,
Is gone and his voice will no longer be heard;
The well-deserved slipper, and woes without number,
All deepest resentment within me have stirred.
But one recollection with terror still fills me
And casts o'er my childhood a sad, painful spell;
No other event with such feelings instills me
As the bucket on wash day I bore to the well.
The old leaky bucket, the weather warped bucket,
The old broken bucket I bore to the well.

HOW A MAN WENT FISHING.

A Bangor man recently was going to spend the day fishing, he said to his wife, and after starting out, followed by her sweet assurances of success, he leisurely made his way to a fish market and ordered a liberal quantity of pickerel to be sent up to the house for supper. Coming home at nightfall the pleasant smile which his wife gave him assured him that he was successful in his scheme and had pleased her. He said he left the fish at the market and inquired after their safe arrival. His wife sweetly invited him to the kitchen to see them. No man is ever unwilling to see the result of a day's fishing, but the present instance is an exception. The day's batch proved to be a peck of clams. The supply of pickerel had been exhausted, and the market boy, supposing something was wanted for supper, took up the unfortunate substitute.—Springfield Republican.

THINGS WELL TO KNOW AND DO.

Hot sunshine will remove scorch.

The best liquid for cleaning old brass is a solution of oxalic acid.

Kerosene applied to unused stoves will keep them from rusting.

A damp cloth dipped in common soda will brighten tin-ware easily.

To clean knives:—Cut a small potato, dip it in the brick dust and rub them.

Grease may be removed from silk by applying magnesia to the wrong side.

New iron should be gradually heated at first—it will not be so likely to crack.

Paint splashes may be removed from window panes by a very hot solution of soda, using a soft flannel.

Mildewed linen may be restored by soaping the spots, and while wet covering them with powdered chalk.

To extract paint from clothing:—Saturate the spots with spirits of turpentine, let it remain several hours, then rub it and it will drop off.

Javalle water is indispensable in laundry work; dip any stains in it for a moment, then in boiling water, and they will disappear. If any yellowness remains, bleach.

Boiling water made strong with ammonia and applied with a whisk broom, cleans willow chairs admirably. Soap should never be used, as it turns them yellow.

Ammonia greatly lessens the work of cleaning kitchen utensils, and of washing windows. Rubbing a Brussels carpet with strong ammonia water will brighten it, and remove stains.

Lamp burners that have become dim and sticky, can be renovated by boiling them in strong soda water, using a tomato can for this purpose; then scour the burners with sapolio and they will be as good as new.

Copperas dissolved in boiling water, will instantly cleanse iron sinks and drains. A few drops of spirits of turpentine mixed with stove blacking, lessens labor, and adds polish. Kerosene in cooked starch (a teaspoonful to a quart) will prevent clothes sticking to the irons, and gives a gloss; the scent evaporates in the drying. (Powdered borax is good, if one decidedly objects to the smell of kerosene.)—Good Housekeeping.

A PRIZE ESSAY.

The souvenir dancing orders of the Albany Printing Pressmen's Union contained the following contribution from a "printer's devil," which is too funny for publication in so-called comic papers; at least, they seldom have such genuine humor. It is entitled a "Prize Essay on Newspapers:"

Newspapers is called vehicles of information.

Reporters is what is called the "staff"—so many of them being "sticks." They work hard—at refreshment bars.

Proof-readers is men that spoils the punctuation of compositors. They spell a word one way to-day, and another way tomorrow. They think they be intelligent persons; compositors think different.

Compositors is men that sets up the types—and sometimes the drinks. Compositors is very steady men when they are sober—which they seldom is when they can help it.

Editors is men what knows everything in the heavens and earth beneath. They is writers who doesn't write anything whatsoever. They is the biggest men you ever saw.

Managers is men as takes in the tin and give patent-medicine "ads" tops of columns next to reading matter in 37 columns out of 32.

Proprietors ain't anybody. They ain't ever seen.

Printers' devils is the most important persons in a printin' office. They does the hardest work and gets the least pay.

Pressmen is—well, there wouldn't be no newspapers, no circus bills, without the pressmen to print 'em.

Feeders is men that feeds on the fat of the land.

If I ever start a paper of my own I'll call it the Umbrella. Everybody will take it.

I heard the editor tell this funny story to one of the "staff" the other day. It must have been, 'cause they both laughed. This is the story: "A gentleman was promenading the street with a little boy at his side when the little fellow cried out, 'Oh, pa, there goes an editor!' 'Hush, hush,' said the father, 'don't make sport of the poor man—God only knows what he may come to yet.' "

A PLEA FOR SIMPLE WEDDINGS.

In all ceremonials there is a great deal of fashion; and it occurs to us that if a few people of consequence would set the fashion of simplicity in marriage ceremonies they would be doing great service to the community. In many memorable instances the higher classes have afforded a noble example by leaving instructions that their funerals should take place without pomp, or parade, and already we see the good results which have followed, funerals among the middle classes being as a rule, much more simple than formerly; and consequently, to our minds, more solemn. Births, deaths and marriages are three events in human life usually classed together, and which the statistician records, and the politician notes; but marriage is the only one of the three in which the chief actors are voluntary and conscious agents. Surely it is the most solemn act of man or woman, and, properly considered is little allied to pomp and festivity. Think what it is to assume, in a large measure, the responsibility of another's happiness and well-being! And this is what in marriage we may be said to do. Surely a solemn and impressive ceremony with simplicity of attire, is more in harmony with the occasion than more pageantry and festivity.

SHE LONGED FOR APPLES.

A little Massachusetts girl of five years passed last summer on a farm in Maine. Green apple time was at hand, and her aunt, to whose care she had been confided, cautioned her against eating them. But little Eva did not resist the forbidden fruit. No particular harm resulted, but her aunt felt it her duty to again point out the danger. "I once knew a little girl," she said, "who ate two green apples one day." Silence reigned, for the little one was very thoughtful. At last she looked up and said: "Do you think Dod would forgive me if I only eat one dreen apple and took two or three bites out of another."

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one in warm weather, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

"I was all run down and unfit for business. I was induced to take a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it built me right up so that I was soon able to resume work. I recommend it to all who are afflicted." D. W. BRATE, stone-cutter, No. 4 Martin St., Albany, N. Y.

WHAT A CHANGE.

D. H. Brigham began the Ready-Made Clothing business in Springfield more than 40 years ago, and it took him a score of years to gain a foothold.

It is now about a month since we (D. H. Brigham & Co.) announced in these columns that our time henceforth would be devoted to the manufacture and sale of ladies', misses' and girls' complete outfits of the higher grades not to be found in dry goods stores, yet we are already compelled to enlarge our present quarters and also to put in a passenger elevator so as to use three floors for the display and sale of ladies', misses' and girls' outfits.

Before doing this we must dispose of our entire stock now on hand, and that at the earliest moment possible to make room for masons and carpenters.

90 days' business must be done in 30.

We have bought these elegant goods at prices enabling us to place them within the reach of all. In many cases the prices will be less than the original cost of the material. We have everything from a fine wash dress to the elaborately made silks, and in prices from $5.00 to $75.00, also wraps from $7.50 to $60.00.

We are crowded with customers from far and near, with too little room for the successful display of our hot weather goods, although we show a magnificent assortment suitable for the season. Dress makers from all the adjoining towns after a careful examination pronounce our stock superb, our styles faultless, our finish and prices beyond competition.

JOURNEYMEN TAILORS are employed on our ladies' suits and top garments, and we guarantee artistic outfits in all sizes from 2 years up to 40 and 50 bust measures. This is the opportunity of a lifetime. Ladies', misses' and girls' outfits complete at maker's wholesale prices, from a stock never equaled outside of the great cities.

Within a month we have bought the entire stock of the best New York manufacturers of misses' and girl's costumes, including their Paris models. For elegant workmanship and quality of material they cannot be matched. This stock includes besides the best line of seasonable jackets, newmarkets and summer cloaks for misses and little girls, the richest dresses for the same ever shown in this city. Dress makers in providing for children's wear and parents also will be able to get perfect satisfaction and save themselves untold worry and delay by selecting from this stock. White suits for all ages will be put on sale as soon as room will allow. Early selections can be made for delivery at vacation season at manufacturers' wholesale price. Our misses' and childrens' lawn tennis suits are handsome and cheap.

NEW STORE!
NEW STOCK!
LARGEST VARIETY!

A cordial invitation is extended to the many friends whom I have known while connected with this business in the past, and to the public at large, to call and inspect my new stock of Sporting Goods, consisting of American and Foreign GUNS, AMMUNITION, FISHING TACKLE, BASE-BALL GOODS, LAWN TENNIS, CROQUET, &c.

I have a full line of Sporting Goods which I know will please you, and which I shall sell at bottom prices. Call and see them.

TO THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.—

Respectfully represents the undersigned, that public convenience and necessity require the discontinuance of so much of the county highway in the towns of Brimfield and Palmer, as lies between a point on the Tower Hill road near the house of Theodore Farrell, in said Brimfield, to near a house formerly owned by Col. John Fenton, in said Palmer.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that said highway be discontinued.

INHABITANTS OF THE TOWN OF BRIMFIELD.
By OSCAR F. BROWN, FRANK R. NEWTON, JOSIAH STEBBINS, } Selectmen of Brimfield.
April 23d, 1888.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, SS.—At a meeting of the county commissioners, holden at Springfield, within and for said county, on the sixteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord 1888.

And now upon the petition aforesaid, the county commissioners, deeming a view of the premises expedient and proper, give notice that they will meet for the purpose of said view, and hearing all parties interested, at the station of the Boston & Albany Railroad in Palmer, on Monday, the twenty-fifth day of June next, at 10.15 o'clock a. m.; and it is ordered by the county commissioners that a copy of said petition be served by the sheriff of said county, or his deputy, upon the clerks of the towns of Palmer and Brimfield, in said county, thirty days at least before the said twenty-fifth day of June, and that all other persons and corporations interested therein be notified by publishing a copy of said petition and this order thereon, once a week, in the PALMER JOURNAL, a public newspaper printed in said county, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the time of said view and hearing. And it is further ordered by the commissioners that copies of said petition, or abstracts containing the substance thereof and this order be posted by said sheriff or deputy in two public places in the towns of Palmer and Brimfield, fourteen days before said twenty-fifth day of June, and that notice be given in manner aforesaid, to all persons and corporations interested, that the county commissioners deem a view of the premises expedient and proper, and that a view of the same will be taken by them at the time and place aforesaid, and that they will hear the parties interested at the time of said view. ROBERT O. MORRIS, Clerk.

ATTEST: ROBERT O. MORRIS, Clerk.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE AT BRIMFIELD, MASS.—By virtue of a certain mortgage deed and power of sale given by Adelia Stebbins of Brimfield, Hampden County, and state of Massachusetts, to Emeline M. Lombard, now or formerly of Wales, in said County, dated February 28th, 1880, and recorded in Hampden County Registry of Deeds, book 367, page 232, and for a breach of the conditions of said mortgage, and for the purpose of foreclosing said mortgage, will be sold at public auction at the dwelling house on the below described premises, on Saturday, June 16th, 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the following real estate, being the same as described in said mortgage, to wit: "All and several, the tracts and parcels of land situate in said Brimfield, in the westerly part thereof, conveyed by George Puffer to Dwight Lombard by deed dated April 12th, 1879, and recorded with Hampden County deeds, book 359, page 154, which may be referred to for a more full and particular description of said premises. Said tracts contain together about 49 acres, with the dwelling house and barn thereon, and are the same conveyed by said Dwight Lombard to the grantor."

Said premises will be sold subject to any taxes heretofore or hereafter to be assessed.

Terms of sale: cash.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPSHIRE, SS. PROBATE COURT—To all persons interested in the estate of Lucia C. Putnam, late of Easthampton, in said county, deceased, greeting.—

Whereas, Charles B. Fisk, the executor of the last will and testament of said deceased, has presented for allowance the final account of his administration upon the estate of said deceased. You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Northampton, in said county, on the fifth day of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be allowed.

And said Charles B. Fisk is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week in the WARE STANDARD, a newspaper printed at Ware, three weeks successively, the last publication to be two days at least before said court.

Witness, WILLIAM G. BASSETT, Esquire, Judge of said court, this eleventh day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

(3w7) HUBBARD M. ABBOTT, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS. HAMPDEN, SS. May 24, A. D. 1888.—By virtue of an execution which issued on a judgement recovered in the Superior Court at Springfield, within and for our County of Hampden, on the seventh day of May, A. D. 1888, in favor of Isaiah Hiscock of Wales, in said County, and against John King of Southbridge, in our County of Worcester, I have this day taken all the right in equity that the said John King had, on the twentieth day of September, A. D. 1887, the day when the same was attached on mesne process in this action to redeem certain mortgaged real estate, situated in said Wales, and bounded and described as follows, to wit: A certain tract of land, with the buildings thereon, bounded northerly by land now or formerly of William Nelson, Andrew A. Needham and George Mixter, easterly by land now or formerly of George Mixter, southerly by land now or formerly of Alvin Andrews, Whipple Thompson and Julius M. Lyon, and westerly by land now or formerly of William Orcutt, containing 107 acres, more or less, and being the same conveyed by Elijah Shaw to the said John King, and recorded in Hampden County Registry of Deeds, book 297, page 81, and on Thursday, the twenty-eighth day of June next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, in front of the Court House in Palmer, in said County, I shall offer for sale by public auction to the highest bidder, said right in equity of redemption, to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

Playing Chess.

AN ORIGINAL AND TOUCHING IDYL.

It was in the wintry weather
When last we played chess together,
And our hearts were light as feathers,
Her's and mine.
I played very badly,
She took advantage gladly,
And made my men look sadly
On the battle line.

Little cared I, the disgrace
Was lost in the sight of her pretty face,
On which I gazed.
As she gathered up the men,
Placed them on the board again,
And we another game began,
Whilst me she praised.

I played awkwardly that day,
For my thoughts were far away
From the chess board and the chess.
That I was thinking of a maiden,
With angelic graces laden,
It is easy enough to guess.

And that maiden right beside me,
O'er the chess board she defied me,
And each move she would deride me
For my awkward playing.
'Twas her actions, shy and coy,
Did my peace of mind annoy,
Did my thoughts on her employ,
My plight to her betraying.

Playing chess and courting, too,
I found was more than I could do,
So, when at last the game was through,
I proposed to pretty Bess.
She blushed, my little treasure,
And I had the blessed pleasure,
Exceedingly beyond measure,
Of hearing her answer "yes."

Chess and men we then forgetting,
Side by side together setting,
Happy thoughts to each outletting,
As lovers can;
When she had confessed her love,
And vowed she would ever faithful prove,
Whate'er the future might behoove,
I was a happy man.

Then we went down to tea,
Both as happy as could be,
And it was very plain to see
We were engaged.
Oh, the comforts love had brought,
Oh, the ecstacy of thought,
Oh, the lessons it has taught,
And more presaged.

Now we are married, she and I,
No more do I go courting on the sly,
No more I heave a lover's sigh
For little Bess.
For now I have got children ten,
And am striving to be a gentleman,
And, oh, how I wish I were back again
A playing chess!

TWO WAYS OF ASKING.

"Tears, idle tears! Niobe dissolved! My dear child, what on earth is the matter?"

Time: four, of a summer afternoon. Place: a pretty boudoir, furnished in the fashion of to-day, modelled on the style of Louis Quinze, with a dash of "Liberty" thrown in, and modern accessories, such as crystal flower vases, three-volume novels, and photographed stands, juxtaposed with Queene Anne silver and knicknacks, ancient and modern. Dramatis personæ: graceful figure in white, flung with an air of desolation on the floor beside a sofa, her charming nuque visible beneath delicious little rows of golden curls, her frame shaken by sobs; an older woman standing a few yards distant, dark, beautifully dressed, "good looking enough for anything," without being distinctly handsome, aged somewhere within the right side of thirty, and wearing an expression half compassionate, half amused. There is a suspicion of raillery in her voice, which is felt and deeply resented by the fair sorrower. Anger is often akin to sorrow as pity is to love, and the voice which responds to the question when reiterated is decidedly petulant.

"I wish you would go away and leave me alone."

"I shall not do anything of the sort,' returns the other. "I am going to talk to you, and I do not care in the least whether you are angry or not, although I had much rather you would take my remarks in good part."

"Oh," responds the voice still smothered in the sofa cushions, but losing nothing of its resentful quality. "I know how clever you are, and that you think that you can manage every one's affairs a great deal better than themselves."

She intends this to be a "nasty one," and, as a matter of fact, it does not fall very pleasantly on the ears of her interlocutor; but she sits down on the sofa, and replies with good humor: "Well my love, I may confidently say that I could manage your affairs a great deal better than you manage them yourself, and that if I were you I would have Mr. Clement Lascelles at my feet in a very short time."

"Perhaps you have him there now," says the prostrate one, ceasing to sob, and trying to snear instead.

"Well, Dolly dear to tell you the truth, I fail myself to recognize in that young man the charm which I observe he has for —for some people; indeed, I consider him a poseur, with an exasperating good opinion of himself, and, if you ask my candid opinion, I think that he would be all the better for being kic——"

Dorothy flounces up in a moment. "I will trouble you not to insult my friends," she cries, with flaming cheeks. "And it is not very easy to believe your sincerity when he was sitting in your pocket all last night, and you were out walking with him for two hours this morning."

"In any case," replies Mrs. Dalton, coolly, "your remarks prove that I have had time and opportunity to form an opinion of his qualities. I don't deny that he is good looking, but it is intolerable that he should be so conscious of it. I admit that he is not without a certain amount of cleverness, and has been fairly well educated; but I violently object to his thinking himself able to sit in judgment on people a great deal older and cleverer than himself."

"On you, for instance!" cries Dolly.

"No, I was not thinking of myself, though I admit the soft impeachment (the one regarding my age, at least); and what I dislike most of all is his placing himself on a pedestal to be looked at and longed for by—by pretty, silly little girls, who ought to know better."

Dolly stiffens her back and says, with an assumption of dignity which sits indifferently well upon her: "If you will excuse me, I should prefer not to discuss Mr. Lascelles with you. You are perfectly welcome to your opinion of him, and I claim the liberty of retaining mine." Then her majesty suddenly toppling over, she says vindictively, in quite a different tone of voice: "Perhaps you think I am such a fool that I don't see through your mean abuse of him?"

"That I may win and wear him myself?" suggests Mrs Dalton, quite good-humoredly. "No, my dear and acute child, believe me, you have not fathomed and unmasked my baseness this time. I know your dear and sensitive little heart is set upon this fascinating young man. I don't think there is really any harm in him, and I am magnanimous enough to be ready to show you how to obtain his affections, and to make him the suppliant instead of you."

"Suppliant!" cries Dolly, with fresh flames from her burning heart ascending to her cheeks.

"Yes, suppliant. Every one, my love, can see—he most of all—how you hang upon his smiles, and despair when he is indifferent or capricious."

Wrath makes Dolly absolutely speechless. If looks, etc., etc., Mrs. Dalton would, etc., etc.

"Don't be a goose, Dolly," resumes her friend, not having suffered any visible injury from the lightning glances to which she had been subjected.

"Keep your temper, and reap the advantages of my superior age and experience."

"Keep them to yourself!" retorts Dolly, tartly.

"The first I must, whether or no, but the latter shall be yours. Come, dear child, you know I am fond of you; believe me when I say I would not have your enchanter as a gift, and also that I am desirous to see him subjugated by you. He shall be yours I promise, and I will only make one condition."

Dolly seats herself on the sofa, and allows Mrs. Dalton to take her hand, though she looks rather sulky. Still she does, poor little girl, regard Mr. Clement Lascelles as the first prize in the marriage lottery, and is willing to take upon herself his part of the contract; to worship him with her body, and endow him with all her worldly goods. For in a small way she is an heiress, though he is not destitute of money and has an excellent position. Truth to tell, the young man is what is called "a bad sort;" he has good looks, good brains, and good manners when he is not egged on to taking liberties by the silly flatteries of the other sex. Poor Dolly loves him madly, and has innocently shown her pleasure in his notice and her sufferings at his neglect. Mrs. Dalton having paused to give due effect to her words, Dolly, after a moment, is constrained to say rather sulkily, "Well!"

"You must take the vow first."

"What vow?" with latent irritation.

"The vow never to tell any human being —Mr. Lascelles least of all—that I, or, for the matter of that, any one, advised you how to act toward him."

"Oh, of course, I promise."

"Promises are like pie-crust," replies Mrs. Dalton; then with an air of great solemnity, she goes to a small bookcase at the end of the room, and comes back with a Bible. You must kiss the book," she says.

"Oh, no," cries Dolly, frightened. For she knows she never kept a secret in her life, and is terrified at being put on an oath which she may break in spite of herself, a few hours later.

"Well," says Mrs. Dalton firmly, "do you want him or do you not?"

"Yes," cries Dolly, with tears in her eyes, "I do."

"Then kiss the book."

"But how do I know there is anything in what you are going to tell me?" says doubting Dolly.

"Because I say so. Do I not know the world and men."

Dolly takes the book tremblingly. "What am I to say?" she falters.

"Say: 'I swear not to tell Clement Lascelles or any other person that Marian Dalton advised me how to win his affections."

With a sudden desperate gesture Dolly kisses the book and repeats the formula. "Now, then!" she cries excitedly.

Mrs. Dalton takes up her parable, "Clement is really fond of you—he would be exceedingly fond of you, if you allowed him."

"If I allowed him!" gasps Dolly.

"Yes," repeats her advisior. "By allowing him, I don't mean throwing yourself at his head, and showing him that you adore him, but by making him doubt your love and his own capacity for pleasing you. Different men want different treatment. There is nothing so delightful to some as to see and know that a women cares for them—it adds ten-fold to their devotion for her; but I am bound to say these men are in the minority. Most of them are far more stimulated by doubts and fears—the woman becomes more dear as she seems more distant, and, as a rule, when a man is literally crazy about one of our sex, it is because she has worried and tormented, and kept him on a perpetual balance between hope and fear. Now you, and others like you, have so hung upon Clement Lascelles' looks and words, have so positively shown him that he is a great being, a lofty intellect, a rival to Apollo, that it is not likely he is coming off his pedestal to worship his worshipers. Your only chance, my dear, is to abandon your worship; to counterfeit indifference as best you may, and to let a gradual and startling conviction come over him that you were not really in earnest, after all."

"It is very easy to talk," pouts Dolly.

"It is very easy to act, too," returns Marian, "if you are positively certain that your plan of campaign is going to be successful."

"How do I know that it will be?"

"Try it for twenty-four hours, and see how it works."

"But I don't know what to do."

"You must be absolutely guided by me, and not act for one moment on your own responsibility."

"I daresay it will turn out all wrong," says Dolly ungraciously, "and then I shall lose him altogether."

"All right," replies Mrs. Dalton, losing patience and rising from her seat. "Do as you like. After all, what on earth does it matter to me whether you are happy or miserable? Go your own way."

Dolly springs up and catches her by the arm. "No, no, Marian, don't go; don't be angry. I will do whatever you tell me."

"Then hearken and obey. Dick Wyndham is coming to-night. You know he is rather fond of you. Talk to him, and to him only all the evening, Do not glance in Mr. Lascelles' direction; I will keep my eye on him, and report to you how he takes it. If he approaches you in the evening looked bored and distraite, and reply to him in monosyllables."

"I shall never be able to do it," groans Dolly.

"Not with such a big stake to win?" (a little sarcastically.)

"Ah! you don't know what it is to love!" cries Dolly.

"Not as you do, certainly," retorts Marian, with an inflection of voice which Dolly is not acute enough to catch.

Dick Wyndham arrives in time for dinner. He is rather fond of Dolly—he is exceedingly hard up and wants her money even more than her sweet self. He is bright and amusing, has a considerable fund of small talk, is devoted to sport, and has not Mr. Lascelles' æsthetic taste or lofty manner of showing superiorty. He has a genuine contempt for a man who talks art and plays classical music, as Mr. Lascelles has for one who thinks of nothing but hunting, lawn-tennis, and polo, though he rides fairly straight and is an average shot himself.

Not a little disgusted is Lascelles, therefore, when Dolly, whose sorrowfullness and its cause have greatly soothed his complacency for the last twenty-four hours, seems to have eyes and ears for no one but this half-witted soldier at dinner. She is looking charming in a dress of a delicious apricot tint, which he has not seen before (he is a great connoisseur of dress). If he could only catch her eye he would beam on her one of those glances which would have intoxicated her maiden soul. But whereas it has been his wont to meet her tender, pleading glances every two minutes heretofore, to-night he might be Banquo's ghost, and she one of Macbeth's guests, for all she seemed to see him. His memory serves him up various sneering and savage quotations on the theme of souvent femme varie. He is so little congenial to his neighbor at dinner that she expresses the most unfavorable sentiments regarding him in the drawing room later-on, causing Dolly to halt between the desire to defend him hotly, and a sense of pleasure that some one beside herself has suffered from his coldness. Mrs. Dalton makes a pretext for calling Dolly aside.

"Excellent, my love!" she cries in high good-humor, presssing the girl's arm. "He is enraged beyond measure. He scarcely took his eyes off you. Go and prosper."

Thus stimulated, Dolly goes on, and prospers exceedingly. When Mr. Lascelles and Dick approach simultaneously she devotes her whole attention to the latter, and has scarcely a word for the former, who presently retires in tragic dudgeon, and leans against the wall like Hamlet, Lord Byron, or any other blighted being in the sulks.

In reality, Dick is the person most to be pitied, although his face is alight with smiles, and his heart is aglow with anticipations of possessing a lovely woman, and satisfying the debtors who methaphorically speaking, take him by the throat crying: "Pay me what thou owest!" Innocent creature that he is, he suspects no treachery, nor dreams that milk-white bosom palpitates for the "infernal young prig" over the way. Dolly will play billiards and lawn-tennis with him on the morrow; in the afternoon they are to ride together; and as he sits smoking after the ladies having retired, he reflects upon the most approved method of asking a certain question.

Up to this moment Clement Lascelles has not seen any necessity for putting his fate to the touch, because he had been absolutely certain of winning; but now that for the first time he has a rival, a rival who is progressing by leaps and bounds in his lady's favor, he sees that something must be done. He cannot have been befooled. She loves him, or—or he the adept at reading the secrets of souls, must for once have been deluded. Perish the thought!

With gloomy brow and stately step he retires from the smoking-room, and seeks the solitude of his chamber, but not his couch. The dawn has long broken ere he courts repose.

"Marian," cries Dolly, a few hours later, bursting into her friend's room whilst that lady no early riser at her best of times—still nestles among her pillows, "read this!" and she seats herself on the bed in a state of great excitement, whilst Mrs. Dalton languidly peruses the letter thrust into her hands.

"I call it great impertinence," she remarks, returning it to Dolly.

"Impertinence!" with wide-open eyes.

"Certainly," and Mrs. Dalton taking it back, quotes from it:—

"Though I cannot pretend to offer you the one great passion of a life—sad passages beyond the ken of other mortals have tarnished the pure lustre which once surrounded my soul as with a halo—yet, if you will take a heart weary with the doubts with which an intimate knowledge of humanity clouds the spirit, take me to your tender breast, and let me find shelter there from life's griefs and disappointments. What recompense a heart blighted as mine has been can bestow I will strive to make to your angelic sympathy and goodness."

"Is it not beautiful?" cries Dolly, in an ecstasy. "I wonder what he means? I suppose some horrid woman threw him over once?"

"I think it is exceedingly impertinent, and I hope you will resent it."

"Resent it!" almost shrieks Dolly. "Why it is a declaration!"

"Get me my blotting book off that table," commands Mrs. Dalton resolutely. "Now," she says, beginning to write, "you will answer it in this way, or I wash my hands of you, and to-morrow he will have reduced you to abject misery again."

She writes huridedly for a few minutes, and then, with a heightened color, reads the draft aloud:—

"Dear Mr. Lascelles: I have received your melancholly letter, and am truly sorry for all you seem to have suffered. But, for my part, I look upon the world as a very pleasant place, and have made up my mind to enloy myself as much as possible; so, as I could not console you, and you, with the ideas you express, would make me miserable, I think you had much better look for somebody whose temperament is more like your own. I suppose you mean me to understand that you have been much more in love with some one else than you have with me, which, to say the least, is not very flattering. No! I must have an undivided heart, or none at all.—

Your sincere friend, D. S."

There is a desperate fight between Mrs. Dalton and Dolly before the latter can be persuaded to copy and forward what she considers a heartless and flippant missive. In the end Marian triumphs. Mr. Lascelles does not appear at breakfast, and Dolly, though her soul quakes within her, laughs and talks to Dick.

Later in the morning, when they were playing lawn-tennis, Clement Lascelles, feeling much smaller than he has ever done in his life, seeks counsel from Mrs. Dalton. With an angelic smile she alternately pricks him with daggers and makes him gulp down bowls of poison; but she does him an excellent turn by taking a good deal of the nonsense out of him. He confesses that he adores Dolly. How, O how, is he to win her? Has he the ghost of a chance?

Mrs. Dalton looked solemn, declares her inability to reply to this. She hints at Dolly's youth and love of amusement. She hints, too, at Dick's unflagging good spirits and temper. And the upshot of it is that when Dick returns crestfallen from his afternoon ride with Dolly, having spoken and received his answer, Clement Lascelles carries off the young lady to her boudoir on pretense of wanting to be shown something, and replacing the melancholy of Hamlet by the conquering airs of young Lovelace, takes her in his arms, swears he has been a fool, and has never really loved any one but her sweet self, and that if she accepts him her life shall be one round of pleasure.

Twenty minutes latter Dolly has passed on all his embraces and more to Marion.

"How clever you are, darling!" she says admiringly.

To which Mrs. Dalton replies, "Now you know how to manage him, make good use of your knowledge."—The London World.

SLANG TERMS FOR MONEY.

Probably every country possesses peculiar or "slang" terms in every-day use for its coins. For instance, a "nickel" very well defines the five-cent piece of currency, and a "red cent" is equally expressive. In Scotland the man who "flies kites" is probably not worth a "boodle," which is an imaginary coin, slightly differing from the same term here. In England the same person would not be worth a "mag." A "kite" is an accommodation bill; a "mag" is the smallest copper coin of the realm. On the race course one hears talk of betting a "pony," which is £25, or winning a "monkey," which is £500. This latter, however, is somewhat rare. A "quid" only has reference to tobacco when the term is used by sailors. Among landsmen it means £1. Small gamblers play for "bulls" and "half bulls;" in other words, five shillings and half crowns. Little boys occasionally toss for "joeys," or fourpenny pieces, and a hansom cab driver will expect you to tip him with a "tanner," which he calls a sixpence, while the common appellation of a shilling is a "bob." These terms are commonly in use all over England.

WHAT CAUSES HEADACHE.

Overstudy.

Overwork indoors.

Neglect of the bath.

Want of fresh air in bed-rooms.

Nervousness, however induced.

Want of abundant skin-exciting exercise.

The excitement inseparable from a fashionable life.

Neglect of the ordinary rules that conduce to health.

Over-indulgence in food, especially of a stimulating character.

Weakness or debility of body, however produced. This can only be remedied by proper nutriment.

Work or study indoors, carried on in an unnatural or cramped position of body. Literary men and women ought to do most of their work at a standing desk, lying down now and then to ease the brain and heart, and permit ideas to flow. They should work out of doors in fine weather —with their feet resting on a board, not on the earth—and under canvass in wet weather. It is surprising the good this simple advice, if followed, can effect.

A Receipt For Gingerbread.

Mary Hanner, run this minute,
Get the pail with 'lasses in it;
Fetch the short'nin' and the flour,
Hurry—don't be gone an hour!
Bring the salt and soda—hear me?
Bring the pans, and put 'em near me.
We must never have it said
Mary Hanner Perkins wed
'Fore she l'arnt her gingerbread.

Run and fetch your mother's glasses.
There! Now look: A cup o' 'lasses;
Next a table spoon of lard—
Stir it in and beat it hard;
Now a little drop o' water—
Get it at the pump, my da'ter;
Now dissolve that soda in it;
One egg whipped for half a minute;

Pinch o' salt; now sift your flour in.
There! Take care—you've got a power in!
Stir it, beat it, whip it—see!
Light and right as dough can be.
Where's the ginger? That's well thought on,
Strange it was so nigh forgotten!
Without that it can't be said
Gingerbread is gingerbread.

ABSENCE OF MIND.

"Now be sure not to forget," said a lady, playfully shaking her finger at her escort as he arose to stretch his legs between acts, and turning to a lady friend, explained. "He is so absent minded."

"Does he forget your letters and errands?"

"Oh, no, indeed! He is so absent minded I never intrust any to him. But he forgets me. Why, only last week he went out between acts and never returned. I went home alone and found him peacefully smoking his cigar before the open fire, quite oblivious of myself and the theater. I was very indignant, but when I began with tears in my eyes, "How could you go off and leave so?" the whole occurrence seemed to flash upon him. He sprang to his feet declaring he had been worrying all the evening about something he had forgotton, and so overwhelmed me with loving protestations that I couldn't talk to him very seriously."

"How sad! I wonder if all men are so afflicted. My husband is. Why, I remember one day he arose from the dinner table, and feeling a slight uneasiness in his eyes, began operations upon them with his toothpick, nearly destroying his sight."

"How unfortunate."

"Yes, and one night I asked him to replenish the fuel in the grate, and in a fit of abstraction he brought in a hod of water and poured it onto the fire, scalding himself and bringing ruin to everything."

"O-o-h, how perfectly awful! But I haven't begun to tell you the worst about my husband. Why, it was only a week after our marriage, while walking down Woodward avenue arm in arm, he so far forget himself as to imagine he had an extremely burdensome bundle, and offered a newsboy a quarter to carry it for him."

"'But war's yer bundle, mister,' the little fellow inquired. And will you believe it, my Benedict deliberately handed me over to the small boy, and I was so mortified—"

Her voice was drowned by the orchestra.

HIS ORDERS.

"I've got orders, positive orders, not to go there—orders I dare not disobey," said a youth who was being tempted into a smoking and gambling saloon.

"What special orders have you got? Show us your orders."

John took a neat wallet from his pocket and pulled out a neatly folded paper. "It's here," said he, unfolding the paper and showing it to the boys. They looked and read aloud:

"Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not into the way of evil men. Avoid it; pass not by it, turn from it and pass away." Proverbs 4: 14-15.

"Now," said John, "you see my orders forbid me going with you. They are God's orders, and, by His help, I mean to obey them."

MODERN JUVENILE LITERATURE. — "So you have published another book?"

"Yes, and I think it's going to be a success."

"What kind of a book is it?"

"A story for boys and girls."

"Of what does it treat?"

"Why, it gives a history of all the great prize fighters of the nineteenth century."—Lincoln Journal.

The Miner's Protege.

"Wal, you see, it's a queer story, Missy;
The little gal's none of our kin;
But, you bet, when the old men go under,
She's the one who will handle our 'tin.'
My pard an' me is rough minin' fellers,
We've got nary children nor wife,
And we love little yellow-haired Nellie,
And we'll rear her right up—bet your life.

"How old? Wall, she's nigh eight, I reckon;
Five years since we brought her out here;
An' she was the cunninest baby
We'd looked at for many a year.
You see, 'twas the time the Apaches
Broke out. Blast the red imps of sin!
The emigrant train crossed their trail, Miss,
An' the Injuns they scooped 'em all in.

"Yes, thar lay men, children an' wimmen;
The red devils raised all their h'r.
We couldn't do nothin' to help 'em,
So my pard an' me buried 'em thar.
We found one likely-lookin' young cretur'
Lyin' out from the rest of the heap.
She was dead, like the others, an' Nellie
Lay close by her side—fast asleep.

"Wal, 'twas nigh ninety miles t' the settlement—
Bill an' me turned the thing in our mind—
An' at last we concluded to keep her,
An' bring her up lovin' an' kind.
We buried her poor dad an' mammy,
Likewise all her unlucky mates,
An' we named her Nell, arter a sweetheart
My pard had once back in the states.

"But the trouble we had with that young un
Was somethin' quite funny to see.
Bill gave her up for a mystery—
Likewise she was too much for me.
Her darn duds we couldn't get on right,
An' we cussed every button an' string;
But after a spell we did better,
When we once got the hang of the thing.

"An' she's growed up quite pert like an' bloomin';
We take her to work every day;
While Bill an' me's busy a minin'
She'll sit by the rock-pile an' play.
An' she's made better men of us both, Miss;
We don't cuss now, nor go on no spree,
'Cause we're workin' an' savin' for Nellie,
The pride of my old pard an' me."

BOWSER AMONG THE STORES.

I had mentioned in a casual way that we needed some dishes, a new carpet and some table linen, and that I must get down town and buy them, when Mr. Bowser came home at 2 o'clock one afternoon, and said:

"Well, are you all ready?"

"For what?"

"Why, to go down town to buy those things?"

"But I didn't know you wanted to go. Indeed, I wish you wouldn't."

"Oh, you do! Are you ashamed to be seen with me on the street?"

"You know I'm not. I'm afraid you—you—"

"Well, what?"

"You'll jaw folks and get into a quarrel."

"Mrs. Bowser, are you getting soft in the head? Jaw folks! Get into a quarrel! Humph! Are you coming?"

We first visited the carpet store. I had not yet made up my mind whether to buy brussels or velvet, nor whether to get light or dark colors. I expected to take a chair and have the clerk roll down about fifty pieces of each kind, and to be all of two hours making up my mind. One clerk ran to place chairs for us. A second arranged the window curtains, and a third inquired of Mr. Bowser—

"Did you wish to look at some carpets?"

"Did I come here to buy oysters?" demanded Mr. Bowser.

"Ah—um! Light or dark colors?"

"Light."

"But the dark are all the style, you know."

"I don't know anything of the sort! There are plenty of white horses and houses, and white shirts and white hats; and I don't know why light carpets shouldn't be fashionable. Roll down this piece.

"Yes, sir; but you won't like it. This dark pattern is what Mrs. Governor Smith selected for her front bed room."

"Yes. Well, I may get that for my horse barn later on. Send up a man to measure the room, and give me that light pattern."

"Why, Mr. Bowser!" I said. "You haven't selected already!"

"Certainly."

"But we—we—"

"Five minutes are enough for any one to select a carpet, Mrs. Bowser. We want body-brussels, and we want a light ground. That's all there is to it. We will now go over and buy the table linen."

"But can't I have time to look around?"

"Time! What do you want of time? You want three linen table cloths and two dozen napkins. We've got the money to pay for 'em. What more is desired?"

"But it is so sudden."

"So are earthquakes. We'll go in here."

We entered a dry goods store and sat down to the linen counter. A young man came forward to wait on us, and after being told what was wanted, he queried:—

"So you want some real linen. Well, here is something I can recommend."

"Is that all linen?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is it?" asked Mr. Bowser as he turned to me.

I didn't think it was, but I told Mr. Bowser to let it go. It was the custom in all dry goods stores to lie about such things, and no one thought of raising a row."

"Madame," said Mr. Bowser as he took the cloth over to a motherly old lady, "is this all linen?"

"No, sir; it's half cotton!" she replied, after an inspection.

"Where's the proprietor of this store?" he demanded of the clerk.

"I—I'll call him, sir."

The proprietor came up.

"Is that linen?" asked Mr. Bowser.

"It passes for linen, sir."

"If you put a cow's horns and tail on a horse he'd pass for a cow, wouldn't he? Sir, this looks to me like a petty swindle, and you ought to be ashamed of it!"

The proprietor began to blow up the clerk and the clerk said he'd resign, and as we got out of doors I penned Mr. Bowser into a doorway, and said:

"I'll never, never dare enter this store again!"

"Don't you want to. This man is a liar and the clerk lied by his instructions. We'll try another."

The next store was crowded, and as we reached the linen counter it was to find every stool occupied. I tried to get Mr. Bowser out, anticipating trouble, but unfortunately at that moment one lady observed to another—

"Dear me, but this is the third afternoon I've come down town to buy a table cloth, and I haven't got suited yet."

"And I want four crash towels, and I have been all over-town twice," replied the other.

"Here, you!" snapped Mr. Bowser to the clerk, "are you busy?"

"Waiting on these ladies, sir."

"Have they bought anything?"

"No, sir."

"Are they going to?"

"I—I don't know."

"Well, I've no time to fool away. We want three linen table cloths and two dozen napkins."

The ladies arose in great indignation. Each of them gave me a look that pierced me to the heart, and each of them gave Mr. Bowser a look that ought to have shortened him two feet, but which had no apparent effect. In seven minutes we had found what we wanted, paid the bill, and were ready to go. The clerk acted a bit sulky, and Mr. Bowser was getting ready to give him blast when I appealed to him to hold his peace. I told him it was the custom for several thousand ladies to come down town every afternoon to shop, and that shopping consisted of a promenading up and down to show their suits off to a lot of well-dressed loafers, and entering the stores and taking an hour and a half to buy a sixpence worth of lace or ribbon. The clerk melted a little at the same moment, and I got Mr. Bowser out without another eruption.

"Now for the dishes," he said as we got out, and we went into a crockery store.

My heart sank as I saw the place crowded with ladies. We halted beside one who was saying to a clerk—

"And so that tooth-pick holder is six cents?"

"Only six, madam."

"How very cute!"

"Yes, it is."

"And is it imported?"

"It is."

"How very charming! This is the same one I saw yesterday, is it?"

"Oh, certainly."

"Dear me, I wish I could make up my mind whether to take it or not. You see, we move in the spring, and if we moved, you know—

"I want about $15 worth of dishes," interrupted Mr. Bowser.

"Yes, sir; in just a moment."

"How many of those tooth-pick holders have you got?"

"Only five."

"I'll take the lot; and now come and wait on me. I want twelve cups and saucers, twenty-four plates, three or four platters, two tureens and a fish-platter."

The lady turned about and killed me dead with one long look. Then she looked at the back of Mr. Bowser's neck and tried to murder him, but he would not fall. Then she returned and killed me over again, gave her shoulders a twist, and walked out of the store. She had hardly departed when a fresh arrival asked our clerk, busy though he was, to show her some teaspoons.

"Madam," said Mr. Bowser, "do you wish to buy some spoons?"

"Perhaps."

"Do you know whether you do or not?"

"Why—I—I will look at them."

"Very well; you sit down and wait until I am through buying. I came to buy, know what I want, and shall pay cash down."

I was killed again, and if looks could have crushed Mr. Bowser he'd have been a mangled corpse in ten seconds. We were only thirteen minutes buying the dishes, and as we got out and reached the car Mr. Bowser said—

"Mrs. Bowser, when you come down town do you go fooling around the stores and obstructing doorways and crossways like the women we have seen to-day?"

"I—I guess I do."

"And end up by buying four cents' worth of something?"

"Yes, it is the custom."

"And it would have taken you three weeks to buy what we bought in three hours?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then I'll write this very day to an idiot asylum and see if I can squeeze you in! It's no wonder every home in town is full of scandal, and every other husband wants a divorce!"

THREE CASES OF ABSENT-MINDEDNESS.

At this very moment a gentleman looking over my shoulder tells me that a few days ago he came to town for the particular purpose of mailing a very important letter. He didn't wish to run the risk of having it lie for a day in the post office in the suburban borough where he resides. He came to Pittsburg—about fifteen miles—went straight to the post office, bought six 3-cent stamps, which he remembered he was in need of, and returned to his home with the important letter resting securely in his breast pocket.

A story used to be told many years ago of a merchant who was peculiarly subject to fits of absent-mindedness. Once he was writing a letter, and thought, absent-mindedly, that he had forgotten his correspondent's first name. Turning to one of his clerks, he said: "What's John Jackson's first name?"

The clerk, accustomed to his employer's peculiarity, replied: "John, sir."

The merchant wrote the letter, put it in an envelope and was again at a loss. To the same clerk, he said: "Excuse me, Charles, I've forgotten John Jackson's last name."

But a better story than the above is told of a gentleman in this city who was met by a friend one morning recently hurrying back from the depot toward his home.

"What's the matter?" the friend asked.

"Oh, I've left my watch under my pillow, and I'm going to get it."

"You'll miss your train."

"Oh, no," was the absent-minded man's reply. "See, I've got four minutes yet," and he pulled out his his watch to enforce the statement. And he didn't realize for several seconds what it was that made his friend laugh so heartily.

"Good morning. Moved and settled, I presume?" "Oh, yes, I've got my hen-coop, and a couple of dog kennels to build, and put up a shed for some old wagons and I am all right. You moved." "No. Can't get a tenement. Got three children you know."—Hartford Post.

Farmers, Please Notice.

Why is it so many farmers trade with A. F. NILES & SON? You will hear a great many ask. The reasons are these: They can get more for their produce there than they can anywhere else, no matter whether it is butter, eggs, chickens, fowls, potatoes, beef, veal or almost anything else they raise, and then they can buy almost everything in the eatable line there. In their meat department you will find everything pertaining to a first class market, all kinds of early vegetables in their seasons. Their grocery department is the finest one in the city, and everything in its line can be found at its lowest prices. Their fish department contains everything pertaining to that line, both salt and fresh. So you see by trading with them you can get almost everything, and all under one roof. A good chance to hitch your horses, and away from the cars. They do the largest business in their lines of any firm in Springfield, so you will readily see that, handling so many goods, they don't have time to get stale. Now, when you come to Springfield, call and see us, get our prices, examine our goods (as we have men for that business alone) whether you want to buy or not. If it is so you cannot come, send your orders or goods by some one else, and we will do just as well by you as though you came. If you take the Springfield Republican you will generally see our advertisements on the first page, at the top of the column next to the last one. It will pay you to read them. Remember the place. ### The Kettle On The Crane.

How many pleasant pictures does the recollection bring
Of home and bygone pleasure that around the fireside cling!
What tender reminiscences come thronging on the brain,
When in dreams I hear the singing of the kettle on the crane—
Hear it singing, singing, singing,
Loud and merry, fast and slow;
Hear it murmur, murmur, murmur,
Soft and low.

There's the broad, wide-open chimney, with its roaring, crackling fire,
Built up of logs of gen'rous size to make the flames leap higher;
And, near, the waiting table stands, spread bountiful and plain,
While cheerily the kettle sings and sings upon the crane—
Hear it singing, singing, singing,
Loud and merry, fast and slow;
Hear it murmur, murmur, murmur,
Soft and low.

Grandmother in the corner sits, and softly to and fro
She rocks and dreams of friends and scenes in days of long ago;
Her face grows sweet and tender as the past comes back again,
While listening to the singing of the kettle on the crane—
Hear it singing, singing, singing,
Loud and merry, fast and slow;
Hear it murmur, murmur, murmur,
Soft and low.

I see the children caper, as with gleeful laugh and call,
They watch the dancing pictures of the shadows on the wall,
And hear the baby cooing to the mother's low refrain
That follows the soft music of the kettle on the crane—
Hear it singing, singing, singing,
Loud and merry, fast and slow;
Hear it murmur, murmur, murmur,
Soft and low.

And, ere the evening hour is done, with lingering steps and slow,
A youth and smiling maiden come, and in the embers' glow
They read the future's story, and they see a wedding train
And bells chime with the singing of the kettle on the crane—
Hear it singing, singing, singing,
Loud and merry, fast and slow;
Hear it murmur, murmur, murmur,
Soft and low.

These precious, old-time memories, they hold me like a spell—
The clock upon the mantel, where I learned the time to tell;
The simple, homely furniture, the keepsakes few and plain,
And the murmuring of the kettle, as it hung upon the crane—
Hear it singing, singing, singing,
Loud and merry, fast and slow;
Hear it murmur, murmur, murmur,
Soft and low.

Oh! there's bliss supreme in home, when its joys are pure and sweet,
And life's most sacred memories around the hearthstone meet,
And the tenderest thoughts and saddest ones come borne upon the strain
Of the singing of the kettle as it hung upon the crane—
Hear it singing, singing, singing,
Loud and merry, fast and slow;
Hear it murmur, murmur, murmur,
Soft and low.

HER STONY HEART.

It was on the occasion of the meeting of the sewing circle, which was held that week at Miss Keziah Fletcher's, that the fruitful subject of Mrs. Denton's peculiarities was brought up for about the fortieth time. All the members with the exception of the minister's wife, were present, and every one of them had something to say of the poor woman whose strange ways had caused her to become quite a curiosity in Brierville.

"It's my opinion such people are best left alone," said Mrs. Prudence Randall, as she bit off her thread a little spitefully.

"She's been a disgrace to the town ever since she's lived in it," said Miss Paulina Cowan. "I must confess that I haven't any patience with such queer ways."

"Poor thing! she's seen a sight of trouble," said Miss Keziah, who was ever ready to pour oil on the troubled waters. "First her husband died of delirium tremens—"

"Worthless sot! she'd oughter have been pleased to death ter get rid o' him," interrupted Miss Mattie Baker, throwing her scissors near her with considerable noise. "You won't get no pity for her out o' that, Miss Keziah."

"Then she lost her two little girls with scarlet fever," continued Miss Keziah, unheeding the interruption, "and only a year later her second boy of the typhoid. She'd only one child left then, and that was her oldest boy. She set so much store by him! I remember seeing her looking at him once as if she worshipped the very ground he trod on, and—"

"That's it," interrupted Mrs. Bliss, whose husband was one of the "pillars" in the Methodist church. "She thought more of him than she did of her salvation, and he was taken from her that her hard heart might be softened."

"But it seems harder than ever," said Mrs. Randall. "She won't listen to words of comfort, nor anything else. No one can make any impression on her. Miss Cowan here went to her and told her how we were all born to pass under the rod which chasteneth, and that her Edgar had been called from the evil to come. What d'ye think Mis Denton did? She rose up like a fury and told Paulina she preferred to be left alone."

"Yes," giggled Miss Cowan hysterically. "She'd rather have my room than my company, any day. Howsomever, I don't bear her no hard feelin's. I done what I could for her."

"The minister's wife didn't get no better treatment," said Miss Baker, "She sat in Mis Denton's shanty most an hour talkin' of the mysterious ways of Providence, an' everything bein' for our good, an' flesh bein' grass, an' so on. An' Miss Denton, she never spoke a word from first to last, but lay on the sofy with her eyes shet, an' never even said good-bye when Mrs. Bounce went away. Such impertinence! An' I went there, too. I didn't want to be behind the rest of the folks in doin' my duty. I told her about these afflictions bein' sent for our good, an' she must bow her neck to the yoke and bend her back to the burden. She laughed at me! yes, she done just that."

"She wouldn't even see me," said Mrs. Peckham, a tall, sharp-featured woman, with a shrill voice. "I saw her at the window, but she wouldn't open the door, no matter how loud I knocked. But I scattered tracts all down the front walk, and I hope they did her good."

"Miss Keziah, you ain't been, I believe," said Miss Baker. "Well, don't go; it's time wasted. Her heart is as hard as a stun."

"No," said Miss Keziah, laying down her work as she spoke. "I haven't been to see her. You know I was away to Helmstone when her Edgar had the fever, and since I have been back, my rheumatiz has been that bad I couldn't go anywhere. But now I'm a trifle better, I'll take my turn."

"What is the use? What can you do? Haven't we done everything?" chorused the other ladies.

"I think I shall ask her to tea," said Miss Keziah, thoughtfully.

"Ask her to tea!" repeated half-a-dozen astonished listeners.

"Yes; none of you tried that, I believe," answered Miss Keziah.

"She won't come," said Mrs. Bliss. "Perhaps not; but all the same it won't do no harm to ask her."

"I hope you'll try to soften her heart, and bring her ter the prayer-meetin' Thursday night," said Miss Cowan.

Miss Keziah made no answer; but a peculiar look crossed her homely, good-natured face—a look Miss Paulina did not quite understand.

"Miss Keziah'll be wise to make no promises," said Mrs. Bliss. "It stands to reason that she won't succeed where all the rest of us have failed. One might as well talk to a stone as Mrs. Denton."

Miss Keziah sighed, and bent her eyes upon her work. She had known what suffering was once, and she knew that while sorrow and pain softens some natures, it hardens and embitters others.

Mrs. Denton lived entirely alone on the outskirts of the village, in a little, old, weather-beaten house she had bought when she first came to Brierville, ten years before. Weeds grew tall and rank in the yard, the sunken steps leading to the door were half-buried in vines, the well-curb was broken, the gate fallen to the ground, in fact, everything about the place spoke of ruin and decay.

"Not a very cheerful place, certainly," muttered Miss Keziah, as the day following the meeting of the sewing circle she drove up to Widow Denton's and hitched her horse to the tumble-down fence which partially enclosed the yard. "Now, Hetty, you sit right still till I come back, and don't start old Moll."

Hetty was a diminutive niece of Miss Keziah's, a golden-haired, blue-eyed child of six years of age, who had been left to her aunt as the sole legacy of an only sister.

Miss Keziah walked up the grass-grown path, and knocked bodly at Mrs. Denton's door.

Before her knuckles had fairly left it, the door was flung open by Mrs. Denton herself, who stood silently regarding her visitor with an expression of resentment and indignation.

"How d'ye do, Mis Denton? I'm Miss Keziah Fletcher. Perhaps you've heard tell of me before. I was at Helmstone a considerable spell, an' since I got back I've been laid by with the rheumatiz' or I'd have called before. I came to see if you'd take tea at my house to-night. I'll make you comfortable, an' it'll be a sort o' change for you."

Mrs. Denton made no reply. She stood staring at her visitor as if she had not heard her words. Then her eyes wandered to the gate, and fell at last upon the spring wagon and it's small occupant, whose golden curls were escaping from the close calico sun-bonnet which shielded her pretty face from the noonday sun.

"Is that your child!" she asked, abruptly, but without taking her gaze from Hetty. There was a hungry, yearning look in her eyes as she spoke, a tremor in her voice.

"Land sakes! No indeed!" ejaculated Miss Keziah, with virtuous horror in her tone. "I never was married. The only man I ever cared a straw for was drowned at sea, and those that cared for me was mostly mercenary in their views. Hetty is my sister Jane's child. Jane she died to Helmstone some six months back. Come, won't you jump in the wagon and go with me? I didn't 'low to be disapp'inted in havin' you to tea, so I made all ready for you."

"Yes, I'll come," said Mrs. Denton, withdrawing her gaze from Hetty, who was grasping the reins with ludicrous earnestness, as if the steadiness of old Moll depended entirely upon her.

She went into the house and put on an old-fashioned straw bonnet and a faded black merino shawl. Then she walked down the path and climbed into the wagon after Miss Keziah, without uttering a word.

"You forgot to lock your door," said the careful spinster, as she took the reins from Hetty's little hands.

A bitter smile curled Mrs. Denton's lips. "I never lock it," she said; "there is nothing in the house worth stealing."

The two women jogged along the quiet country road, with the child between them, Miss Keziah talking on indifferent subjects in her kind, sensible, whole-hearted way. She did not allude to her visitor's sorrows, nor did she mention visits paid to the lonely cottage by other members of the sewing circle.

A man took the horse when they reached Miss Keziah's farm, which was a mile from the center of the town, and one of the finest in the country. It was well cultivated, well stocked with fruits of various kinds, and its buildings were all comfortable and roomy, the house itself being built of stone, in a substantial, old-fashioned manner.

Miss Keziah led the way into her sitting-room, and helped her visitor take off her bonnet and shawl.

"Have this easy chair, Miss Denton," she said with great cordiality, "and make yourself to home. I've got to see to supper, but I guess Hetty can amuse you a spell. Hetty, mind you're good while I'm gone."

She left the room and was absent nearly half an hour. When she returned Mrs. Denton had Hetty on her lap and was telling her a fairy story. The first smile the poor woman's face had worn for nearly a year rushed on it as she looked up at Miss Keziah's entrance and said, "She reminds me so much of my little Bertha. You can't tell the good it does me just to hold her in my arms—they have been empty so long."

A deep sigh followed the words.

"I'm glad she hasn't bothered you," said Miss Keziah, cheerfully. "But now come in to tea. I guess you're pretty nigh famished a-waitin' for it."

A sumptuous repast was in readiness. Broiled chicken, cold ham, light biscuit, apple, grape, and pumpkin pie, doughnuts, pound cake and cookies, composed the bill of fare, concluding with every variety of sweetmeat and condiment, preserves, pickles, honey and cheese. Miss Keziah could not have arranged a better feast had she been expecting a bishop to tea, instead of a poor widow whose stone heart she wished to soften.

With a cordial smile the spinister motioned her guest to a seat, and after putting Hetty in a high chair, sat down herself at the head of the table and reverently asked a blessing.

"I didn't put up as many kinds of preserves as usual this year," she observed, as she helped Mrs. Denton to plum jelly. "I ain't the woman I used to be by a long way. Rheumatiz do lay holt on a body so! I'm in bed or on crutches half my time. I calkerlate I'll have to give up the farm if I don't mend. I did lot on having Jane here to manage everything for me; but poor thing, the fever carried her off all to onct, just as she'd got free o' that ornary husband o' hers. I'd hate to give up, though. Jane and me was both born here, and I've never knowed no other home."

When supper was over the two women walked about the yard, made a tour of the garden and admired the cows as they came leisurely up to the barnyard to be milked. Then Mrs. Denton remarked that it was growing late, and she must hurry home.

"What's the need of your going?" asked Miss Keziah, "I've got four spare rooms, and would be glad if they were all full. Suppose you stay all night?"

Mrs. Denton hesitated. She thought of her lonely, neglected house peopled with the ghosts of her dead children, and contrasted it with this bright home-like place, where a child's sweet voice made music.

"Do stay," said little Hetty, clinging to the visitor's dress.

This decided the poor heart-broken woman.

"I will," "and I thank you for asking me, Miss Keziah. I have not deserved such kindness."

That night after Hetty had gone to bed, the two women sat talking in the large sitting-room, which an open wood fire made cheerful and bright. Gradually Mrs. Denton was led to speak of her children, all now resting in their narrow graves in the village cemetery. She spoke of their uniform goodness and love for herself, but said little of her grief at losing them. Her voice sounded harsh and strange to Miss Keziah, who understood the effort for control the poor woman was making.

"Poor soul! you've seen a sight o' trouble I know," the spinister said, softly, and she put her hands tenderly on those of her guest, which were clasped hard together.

There was a deep silence for a few moments, unbroken save by the ticking of the eight-day clock in the corner. Then suddenly Mrs. Denton threw herself at Miss Keziah's feet and broke into bitter weeping. Hoarse sobs tore their way from her breast, and her whole frame shook with the violence of emotion. The restraint, the self-control of years was broken down. The heart, burdened for so long, found relief at last in passionate sobs and cries.

Miss Keziah said nothing, but tenderly stroked away from the hot forehead the thick hair grown gray with sorrow. There was sympathy in every touch.

"You are so different from the rest," said Mrs. Denton, when at length she had grown calm enough to speak. "The others who have come to me have driven me nearly mad with their unmeaning advice. Not one of them knew what I suffered, not one could understand my grief. When my boy, my Edgar, the last of all my children, was ill, no one came near me—the disease was contagious, they said. I nursed him alone. Alone I saw him die, followed him alone to his grave. Could I believe their words of sympathy after that? Ah, Miss Keziah, words could give you no idea of all that I have suffered. One by one every joy of my life has left me. One by one my children were taken from me, until only Edgar was left. How I loved him! How I depended upon him to atone for all I had suffered. How I dreamed over him. Idle dreams, foreshadowing happiness that was never to be mine. Then he was taken, and I was left to sink into despair. I wanted only to die, to join my dear ones where no suffering could ever touch me again. My heart yearned for sympathy. I would have welcomed it. But those that came to me came because they thought it their duty, not from love or kindness. Not one of them asked me to her home, or tried to make me forget my sorrows in other things. No, they reminded me of them, and preached patience and resignation."

"They acted according to their lights," said charitable Miss Keziah. "They have led easy, pleasant lives, and did not know how to deal with a sorrow such as yours."

"But you knew," said Mrs. Denton, in a low voice.

"Yes," answered Miss Keziah, "I know, because I have suffered too."

They sat talking by the fire until nearly midnight, and then retired to rest. Mrs. Denton for the first time since Edgar's death offered up a silent but earnest prayer before she fell asleep. Her heart was no longer hardened.

She did not go back to her cottage the next morning, as she had expected, for Miss Keziah's rheumatism had been increased by her late walk of the previous evening, and she was unable to leave her bed. For many days she was utterly helpless, and during that time was tenderly nursed by Mrs. Denton, who also made herself generally useful in the house, and directed the work of the farm with care and decision. When Miss Keziah got well she was so much pleased with the way things had been managed during her enforced idleness, that she made a proposition to Mrs. Denton.

"Suppose you take the place of my sister Jane," she said, "and stay right along with me. I need somebody, as you see; and what's the use of both of us living lonely when we can be company for each other as well as not? You'd take a deal of comfort in Hetty, too. I believe you love her now 'most as well I do."

"She seems like my own little Bertha come back to me," said Mrs. Denton. "But Oh, Miss Keziah, I ought not to accept your kindness. I have been so hard, so wicked, so rebellious. I do not deserve that such good should come to me."

"We differ about that; but we won't argue it," said Miss Keziah. "I want you, and you'd like to stay, so the thing is settled. You're my partner from this day on."

The next Sunday the good people of Brierville were surprised to see Mrs. Denton in Miss Keziah's pew at church, and in attendance at prayers in the evening.

"How did you manage it?" asked Mrs. Bliss, as she stopped Miss Keziah in the vestibule of the church.

"Oh, I asked her to tea, as I said I was going to," answered Miss Keziah, "and I guess the preserves kinder softened and sweetened her up," and she passed on to where Mrs. Denton stood waiting to help her into the spring wagon.

Neither Mrs. Denton nor Miss Keziah ever regretted entering into that partnership. As the years went by Miss Keziah often wondered how she should ever have managed the farm without the help of the capable, energetic woman who had "taken the place of sister Jane."

Mrs. Denton was never weary of working for the comfort and prosperity of the friend who had come to her in the hour of need, and led her out of the slough of despond. And happiness made her a different woman. She learned at last those lessons of patience and resignation which had seemed so hard and bitter in the first days of her sorrow. Despair, rebellion and repining gave place in heart to hope and tenderness. She grew at last to have only tender, gentle memories of the loved ones who had left her, and she proved a kind, judicious guardian to little Hetty when warm-hearted Miss Keziah had passed away from earth.

CONFOUND THE LANGUAGE.

Senator Harris said in a debate recently: "I make this statement in bona fide good faith." This reminded Senator Palmer of a motion made by a colored man in a Michigan state convention to "adjourn sine die till to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock." It also recalls the motion of Belford, the "red-headed rooster of the Rockies," made in the house once, "that congress adjourn sine die." Of course the motion was followed by general laughter. Belford rubbed his eyes and said: "I move this house to adjourn bona fide." At this there was a perfect uproar on the floor of the house and in the galleries. As soon as Mr. Belford could make himself heard, he "braced up" and said: "Mr. Speaker, I move that we just purely and simply adjourn."

I remember another incident in Belford's congressional career, when he pointed to a fellow member, and with scorn exclaimed: "There he sits, mute, silent and dumb."

"Yes," remarked a neighbor of Belford's, amid the silence which followed this crushing argument, "and he ain't sayin' a word."

That "brought down" the house.—New York Tribune.

CAN'T GET TOO MUCH.

There was a bridal couple coming in on the Bay City train the other day, and the passengers in that particular car were on the grin most of the time over their antics. The bride had got the man she loved, and she didn't care a copper who saw her pillow her head on his shoulder. The bridegroom had got a farm with his wife and if he wanted to feed her gum drops or squeeze her hand, whose business was it? A little old man, dried up and bareheaded, sat directly in front of the couple, and he looked around so often that the young husband finally explained:

"We're just married."

"I knowed it all the time," chuckled bald-head.

"And we can't help it, you know."

"No, you can't—I'll be darned if you kin!"

"I presume it all seems very silly to an old man like you," continued the husband.

"Does it! Does it!" cackled the old fellow as he bobbed around. "Wall, you bet your life she doesn't. I've been right thar three times over, and I'm now on my way to Canada to marry a fourth! You orter see me a week hence. I'll hug and squeeze and fondle at the rate of forty miles an hour, and darn the skunk that laffs at me! Silly! Why, children, it's parrydise biled right down!"

A Farmer's View Of The Church.

Well, wife, I've had a round with Wayne
'Bout jinin' of our church;
He tried the skeptic dodge on me,
The argument of smirch.

Says he, "Look at your members now,
There's Jones got drunk, an' Swem
Will cheat a friend to make a trade;
Ain't I as good as them?"

Says I, "A butcher buying stock
Does just the way you do;
He hunts around the cattle yard,
And finds the meanest two;

"Then every offer that he makes,
An' ev'ry one he hears,
Is coupled with the sneerin' words—
'Jest look at them two steers!'

"You pick the meanest Christians out,
And then with tricky jeers
You run the whole church down by that—
'Jest look at them two steers!'

"No farmer's fooled by that ole trick,
An' so you can't afford
To risk your soul in tryin' it
Upon the all-wise Lord."

WILD MOUNTAN DOGS.

The writer has had occasion on one or two occasions prior to this to tell of the fierce nature and savage practices of the wild dogs which infest the mountains of the Upper Wind river. These dogs are not the common wolf of the western prairies and mountains. They are something far more powerful and dangerous. Several years since a male Scotch staghound and a female English bulldog ran away in company from Fort Washakie, made their home in the mountains, and these wild dogs of the Upper Wind river are their savage offspring. With such ancestorship how can this wild offspring help being a canine terror?

To the speed and endurance of the Scotch staghound is mated the ferocity and tenacity of the English bulldog, and these wild dogs are evidently worthy in every way of their origin. Speedy, savage and stubborn, these animals are deterred by no pursuit, restrained by no fear and are daunted by no difficulties. They pursue, slay and devour; such is the simplicity and efficiency of this native code of canine ethics. The latest exploit of these canine marauders of which we have any account is the destruction of a small herd of bears. It appears that about two weeks ago about a dozen bears of that dreaded and large silver-tip variety came down from the surrounding mountains to enjoy themselves on the sunny slopes of the Warm Spring basin. In the course of the day those bears all got together, and while thus massed were attacked by about one hundred of the wild dogs.

The conflict was terrible. The bears fought with all the courage and ferocity for which the silver-tip is noted, but the mingled strain of staghound and bulldog supplied a courage and ferocity greater still, and at the end of half an hour every bear had died where he was brought to bay.

The dogs suffered severely, twenty-five of their number perishing in the fight. The survivors wasted little time, however, in mourning over their dead companions, but began at once on the banquet their own powers had provided, and in an hour from the time the combat ceased, only the clean-picked bones of the twelve bears remained to tell of the struggle to the death which had taken place, and the savage feast which had followed it.—Wind Mountain Mountaineer.

Dr. Arnold, the noble master of Rugby, wrote this prayer for his own use before he went into school every day: "O Lord, I have a busy world around me; eye, ear and thought will be needed for all my work to be done in that busy world. Now, ere I enter upon it I would commit eye, ear and thought to thee. Do thou bless them and keep their work thine; that as, through thy natural laws, my heart beats and my blood flows without any thought of mine for them, so my spiritual life may hold on its course at these times when my mind cannot consciously turn to thee to commit each particular thought to thy service. Hear my prayer for my dear redeemer's sake. Amen."

An old traveler has discovered a unique method of feeing the hotel waiter so as to secure the best results. He says: "At the beginning of the first week at the hotel, should the attention of the waiter prove satisfactory, I quietly take a five dollar bill from my pocket, crease it across the center and with a pen-knife cut it in two pieces. At the end of the meal I present the waiter with one-half, placing the other in my pocket-book with the remark that if his attentions continue satisfactory I will at the end of the week present him with the other half. This scheme works like a charm."

Sunday after church. Wife to husband, who had heard a sermon—"Well, dear, what was the text?" Husband—"The word is the truth, or something like that." Wife—"Was it a good sermon?" Husband—The first half hour was good enough, but clear through the latter half he kept saying, 'one word more,' 'another word more,' 'a word in conclusion,' 'only a word more,' and so on, until I didn't know which word was the truth, and got so mixed up that I lost confidence in the whole business.—Washington Critic.

Among the Romans, if a man kissed his betrothed, she gained thereby the half of his effects in the event of his dying before celebrating their marriage; if the lady herself died under the same circumstances, her heirs or nearest of kin took the half due to her. A kiss was regarded very seriously by the ancient Romans.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 8, 1888.

ONE possible presidential candidate, Robert T. Lincoln, sailed for Europe last Saturday. He has no bee in his bonnet, but if the presidential lightning should happen to strike in his direction it wouldn't be such a bad thing.

NEW YORK will be the first state to send its criminals out of the world by electricity instead of hanging, Gov. Hill having signed the bill passed by the late Legislature directing the change. If the process works well it will undoubtedly be adopted by other states.

"WHO WOULDN'T?" exclaimed Chauncey M. Depew the other day, when asked if he would accept the presidential nomination if it should come to him. As far as heard from Mr. Blaine is the first man to decline such a nomination when sure of it, and at the same time almost equally sure of an election.

FISH on dry land could not be any more uncomfortable than were the Democratic delegates who spent last Sunday in St. Louis, where the law against Sunday selling of liquor and beer is now strictly enforced. If they ever have to go there again they will take the precaution to go loaded.

OREGON gives cold comfort to the Democracy this year, the state being swept by the Republicans Monday by the largest majority since the war. The Legislature is strongly Republican, insuring the election of a Republican United States senator. The Democrats have worked like beavers to carry the State, but the result shows that Oregon will not be in the Cleveland column next fall.

SOME enemy of President Cleveland has been circulating base slanders regarding his home life among the delegates at St. Louis, and Mrs. Cleveland comes to the defense of her husband in a letter to a friend, in which she indignantly denies the report of ill-treatment and says: "I can wish the women of our country no greater blessing than that their homes and their lives may be as happy, and that their husbands may be as kind, attentive, considerate and affectionate as mine." Mrs. Cleveland will make more votes for her husband than all the politicians in the Democratic party.

THE House at Washington last Friday passed the Senate bill conferring upon Gen. Sheridan the title of general of the army, though two ex-Confederates blocked the way for some time, by refusing the unanimous consent which was necessary. The president sent the nomination to the Senate, it was confirmed at once, and the commission was in the general's hands speedily. The honor is a merited one, and his countrymen will hope that he may live many years to enjoy it, though this may be hoping against hope, for the brave old officer's life hangs on a thread. He is fighting the death angel with splendid courage, but the chances are all against him, and the sad news of his death may be expected at any moment.

A CHARMING summer trip has been arranged for the annual excursion of the Massachusetts Press Association. Leaving Boston Thursday morning, July 5, under the care of the famous excursion purveyors, Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb, the party will proceed to Saratoga, via the Fitchburg Railroad, stopping at Congress Hall. Friday morning the excursionists will take a trip over to Lake George, and thence by rail and stage into the Adirondack region, spending that night at Elizabethtown and the next two at Lake Placid. The return trip will include Sarenac Lake, the Ausable Chasm, Lake Champlain, Burlington and Rutland, terminating at Boston Wednesday night. The attractions of the trip are many and varied, and with the low price ($25) at which it is offered ought to call out a large party of excursionists.

CLEVELAND AND THURMAN.

The Democratic national convention has come and gone, and its work is before the country. It was a large, enthusiastic and uncommonly harmonious gathering, and everything passed off with machine-like smoothness. The renomination of President Cleveland was, of course, a foregone conclusion, and it was made on Wednesday by acclamation, the presentation of his name by Daniel Dougherty being followed by a scene of the wildest enthusiasm, which continued for over twenty minutes. Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, was nominated for the second place on the ticket yesterday with little opposition, practically his only opponent being Gov. Gray of Indiana. Thurman is an old-school Democratic war horse, a man of high integrity, but a firm believer in the doctrine that to the victor belongs the spoils. The platform is a weak one. The tariff plank was the rock on which the convention was in danger of splitting, but trouble was skilfully averted by reaffirming the platform of 1884, and indorsing "the views expressed by President Cleveland in his last annual message to Congress as the correct interpretation of that platform upon the question of tariff reduction." "Honest reform in the civil service" as practiced by the president, in clearing out Republican officials and putting in the Democrats, is commended, and the record of the administration is pointed to with pride as a guarantee for the future. The Republicans are castigated, and tariff reduction is discussed in a blind way intended to please all parties. The party clearly is not in favor of too much reform in any direction, but wants just enough to catch votes.

The ladies of the Congregational society will give a strawberry festival at the church parlors next Wednesday evening.

Rev. Mr. Priest of Monson occupied the pulpit at St. Paul's Universalist church Sunday in exchange with Rev. F. W. Betts.

The Patterson Club met at the residence of Mrs. E. C. Sexton on Park street Tuesday evening, and was highly entertained.

The Woman's Relief Corps admitted three new members at its meeting Friday evening. The organization is in a prosperous condition.

An adjourned meeting of the Young Men's Library Association will be held at the library room next Wednesday evening at 7.30 o'clock.

The Holyokes, said to be composed of very able players, will play the Palmers in a match game of ball on the park to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock.

A gang of men has been at work this week raising the tracks of the New London Northern road at Holden's mill, where the bridge was washed away.

Rev. F. W. Betts will preach a sermon to young men at the Universalist church next Sunday evening. All the young men of the village are invited to attend.

The match game of ball on the park Wednesday afternoon between the Weeks House team and a local picked nine was won by the former. The score was 29 to 9.

James McBride of Monson had his team badly smashed by colliding with a post on South Main street last Friday evening. The accident was caused by the horse taking fright.

Round trip tickets to the convention of the National Educational Association at San Francisco in July will be sold at $94 from Palmer, and a choice of 18 different routes is offered.

Ned Jackson has discontinued his duties with the local telephone exchange, and has accepted a position at Springfield as telephone inspector. He is succeeded here by George D. Beecher.

The lecture on "The Battle of Gettysburg," by Capt. C. H. Kimball, announced for Wednesday evening at the Baptist church, was indefinitely postponed, on account of the small attendance.

The local division of the Ancient Order of Hibernians has chosen M. J. Dillon and J. T. Donovan as delegates to attend a state convention of that order to be held at Springfield next Wednesday.

Children's Sunday will be very appropriately observed at the Second Congregational church next Sabbath, and also at the Baptist church, where there will be a Sunday school concert in the evening.

Frank H. Hatch has severed his connection with the Thomson-Houston Electric Company and accepted a more lucrative and responsible position in an electrical laboratory at Newark, N. J.

Misses Mabel and Lucy Taft held a progressive jack-straw party at their home on the corner of Park and Central streets Wednesday evening. Guests were present from Monson, Thorndike and this village.

The Palmer High School nine defeated the Wide Awakes in a game of ball on the park last Saturday forenoon by a score of 19 to 11. The latter team will play the Monson Academy nine to-morrow afternoon.

During the thunder storm Wednesday night the house of John Ferrell, near West Brimfield, was struck by lightning three times, a hole being knocked in the brick wall and the house filled with smoke. Fortunately no one was injured.

The citizens of Brimfield have withdrawn their petition for the discontinuance of a highway, and petitioned for the discontinuing of two, which will do away with three grade crossings and two bridges. The petition will be found in another column.

The following are the newly-elected officers of the Ancient Order of Hibernians: President, Michael J. Dillon; vice-president, John P. O'Connor; recording secretary, Hugh Hanley; financial secretary, Patrick Kennedy; treasurer, Charles Burns.

The Palmer clerks will go to Monson next Wednesday afternoon, where they will meet the clerks of that town in a game of base ball. Each nine is to be composed strictly of clerks, so that if any "Kellys" are discovered they will not be allowed to contest in the game.

The officers of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church for the ensuing year are: President, Dr. G. H. Wilkins; vice-president, Dr. C. W. Cross; secretary, Miss Helen Cobb; corresponding secretary, Willie Breckenridge; treasurer, James Dewey.

Rev. E. Hitchcock of Ware delivered a very able discourse last Sabbath to an appreciative audience at Forest Lake Gardens. Next Sabbath the services will be conducted by Rev. E. W. Virgin of Bondsville, at 3 p. m. All are cordially invited to come and bring their gospel hymn books with them.

Rev. F. W. Betts, Stillman Ellis, Miss Carrie Ellis and O. W. Studley were the delegates chosen to represent St. Paul's Universalist church at a convention held at Worcester Wednesday. Rev. F. W. Betts addressed the assembly, his subject being: "Is the Universalist Church in Need of a Systematic Theology?"

Base ball seems to be epidemic throughout the town, and hardly a week passes without the formation of a new team. The Wide-Awakes, who had a good reputation last season, have reorganized as follows: Beecher, c.; Rooney, p.; King, 1 b.; Roach, 2 b.; J. Roach, 3 b.; Dockery, s. s.; McGuire, l. f.; McManamy, c. f.; Murphy, r. f.

Three cars on freight train No. 32, on the New London Northern Railroad, were derailed near Mount Tobey last Friday afternoon, caused by a quantity of lumber falling off a car and obstructing the track. The wrecking train, with a gang of men, were sent out from this station to clear up the wreck, which caused the transfer of passengers and express matter for a short time. The damage is estimated at over $1000.

A directors' meeting of the Palmer Reading Room Association was held at the district court room Tuesday evening with only five members present. The following committee was appointed to procure reading matter for the room: Dr. O. P. Allen, E. P. Ball and C. L. Alexander. This committee was also appointed to make the necessary furnishings for the room from time to time, as may be required: Dr. W. H. Stowe, L. H. Gager and M. J. Dillon.

A very enjoyable occasion yesterday was the party given by Charles Atwater and Theodore L. Pomeroy to their friends and acquaintances residing at Boston, Pittsfield and Palmer. The Berkshire party arrived on the 2.04 p. m. express train, and with others indulged in a ten-mile drive in a tally-ho coach to Belchertown, stopping at the Highland, where all were well entertained. Upon the return a supper was served at the Weeks House in Landlord Weeks' best style.

The Palmer Lawn Tennis Club held a special meeting at the Weeks House parlors Monday evening and the following ladies were elected members of the club: Miss Mina Ball, Miss Hattie Blanchard, Miss Emma Chilson, Miss Addie Rogers, Miss Lena Brown and Miss Cora Brown. At the next meeting it is expected that quite a number of other names will be presented for acceptance. Before the season ends the club proposes to have a tennis tournament. Charles H. Betts and Dr. E. E. Hill were also chosen members of the club.

C. P. Stone, G. A. Griffin and Dwyer & Sullivan were given a surprise party about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when their places were raided by Officers Healey, Proctor and Bowen, and the liquors that were found confiscated because the proprietors did not have their licenses displayed. It seems that for years the custom has been for saloon keepers to take out their licenses any time during the month of May or the first of June. The licenses were at the town clerk's office, but had not been called for. At Stone's and Griffin's the bar bottles and all were taken, but at Dwyer & Sullivan's—who have a fourth-class license only—the officers had rolled out one barrel of "stuff" when by some pretty lively work on the part of one of the firm the license was produced, and the officers could take no more. At one place the bartender remarked "that the selectmen said to go ahead, it would be all right," but the officer couldn't see that the selectmen overruled the commonwealth in the matter.

A Narrow Escape.

Walter Warner, an employe of Wilson M. Tucker, near the quarries of the W. N. Flynt Granite Company at Monson, was struck by the 1.29 p. m. express train on the Boston & Albany Railroad at the Tenneyville crossing Monday while driving a team heavily loaded with sleepers. The oxen were driven across safely, but the wagon and the driver were both struck in such a manner as to smash the former and badly injure the latter, who was conveyed to the union station, where he was attended by Dr. William Holbrook, who found that he had a severe scalp wound and a fracture of the nose. He is being properly cared for, and will probably recover.

Chicopee Falls, 7; Palmers, 6.

The Palmers met their first defeat of the season on the park last Saturday afternoon in the presence of over 300 spectators. The contest was close, the feature being the battle between the two pitchers, who kept the score down by the number of strike outs at bat. Cotter's pitching would have won the game had it not been for the unjust decisions madeat a critical point by the umpire, who came with the visitors. Martin Rooney and Kinnare played a wretched fielding game, although as it was the score was tied in almost every inning until the last, when the visitors brought in the run that was needed to win the game. The score by innings follows:

| INNINGS | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Chicopee Falls | 0 | 3 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 1 | 1 | 7 |
| Palmers | 2 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 2 | 0 | 0 | 6 |

Time of game, 2.10; umpire, George Grace.

Probate Court.

The probate court at Springfield Wednesday transacted the following business for this section of the county: Administration granted in the estates of—Mary M. Foster, late of Wilbraham, James M. Foster, administrator; James Burns, late of Palmer, Charles L. Gardner, administrator; George A. Crocker, late of Hampden, Oliver Wolcott, administrator; Lucia E. Strong, late of Palmer, Homre C. Strong administrator; Hannah S. Silcox, late of Longmeadow, Robert L. Silcox, administrator; Rose L. Carpenter, late of Holland, R. A. Harris administrator. The will of Joel C. Newcomb, late of Hampden, Epaphro A. Day, executor, was approved, and an inventory filed in the estate of Franklin U. Bartlett, late of Hampden, real $3125, personal $4870. Executor's accounts were rendered in the estates of Sarah Phelps, late of Longmeadow; Julia R. Anderson, late of Monson. A trustees' account was rendered in the estate of Thomas Cordis, late of Longmeadow, and permission was granted to sell real estate in the estate of William K. Flynt, late of Palmer.

A Cemetery Association?

An effort is being made to awaken an interest in the condition of our village cemetery, and a meeting of all persons interested in the subject is to be held at the the district court room next Monday evening at 7.30 o'clock, to consider the question of organizing a cemetery association. The need of such an organization must be evident to any one who will visit the cemetery. In many individual cases lots are nicely carted for by the hands of loving friends, but in very many cases friends have moved away or have also passed "over the line," and there are none left to give attention to the lots. As a consequence they are overrun with grass and shrubbery, head-stones are leaning or have entirely fallen over, and the cemetery as a whole presents a shamefully forsaken and neglected appearance. Right here comes in the necessity and opportunity for a wide-awake association, which shall see that the entire cemetery is kept trimmed up and in a presentable condition, and for a fair consideration will see that private lots are properly cared for. There is work enough for such a society, and there are people enough who are, or should be, interested in sustaining one, while their number is increasing constantly, as dear ones are passing away one by one. It is hoped there will be a full attendance, not of gentlemen alone, but of ladies as well, for all are equally interested.

District Court.

June 1.—H. T. Huntington, for keeping an unlicensed dog; discharged.

John Morris, for drunkenness; paid $5 and costs of $6.98.

Archie Devens, for drunkeness and larceny; committed in default of payment.

N. R. Hulett, for contempt of court; paid $5 and costs of $6.96.

The following civil entries were also made: Daniel F. Holden vs. George H. Stark, action of contract; Taft & Kenefick for plaintiff. Estate of Lucia E. and Homer C. Strong vs. Henry Adams, action of tort; H. C. Strong for plaintiffs.

2.—Harvey Fields, for obstructing sidewalk; nolle prosequi entered by the counsel for the commonwealth.

4.—Anthony Conroy, assault; paid $5 and costs of $9.98.

Sidney Kelsey, drunkenness; case continued to July 5.

5.—James Flemming, drunkenness; committed in default of payment.

6—Daniel Pratt, drunkenness; paid $5 and costs of $6.83.

7.—James Brown, William Fitzgerald and Thomas Quigley, for drunkenness; paid $7.66, $6.73 and $6.58.

8.—The cases of Dwyer & Sullivan, C. P. Stone and George A. Griffin, for illegal liquor keeping, were set down for trial June 24.

Forepaugh's Circus.

The great Forepaugh and "Wild West" shows will exhibit in all their "unapproachable and unabridged entirety," at Palmer next Friday. A circus with the Forepaugh brand has come to be recognized as first-class in every respect, and the reputation of the great showman alone would make it successful. Adam Forepaugh is not, however, content to rest on his laurels, and this season marks a new era of added splendor to his record as a manager. From critics everywhere comes the same expression, "It is the greatest and grandest show ever put on the road." The leading papers of every city where the show has exhibited are enthusiastic in their praise of its novel, numerous and often remarkable features. Such unanimity of commendation must mean something more than the mere circus bills can express. A well-known gentleman who saw the opening performance of the great combined shows in Philadelphia says of it: "There is just this to be said about the Forepaugh show this season—no other circus in the world has a trapeze-leaping pony; no other show can exhibit so many elephants, or that are so well trained; no other circus has a "Wild West" exhibition, with genuine Sioux Indians, scouts and cowboys; there is no Dr. Carver except the Carver with the Forepaugh "Wild West," and no rider in the world can equal Adam Forepaugh, Jr's., thrilling thirty-horse bareback act. This is strong, but it is eminently safe to endorse it. Through an arrangement entered into between the leading circuses of the country, the combined Forepaugh and "Wild West" shows will be the only big tented exhibition that will appear in this locality during the present season.

Personal.

The Ladies' Aid Society held a sociable at Rev. Mr. Virgin's Wednesday evening.

The second primary school is closed, the teacher being afflicted with the mumps.

Presiding Elder G. F. Eaton of Springfield will preach at the M. E. church next Tuesday evening.

BRIMFIELD.

Porter A. Parker has been drawn as a juror for the June term of the superior court.

The marriage of William H. Bartlett of North Brookfield, and Annie M., daughter of James R. and Louisa M. Brown of this place, took place last evening.

Children's Day will be observed at the church next Sunday by a sermon to the children, baptism of one or two little ones, and a concert exercise by the Sunday school.

Miss Anna Cutler invited the Christian Endeavor society to her home last Thursday evening to a surprise visit on Arthur Plympton, one of its members, and gave them a pleasant evening's entertainment.

THREE RIVERS.

Frank W. Derby, telegraph operator at Athol, visited friends in town Tuesday.

One of our milk merchants bought a valuable (?) horse one day this week for $5.

Joseph Dearborn, overseer of the dye house, has returned from a three weeks' vacation.

The Three Rivers base ball club will cross bats with the Unions of Ware, tomorrow afternoon at 3 p. m.

G. Henry Buell is spending a two weeks' vacation with his father. He returns to school at Springfield next Monday.

Ruggles Bros. have a telephone in their office, thus giving out of town patrons a chance to order vegetables fresh from the garden.

The building occupied by Mrs. A. M. Orcutt is having a large addition built to it, giving her more room for her increasing millinery business. Charles Ruggles is doing the work.

During the thunder shower Wednesday night the lightning came into the Palmer Mill office on the telephone wire, but was fortunate in doing no further damage than the burning of several books which hung near the transmitter.

The Palmer Mill has commenced upon a new schedule of working hours. Instead of commencing at 6.45 a. m., it is changed to 6.30, commencing noon at 12.45, stop at 6.15 p. m., stopping Saturday at 11.30 a. m. This makes the 60 hours during the week, and gives the employes a half holiday, which will be appreciated by all.

WILBRAHAM.

Pieria Society gave an ice cream festival in the dining room of Rich Hall last Friday evening. Everybody seemed to have a good time, and the affair was a great success socially and financially.

The M. E. church Sunday-school gave a supper and ice cream festival on the lawn in front of the church yesterday afternoon. Several tents were raised for the occasion, and the weather being pleasant all enjoyed it very much. Several lady students of the academy acted as waiters.

There are twenty-seven students in the graduating class of the academy this year, fifteen ladies and twelve gentlemen. Five of the gentlemen intend entering Wesleyan University in the fall, and two intend going to Yale. Of the undergraduates two will enter Wesleyan, five Boston, and one Yale.

On the campus last Saturday afternoon, in the presence of many students of both schools, the Wesleyan ball team defeated their old rivals, the Willistons. Many good plays were made on both sides. The Willistons were very successful in stealing bases and in doing good fielding, while the Wesleyan's battery played a fine game and all their men made a brilliant record at batting. The score was 14 to 12. The Wesleyan students were so elated at the result of the game that at the close they formed themselves into platoons, and being led by the gymnasium captains and the school orchestra, paraded the streets with colors flying for almost an hour. To-morrow the Wesleyans play the Amherst "Aggies" on the campus at Wilbraham.

The commencement exercises at the academy this year promise to be superior to any yet given. It is expected that a large number of the alumni will be present, also many visitors. The programme for commencement week is as follows:

Friday, June 15, at 7.45 p. m.—Prize declamations by members of first and second year's classes.

Sunday, June 17, at 10.45 a. m.—Sermon before the graduating class by the principal.

Monday, June 18, at 2-5 p. m.—Examination of classes; at 7.25 p. m.—Junior prize declamation.

Tuesday, June 19, at 8 a. m.—Examination of classes, to be continued through the day; at 2.30 p. m.—Annual meeting of trustees at "Club" Hall; at 7.45 p. m.—Annual address before the Alumni by Rev. Bradford K. Pierce, D. D., of Boston; at 9-10 p. m.—Art reception, studio, Fisk hall, under the direction of Miss Wyman.

Wednesday, June 20, at 10 a. m.—Report of committee of examination, reading of grades, and distribution of prizes; at 2 p. m.—Class day exercises of the senior class; at 7.45 p. m.—Musical concert under the direction of Misses Stebbins and Carr.

Thursday, June 21, at 10 a. m.—Exercises of the graduating class; at 7.45 p. m.—Social interview.

THORNDIKE.

Mrs. Henry Osborne is visiting friends in Providence, R. I.

A party from Springfield picniced at Forest Lake Gardens Wednesday.

Mrs. James Brann of West Warren was in town this week, visiting friends.

Frank Pierce of Springfield, short stop for the Thorndikes in '87, was in town this week.

Martin Kennedy and family, who recently went to Syracuse, N. Y., to live, returned on Tuesday.

The cloth room and the dye house hands will combine and play the Hansons to-morrow afternoon.

The Thorndike nine will probably play at Three Rivers to-morrow, and will play at Spencer the 16th.

M. W. McCoy of Stafford, Ct., and Miss Joanna Burns were married by Rev. F. J. Lynch Wednesday.

James Loftus has opened his ice cream rooms this week. They have been fitted up in fine style and second to none.

Mrs. McLaughlin, who was buried Monday, was an old resident of this place. The funeral was largely attended, many being present from out of town.

A. M. Billings, who has had charge of the corporation's boarding house for the past six years, has resigned and has moved into his residence on Commercial street. He is succeeded by Mrs. McMahon of Ware, who took charge this week.

The Thorndike Co. is making a great improvement in the appearance of the ground about the mills, having set out plants and flowers which add much to the fine appearence of the place. Mr. Sargent is the man who knows how to keep things looking nice.

The Thorndikes and St. Jeromes of Holyoke played a good game of ball on Saturday, the features of the game being the catching of Shultz of the home team and the splendid catch of Sullivan's liner by Crowley of the Holyokes. The game was won by the Holyokes on its merits.

Scarlet fever, which continues in our midst, has created great excitement during the past few days. Six children have died, and several are sick at present. The board of health is doing all it can to prevent its spreading further, although nearly all the people in the village have been exposed. The public schools have been closed.

Thomas Donahue, Joseph Flarity and M. St. John, while returning from the ball game at Palmer last Saturday, were thrown from a carriage near the railroad crossing in this place. While turning the corner the wheels of the vehicle gave away, throwing the occupants to the ground. They fortunately escaped without serious injuries.

The Thorndikes are having hard luck so far this season, having played 5 games and lost 4. The club is a strong one, but in order to have success must come together and practice in order to do any kind of playing. They are very fair in the field, but their weak point is at the bat. The club has played some of the strongest teams in this vicinity without any practice at the bat.

MONSON.

Dr. C. W. Jackson is driving a new horse.

Where is the base ball club that was to be formed?

A. H. Danforth and Lewis Rogers have been drawn as jurors.

John Dinneen is building an addition to his house at South Monson.

Mrs. M. J. Whiting has opened ice-cream parlors in the Barton block.

Subscriptions toward furnishing the new dormitory at the academy are being solicited.

Miss Lizzie Reed of Springfield and Mrs. Edward Longworth were visiting friends in town Thursday.

Samuel Slee will build a dwelling house on the Wilbraham road, opposite John Maguire's residence.

R. F. Bradway's new house is nearing completion, and the masons will finish their work in a few days.

J. N. Graves, the builder, has been making extensive repairs and additions to the house of Mrs. Mary A. Smith.

John Maguire's ox team was stalled in front of the library most of Wednesday afternoon by the breaking of a wheel.

The Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society of the Congregational church met with Mrs. Charles Carpenter Tuesday afternoon.

A number of local sportsmen have attended the Paine-Bennett revolver match on Hampden park, Springfield, this week.

At the regular meeting of the Windsor club Tuesday evening, a number of improvements in the rooms were authorized.

The usual concert given by the Universalist Sunday-school about this time has been postponed on account of the lateness of the season.

Harvey & Stewart, the builders, have finished their job at the town farm and are putting on the finishing touches to Samuel Closson's new house.

The selectmen held their usual monthly meeting, for the payment of bills and to attend to other routine business, at their rooms Monday afternoon.

The steam saw mill that has been in operation on Carpenter's farm, having devoured all of the logs in this vicinity, has been taken to fresh fields.

Workmen are at work on the foundations for the new laboratory and office building that Dr. F. W. Ellis is to erect near his residence at South Monson.

Mrs. Timothy Gallivan is adding to the appearance and convenience of her house near the depot by having a large addition put on by A. H. Danforth, the builder.

Paul Shoemaker, a Frenchman employed in Reynolds' dye house, slipped on a wet board Tuesday, and striking on his side across a piece of timber, broke two ribs. He was attended by Dr. Fuller.

The Flynt Granite Company is busy shipping an order of 250 car loads of stone to the Sacred Heart church of Springfield, and is also getting out 5000 feet of street curbing for the city of Holyoke.

The repairs and improvements which the Congregational parsonage has been undergoing are about completed, and Rev. Mr. Hatch is moving some of his goods, though he will not occupy the place until about the middle of the month.

Misses Cantwell, Keep, Feather and Coleman, composing the ladies' quartette which made a decided hit at Mrs. M. J. Sumner's recital at the academy Wednesday evening, have been invited to sing at a recital in Worcester Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Rev. Ira A. Priest, Charles G. King, G. W. Farrington, Mrs. Harlow Chapin and Mrs. L. A. Abbe attended the meeting of the Union association of Universalist churches, held at the First Universalist church in Worcester, Wednesday, as delegates of the church in this place.

The following scholars have been neither absent nor tardy during the last month in District No. 13: Grace Bartlett, Elsie Bradway, Fannie Bradway, Katie Bradway, Lola Bradway, Rosa Bradway, Minnie Bradway, Minnie Carew, Bertha Harris, Ella Harris, Della Harris, John Carew, Georgie Osgood, Eugenia Leigh.

The operetta of "Gyp Junior," given by the young people of St. Patrick's church last week, is conceded to be one of the best ever presented on the local stage. Miss Marietta P. Lee, who directed the operetta, gave a lawn party Saturday, all who took part in the operetta being invited. It was a pleasant occasion for the young people.

An ox team, owned by W. M. Tucker, was struck by the 1.29 express train at the Tennyville crossing, in Palmer, Monday afternoon, and the wagon demolished. The driver, who was on the wagon, was severely injured about the head and back, and was taken to Palmer, where he was attended by Dr. Holbrook, and is now as comfortable as could be expected at his home.

The second presentation of "Mother Goose and Her Temperance Family," by the young people of the Universalist society, at Central hall, Tuesday evening, was witnessed by a large audience. The sale of fancy articles held by the Young Girls' Society, called the "Busy Bees," was also very successful, and refreshments were served by them in a charming manner. The young folks will clear about $50, which they will devote to the purchase of some articles for the new church.

The following item published in the Sacramento, (Cal.) Bee, of Thursday, May 10, will be read with interest by many in this vicinity, where "Col. Moore" lived for some time, and where he is well known:

> "Col. P. B. Moore and James C. Leslie have been spending the day at the capitol. The colonel is one of the solid men of Pomona, where he has large landed and bank interests. He is one of the many men in the southern country who has reaped a large fortune in the rise in real estate during the past two years. He is now on his way to Oregon and Washington Territory, where he has thousands of dollars invested in gold mines. The Colonel is as whole-souled and jovial a man as we ever met. He is entitled to his military title by meritorious service in the late war, and we are glad to know that he has met with such rare financial success."

Benjamin Fuller, who died at Springfield Wednesday at the age of 92, was born in this town Jan. 1, 1796, his boyhood being spent here. He was educated at Monson academy and graduated in 1811, being the oldest living graduate of the school. When the present academy building was erected Mr. Fuller showed his love for the old school by giving a new bell to replace the old one destroyed in the fire, and which was given by his father many years before. In his younger days Mr. Fuller was successively a school teacher, hotel keeper and merchant, and was also in the Legislature and a justice of the peace. He retired from active life in 1862, and has since made his home in Springfield. He leaves two daughters and a sister, Mrs. C. B. Jones of this place.

Academy Notes.

Principal Dustan spent Sunday with friends in Weston.

Proof sheets of the academy catalogue have been received from the printer.

The academy base ball nine will play the Wide-Awakes of Palmer to-morrow on Flynt's park at 2.30 p. m.

The Flynt and Packard library has received a neatly bound copy of the catalogue of Monson Free Library and Reading Room Association.

The order of exercises for graduation week is as follows: Sunday, June 17, baccalaureate by Rev. P. W. Lyman; Monday, 18, public examinations; in the evening the trustees' annual meeting will be held and a public meeting of the Linophilian society will also be held; Tuesday, 19, at 10.30 a. m., graduating exercises; at 1 p. m., alumni reunion, and at 4 p. m. the class exercises; the senior reception will be held in the evening.

The recital given by Mrs. M. J. Sumner's class in vocal music Wednesday evening merited a much larger audience than was in attendance. The class was assisted by Misses Keefe and Cantwell, accompanists, and Messrs. Williams and Orcutt and Mr. Sumner of Worcester. All the voices showed careful training, and each selection was rendered in a pleasing manner, while the solos "Marguerite," by Miss Feather, and "Down in the Mermaid's Cave," by Miss Coleman, were heartily encored. The singing of the quartette composed of Misses Cantwell, Keep, Feather and Coleman was thoroughly enjoyed, and they were repeatedly encored at each appearance. The proceeds of the entertainment were given to the piano fund of the academy.

Personal.

John Rafferty of Mystic is visiting his sister, Mrs. John Leahy.

Mrs. Charles Copeland of Boston is the guest of Mrs. L. C. Flynt.

Miss Etta Fogg of Houlton, Me., is the guest of Miss Helen Hussey.

Rev. J. H. Emerson has been spending a few days in Boston this week.

Mrs. William Baker and child of Dedham are visiting at Erastus White's.

Mrs. T. P. O'Conner of North Adams is visiting relatives and friends in town.

Miss Esther Holmes has returned from her visit to Brooklyn and Germantown.

Miss Jennie Eastman has gone to her home in East Brimfield for the summer.

Selectman George H. Newton has been seriously ill this week, but is improving.

Rev. Father Nelligan of Hinsdale has been visiting his friends and relatives in this place.

Mrs. George L. Holdridge of Enfield has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Luther Clarke.

William N. Flynt and wife and Mrs. John Foster have gone to Saratoga for a ten day's visit.

E. L. Morris of Amherst college was at home Sunday, accompanied by two of his college friends.

George H. Norcross is out with a new team, which will increase the enjoyment of his much-needed vacation.

Mrs. H. S. Nelson and her daughter, Miss May Nelson, of New York City, will spend part of the summer with Mrs. Jones.

George Knowlton of Flynt's store, after considerable deliberation thinks Maine will be a good place in which to spend a vacation.

Alfred Gaouette of Boston was in town this week. He is engaged in the crayon portrait business, and is doing some really fine work in that line.

Prof. D. M. Dustan and wife went to their summer home in Weston Friday. Mr. Dustan returned early this week, but his wife will not return until fall.

Mr. Grout of Williams college, and a son of Mr. Grout who was principal of the academy some years ago, spent Sunday in town as the guest of Prof. Flint of the academy.

Miss Mattie Carpenter of Flynt's store has gone to Utica, N. Y., for a few days, and her sister, Miss Cozzie Carpenter of Milford, takes her place behind the counter during her absence.

A. L. Squier, who has been visiting friends in Springfield, umpired the ball game between the Fire and Marine insurance nine and the Mass. Mutual nine at Springfield, last Saturday.

WARE AND VICINITY.

P. H. Prendiville has opened a market on Water street.

The Otis Company is extending its tram railroad around its freight storehouse.

It is expected that the hearing of the Otis Company's tax case will be resumed to-morrow morning.

P. J. Mulvany has his ice cream parlor nearly ready for guests. It is lighted by electricity, and is a neat, cosy place.

The fish market property of David O'Rourke was sold at auction in front of the Unitarian church Monday afternoon and evening.

The French Protestant church will be dedicated Sunday, June 17th. Special meetings will be held each evening the week following.

The house of F. Bombard has been moved a short distance west of where it stood, to make room for the street that connects Pleasant and West Main street.

Rev. B. V. Stevenson will preach at the Methodist church next Sunday in the absence of Rev. Mr. Hitchcock, who is on a visit to his mother, who is seriously ill in Canada.

Mr. Ross, who married a daughter of David Sanford, whose residence is at Newtonville, has purchased the Samuel Rogers place near Ware Center, and will rebuild the house for a summer residence.

It is reported that the price of the new electric street lights are to be $75 each, per annum. This, with the reduction on the first fourteen lights, will cost the town a little over $2500 for the 32 lights that will be running soon.

The hero of Port Hudson, Dennis Towne, has already began to talk of celebrating the glorious Fourth. He is to be on hand with his field piece that was used last year, and intends to give a salute of one hundred guns.

There is to be a parish meeting of the East Congregational church next Tuesday evening, when it is expected a building committee will be appointed to take charge of the repairs of the church, as nearly the whole amount needed has been subscribed.

C. W. Eddy will next week publish a fine illustrated work of Forest Lake Gardens. It will contain eight full-page illustrations, and descriptive letter press bound in antique covers, and will make a charming souvenir of these popular picnic grounds.

The Sterling Camp Meeting Society of the Methodist church has organized with the following officers: Mrs. H. Ramsdell, president; Mrs. Jasper Fairbank, vice president; Miss Della Sibley, secretary; Mrs. M. Olds, treasurer; and an executive committee. The society owns a cottage at Sterling.

Eaton's Grove has been engaged for a Fourth of July picnic by Rev. James Boyle of St. William's church. Henry M. Clark, Edward Nolan, John T. Dowd, T. J. McBride and Patrick Gargan have been appointed to have charge of the arrangements. The building fund will receive the proceeds.

The chimney of the house of Charles R. Shaw, about two miles out of the village, was burned out Tuesday morning and the roof caught fire, but ladders and help were near, so no great damage was done. There are thirteen buildings in the immediate vicinity of the house which would all have been destroyed if the fire had not been discovered in time.

An entertainment that will be worthy of the patronage of the public is to be given at the Town Hall next Tuesday evening, when Mr. Alfred Young will give dramatic recitals which are to be interspersed with music and singing by local talent. The New York Tribune says of him: "The finest entertainment of the season, probably, was that of last evening. Mr. Alfred Young, the well-known elocutionist, gave a fine programe of dramatic recitals, both grave and gay, to the delight of a crowded audience." The entertainment is given under the auspices of St. William's church.

The annual meeting of the Ware savings bank was held in the bank parlors Monday afternoon, when the treasurer, F. D. Gilmore, made the annual report for the year ending June 4, as follows: Liabilities: Due depositors, $2,653,955; undivided earnings fund, $49,945; guaranty fund, $50,324; premium fund, $20,329. Assets: Bank stock, $377,880; public funds, $492,500; railroad bonds at par, $392,000. notes of towns, $134,500; notes with mortgage security $775,724; notes on personal security and collateral, $575,434; loans on depositors' books, $1825; loans on bank stock, $300; deposits in banks on interest, $15,712; real estate for banking purposes, $6400; expenses paid, 1714; cash in drawer, $564; total, $2,774,555. William Hyde, who has been president of the bank since its incorporation in 1850, and also was one of the first incorporators of the institution, resigned his position as president, much to the regret of the members of the corporation, and suitable resolutions of regret at his retirement were proposed and adopted. Besides William Hyde, Charles A. Stevens is the only other surviving member of the first board of incorporators living to-day. These officers were elected for ensuing year: Trustees, Charles A. Stevens, president; Nathan Richardson of Warren, Lewis N. Gilbert and D. P. Billings, vice presidents; Calvin Hitchcock, William Hyde, Charles D. Gilbert, William S. Hyde, Edwin H. Baker, J. H. Grenville Gilbert, with Fred D. Gilmore, clerk. Committee of investment, William Hyde, Calvin Hitchcock, D. P. Billings, Nathan Richardson and W. S. Hyde; auditors, E. H. Baker, Charles D. Gilbert and W. S Hyde.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, June 6, 1888.

This afternoon the nominations of the St. Louis convention have been displayed on the bulletins. There has been no crowd and no excitement, for the dispatches have discounted the outcome of the convention. On the part of the Democrats there is satisfaction with both ends of the ticket. Cleveland's re-nomination was expected, and has for a long time been acquiesced in by the party leaders. Though some of them have not been friendly critics of his administration, yet they have seen the inevitable, and have prepared themselves in advance to meet it. Besides, they have seen, or have thought they have seen, success with Cleveland as their nominee, and if they have not obtained quite as many offices as they wished, yet they have reminded each other that they have a good many more than they would have with a Republican president, and so they have supported Cleveland of late cordially.

As to Thurman's nomination, it will strengthen the party because it will hold to the ticket some who do not like Cleveland. He stands for the old-fashioned Democracy, and it is said here to-day that "the boys" will all stand by the ticket now, and that their chances of success are better than ever. On the part of the Republicans the criticism is made that the nomination of Thurman improves the Republican chances of carrying Indiana. It is not believed possible for the Democrats to carry Ohio in a presidential year in any event, not even if Thurman does live there. So nothing has been gained in that quarter by taking him. On the other hand, Indiana, a doubtful state, presented Gov. Gray, who was not taken, while the Republicans have two Indiana men among their possibilities, Harrison and Gresham, and it is believed that one of these favorite sons might carry the state for the Republicans.

There is absolutely no preference of Massachusetts as a whole for the Republican nomination. Upon no one candidate has the Republican judgment settled. A candidate acceptable to one is decidedly objectionable to another. I hear considerable favor for Gresham, but very little of it is in the delegation to Chicago. He is looked upon as a man who has antagonized the Blaine interest, and it is even said, as a sufficient reason for rejecting him, that the New York Evening Post and other Mugwump papers are in his favor. Some favor Depew and others say that not only the West, but even New England, would be against a railroad man. Just now there is a decided push for Alger, with mention of John D. Long for second place. A few there are who still stick to it that Blaine will be the man, and some couple Alger with him as the dispenser of funds for the campaign.

It is not all quiet on the Potomac of our gubernatorial campaign. The Noyes men are at work. Confidential letters have been sent out to men who have been supposed to be safe, asking what was the feeling in their respective localities. Some of these missives have produced no good result. One recipient, certainly, has returned word that he was not with Noyes in such a campaign. But the speaker is said to be likely to have a majority of delegates in Essex, and he certainly has his workers in other parts of the state.

But of more consequence than the Noyes push, is the stir in behalf of Gen. Draper. Promises are made that within a short time the public will be astonished by the strength of the support for Draper. I know that men are in the Draper movement who are good workers, careful in their methods, and untiring in the pursuit of their aim, but they have a tremendous obstacle in their way in the shape of Gov. Ames. The governor has the office and wants it another term. He has many friends all over the state who are not disposed to favor either Draper or Noyes. So far as a canvass has been made in his interest, it is very satisfactory in its showing, and proves that many of the leading Republicans all over the state prefer him to either of his competitors. If Ames is nominated another term, Lieut. Gov. Brackett will doubtless be given the second place again. This is what makes the Haile men in favor of a change at the top, so that their man may be given a chance. Report has it that the difficulty at home has been made right, and that Mr. Haile has now the support of such men as Henry S. Hyde and Lewis J. Powers. So he presents a stronger front for the second place than he has before.

Not all of the daily papers have had correct reports of the ordination of Mr. Torrey over the Harwood Congregational church in Dorchester, Monday. The old issue of future probation was revived, but it was avoided so that neither side of the controversy can be said to have gained any advantage. The first resoultion which was adopted states expressly that the ordination of Mr. Torrey is approved by the council without reference to his fitness for work in the mission fields. At the private session of the council that clause was opposed with all their strength by Prof. Egbert C. Smyth of Andover and Rev. Dr. Merriam of Somerville, who have been opposed to the prudential committee of the American board, but they were voted down. This is the most significant part of the proceedings, but it has not been published in any of the reports. Mr. Torrey has secured his ordination, but the disputed point was waived. Doubtless a majority of the council favored Torrey's position, for some particular friends of his were invited.

It is much to be feared that Rev. James Freeman Clarke will never recover from his present illness. His physician gives no encouragement that he will ever be better, though he may live for some weeks longer. He has built up the Church of the Disciples by the strength of his personality, and there is no doubt that the church will suffer badly in its membership unless a new attraction is found equal to the old. The building in which the church has worshipped is very plain compared with modern edifices, and Mr. Clarke has lived four miles away in Jamaica Plain. The congregation is widely scattered, as all city congregations are, and the magnet which holds them is necessarily strong, or they fly off to a man who has a higher drawing power.

One of the attractions of the week has been the celebration of the 250th anniversary of the founding of the Ancient and Honorable artillery company. Flags, streamers and pictures have adorned some of the buildings, and 15 members of the Honorable artillery company of London, besides the Old Guard of New York, have been here to take part in the celebration. John Milton's is one of the portraits displayed, as he looked in the uniform of an artilleryman in 1635.

I thank God that you ever invented such a medicine for catarrh. I have suffered for five years so I could not lie down for weeks at a time. Since I have been using Ely's Cream Balm I can rest.—Frank P. Burleigh, Farmington, N. H.

We have found no remedy for malaria so reliable and safe as Ayer's Ague Cure. Taken according to directions it never fails.

Goodyear's Rubber store, 391 Main-st., Springfield, Mass., offer lawn and garden hose at very low prices. They sell 50 feet of Standard Hose for $5.00, warranted. This is a great bargain. They have Hose Reels and Garden Sprinklers on hand in large variety. When in the city visit this store, where you will find everything in the line of Rubber Goods. (2w10)

With such an immense stock of shoes as that of Broadhurst Bros., (Morse's) Main-st., Springfield, it's no surprise to see a rush and crowds of customers all the time. They have just put on sale 1000 pairs of Misses' Kid Oxford Ties, at 95 cents a pair, sold everywhere for $1.50.

A DOLLAR FOR FIVE CENTS.

A Complete Novel by Sylvanus Cobb, Jr., for Every Reader of the Next Sunday Globe.

Enterprise continues to be the rule with the Boston GLOBE establishment. Next Sunday's issue (June 10) will have a complete novel by the celebrated and always popular Sylvanus Cobb, Jr. This will be in addition to all the news and all the admirable features of the Sunday GLOBE. The story will be entitled "Dagon, the Mysterious; or, The Hunter Spy of Virginia."

INTERESTED PEOPLE.

Advertising a patent medicine in the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam for coughs and colds does, is indeed wonderful. He authorizes all druggists to give those who call for it, a sample bottle free, that they may try it before purchasing. The large bottles are 50c. and $1. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption.

NEWS ABOUT TOWN.

It is the current report about town that Kemp's Balsam for throat and lungs is making some remarkable cures with people who are troubled with coughs, sore throat, asthma, bronchitis and consumption. Any druggist will give you a trial bottle free of cost. It is guaranteed to relieve and cure. The large bottles are 50c. and $1. (4w8)

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle. 1y8eow

WORTH KNOWING.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, merchant, Lake City. Fla., was taken with a severe Cold, attended with a distressing Cough and running into Consumption in its first stages. He tried many so-called popular cough remedies and steadily grew worse. Was reduced in flesh, had difficulty in breathing and was unable to sleep. Finally tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and found immediate relief, and after using about half a dozen bottles found himself well and has had no return of the disease. No other remedy can show so grand a record of cures, as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption Guaranteed to do just what is claimed for it.—Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 4

RENEWS HER YOUTH.

Mrs. Phœbe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." ### GILA RIVER IRRIGATION COMPANY.

SEVEN PER CENT THIRTY-YEAR WATER BONDS.

Principal and interest payable in gold. Interest payable semi-annually, May and November at the Central Trust Company, New York.

BATES BROTHERS, Bankers and Brokers,
11 Wall-st., New York. 4w10

THE SELECTMEN will receive sealed proposals for the construction of an extension to the Central-st. sewer. Beginning at the end of the main sewer at Park-st., and running up Central-st., as far as the appropriation of $300 will admit.

The ditch at Park-st. is to be 7 feet 3 inches in depth and running at a true grade to 5 feet in depth at its easterly terminus, and of sufficient width for the laying of a 12-inch pipe.

The pipe must be first-quality salt-glazed socket 12 inches in diameter, thoroughly cemented at all joints, and properly connected with the old sewer at Park-st. There will be two man holes near the easterly terminus of sewer, one on either side of the road. They shall be constructed of brick laid in cement 18 inches in diameter and trapped. The grates covering the same shall be of cast iron and of suitable weight.

The branch pipes leading from man holes to main sewer shall be 10 inches in diameter and be laid at a grade of ½ inch to the foot.

Proposals will be received for excavating and filling the ditch and also for the pipe and man holes, either separately or together, as you may wish. The entire job must be done in a thorough, workmanlike manner and to the satisfaction of the selectmen, and must be completed on or before the tenth day of July next.

The contractor shall take all proper precaution for the safety and convenience of the traveling public, and shall maintain lights when necessary for their protection.

Proposals must be sent in on or before the 13th day of June current. 1w10

The Great Secret

Of exceptionally long and abundant hair may never be solved; but that Ayer's Hair Vigor preserves the hair in all its beauty and luxuriance, and even restores it, when thin and gray, is

WELL KNOWN.

P. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., writes: "My father, at the age of fifty, lost all the hair on the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor, the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."

J. T. Gibson, 96 Hope-st., Huntley, Staffordshire, Eng., writes "I have seen young men in South Australia quite gray, whose hair has been restored to its natural color after using but one bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor."

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles $5.

PURIFY YOUR BLOOD.

Impurities in the blood produce diseases. Bodily and mental health depend upon a healthy condition of the blood. The blood, particularly in the spring and during the hot summer months, becomes clogged with impurities, which poison it and generate disease. A harmless blood purifier, without a particle of mineral poison in it, such as mercury or potash, is necessary to remove these impurities and to restore the healthy tone of mind and body. The best purifier and tonic known to the world is Swift's Specific (S. S. S.). In regard to its wonderful purifying and tonic powers we give a few testimonials as follows:

Mr. Wm. A. Siebold, with Geo. P. Rowell & Co., 10 Spruce street, New York, writes March 29, 1888: "I feel it my duty, for the benefit of others who may be afflicted as I was, to write you this letter, which you can use as my testimony in any way you choose. I will answer any inquiry from others in relation to the facts herewith stated. In February last I suffered great pain and inconvenience from boils all over my neck; I could not turn my head without acute pain, and my blood was in poor condition. After trying all the usual remedies in such cases, and finding no relief, by the persuasion of Mr. J. W. Fears, manager of the New York office, I usedone bottle of S. S. S., and improved rapidly, and very soon I was entirely relieved of my 'Job's Comforters.' Now not a sign of my affliction can be seen. I feel strong and cheerful. S. S. S. is a fine tonic as proved in my case. I sleep soundly and my appetite is good."

"Dr. J. N. Cheney, a well-known physician, writes from Ellaville, Ga.: "I use S. S. S. in convalescent fever cases with the best results. It will, in my judgment, prevent summer dysentery, if one will take a few bottles in the spring, thus preparing the bowels for the strains of summer."

Mrs. Scott Liston, 116 Zane street (Island), Wheeling, West Virginia, writes: "Having used S. S. S. for the blood, I can safely say that it beats anything I have used to cleanse the blood and make a new being out of a person."

Mr. M. S. Hamlin, Winston, N. C., writes: "I use it every spring. It always builds me up, giving me appetite and digestion, and enabling me to stand the long, trying, enervating, hot summer days. On using it I soon become strong of body and easy of mind."

The Exodus.

When through the meadows green I stray,
And seek to go from here to thence,
What woe to find athwart my way,
The barbed wire fence.

If I attempt its staff to scale,
Picking my way with careful pegs,
On points most vicious I impale
My several legs.

If to crawl through it I essay,
Then I am doomed to double woe;
The barbs project in either way—
Come, stop, or go.

And if I make a desperate break
And worry through, my back is sore
With stabs and gouges raw, that ache
A week or more.

And when I turn upon my track,
And, home returning, put about,
It's just as hard work coming back
As going out.

MORAL.

Thus "(swear word) custom" hath so brav'd our ways—
(But Pegasus hath jumped the metre and
Changed his ambling gait and the moral,
Is obvious anyhow).

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

Here lies a young and simple fool
Who Nature's laws defied—
He volunteered to shoe the mule,
And that's just how he died.

Six species of North American birds have become extinct in the last ten years. They weren't as fly as the sparrow.—Philadelphia Call.

A small boy was discovered playing ball one day, and on being asked what he was doing, replied: "I'm playin' ball with Dod. I frow the ball up and Dod frows it back."—Life.

Girls used to be so timid that they would screech at the sound of a pistol shot, but nowadays when they go buggy riding they usually go armed.—Chicago Merchant Traveler.

Fisherman (at the dock to dude)—"Go 'way!" Dude—"Eh?—what's that?" Fisherman—"Go 'way. Your trousers are so loud they frighten the fish."—Burlington Free Press.

Young lady to artist—"What do you consider the best thing you ever drew Mr. Palette?" Artist, absently—"Oh an ace to two aces and a couple of jacks."—Yonkers Statesman.

"And now, my dear brethren, what shall I say more?" thundered the long-winded minister. "Amen," came in sepulchral tones from the absent-minded clerk in the back of the church.—Tid Bits.

A lady, writing on kissing, says that a kiss on the forehead denotes reverence for intellect. She doesn't say so, but a kiss on the back of the neck is a proof that the young woman didn't hold still.—Norristown Herald.

Persistent Talker—"When we know what great enjoyment we give our fellowmen by our conversation, we don't mind the trouble. You ought just to see the delighted faces of my audiences when I stop talkin'!"—Fliegende Blaetter.

"Dear me," said the little Boston boy, after intellectual suasion had failed, and they had spanked him for the first time, "if I had had the slightest suspicion that the resultant sensation was so poignant I should never have invited the experiment."—Puck.

Fitting for the colleges of the future. Professor (to class in athletics)—"Now, who can tell me who made the highest standing jump on record?" Youth (with the eagerness that accompanies red hair)—"The cow that jumped over the moon!"—Lowell Citizen.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams returned to Chicago last night after a three month's absence in Europe. "I suppose," said the News reporter, "that you found a great many objects de vertu in Paris?" "No," said Mr. Adams; "on the contrary, it was the most immoral city I visited."—Chicago News.

Lawyer—"Excuse me, sir, but if you allow your will to remain this way, it will surely be contested by your wife, after you are gone." Rich Old Gent—"Well, she's contested my will ever since she married me forty years ago, and it will be no new experience for her—let 'er go as it is."—Boston Record.

Landlady (swell boarding house)—"Have you any children, madam?" Applicant (meekly)—"Only one, a little boy, and he is sickly." Landlady (dubiously) "I hardly know what to say, madam. Some of these sickly children often linger a long time, you know, and I don't like to take any chances."—New York Sun.

Dame—"You are entirely mistaken as to the object of the anti-kissing society. It is not intended to discourage courtship. No, indeed. The object is to break up the practice of allowing ministers to kiss brides." Male Caller—"Oh, that's it. Are the members of the society engaged young ladies who expect shortly to be married?" "Well, no; the members are mostly minister's wives."—Omaha World.

They were at the front gate in the moonlight, and he had asked her to be his wife. With outstretched arms and a throbbing heart he awaited her answer. "George," she said, in a nervous whisper, "you must give me time—you must give me time." "How long," he coarsely asked," "a day, a week, a month, a year." "No—no, George," and she quickly scanned the sky, "only until the moon gets behind a cloud."—The Epoch.

A Philadelphia minister tells a good story of the first marriage ceremony he preformed. "I forgot to make out the marriage certificate, and a year or so afterward I found the woman who had become the wife on that occasion waiting for me at my home in company with a man. 'How do you do, Mrs. Blank?' I said. 'I am not Mrs. Blank any longer,' she said, 'but Mrs. So and So, and this is my husband.' 'Ah! And to what am I indebted for the pleasure of this visit?' 'I have come for the certificate of my first marriage.' I was a little taken aback. 'What on earth do you want with the certificate of your first marriage, you are married again?' 'You see,' she said, 'I have the certificate of my second marriage, and I want the other so that I can frame them together.'"

A DISCOURAGED MAN.

"It's the last time I am going to try! luck is against me, and I'll just give up! There is no use trying to do anything when the odds are against you."

It was John Harris who was doing the talking. His wife was sewing buttons on the children's clothes after they had gone to bed. As she held the buttons in her mouth to prevent them rolling off, she had no opportunity to answer her husband, even if she had an inclination.

Mr. Harris resumed.

"I'm clean discouraged, that's what I am! Of course, I don't think of myself!"—Mrs. Harris' lip curled a little, and one button escaped and rolled under the table—"It's you and the children I'm worrying about"—another button rolled away—"and if it wasn't for leaving you alone, Mary, I'd—

He did not finish what he was saying, as just then Mrs. Harris coughed and all the buttons flew out of her mouth.

"Is it such a bad failure?" she asked presently. She was darning the children's stockings now, having sewed on all the fugitive buttons.

"It couldn't be worse. When a man's partner takes all the money out of the business and skips to a foreign country, everybody hounds him to death as if he had been dishonest. All the creditors are clamoring for their money, not because they need it, but because I havn't got it. It's no use, Mary; I'm a ruined man, and I'm going to find a way out of it all."

"How?" asked Mrs. Harris calmly, although the long, slender needle she was using trembled and vibrated in her hand.

"There are more ways than one," he answered significantly. "I shall not live to see you want, or to be a burden on you and the children. There is no dishonor attached to my name now. We have lived within our means and tried honestly to succeed. It was rash, I suppose, to embark all in one venture and lose it!"

"You have not lost all," suggested his wife; "you have health, wife and children, and an unblemished character."

"Poor capital, these," retorted her husband gloomily, "No, I'm going to give up! I tell you, Mary, I'm a discouraged man! You don't know what it is to endure business worries; women are sheltered and protected from all those annoyances."

"Are they?" answered Mrs. Harris with dry lips. She had done the work of three women that day. She had been cook and nurse, and now she was seamstress. She had cut and contrived, counted pennies and was engaged to give music lessons to the doctor's daughter to offset their last year's bill. Her whole frame quivered with the pain of jarred and tangled nerves. But it never entered into her mind that she dared to complain. "Doe the Next Thynge," was the motto she had framed and hung up where she could see it many times a day.

"As I say," continued her husband, after a spell of gloomy thought, "there's a way out of it, and many a man has been driven to it. I won't live and be persecuted by a mob of circumstances. If I were out of the way, you and the children would have enough to live on comfortably the rest of your lives. It's only anticipating our final fate by a few months or years."

Mrs. Harris folded the last pair of stockings and laid them neatly away. A little smile hovered about her lips.

"John," she said in a firm voice, "I have a last favor to ask of you."

"What is it, Mary?"

"Don't die in the house!"

Before the astonished man could speak, she continued:

"Because it would be so unpleasant for the children and me. It is our home. I have the deed of it in my possession, sent to me by my father yesterday. And I should hate to have any unpleasant associations connected with it. I should very much dislike to have you buried at the four corners near here with a stake driven through you, though people would soon forget that we ever belonged to you. For I would not own being the widow of a coward or let my children bear his name. And even if you were not held responsible, I would be ashamed to think you had written your own epitaph: "Here lies a discouraged man."

John Harris was dumb with surprise.

"I know," continued his wife, "that it is a favorite thing for men to say that they will get out of it all and that the women do not realize how desperate the situation is, and a lot more rubbish that they ought to be ashamed of."

John tried to speak, but his wife had the floor.

"It is only a coward who would take refuge in death and leave his wife and children to fight the battle of life alone. And right here, John, I want that subject to end forever. It is hard enough to live with a man who is chronically discouraged, but when he hints at getting out of it, I object."

John Harris never again made any vague and improbable threats, but took the dilemma of business by both horns and practically mastered it. Nor has his wife ever heard him declare since that he was a "discouraged man."—Detroit Free Press.

AN EXPRESSIVE COMPLIMENT.—"I am looking for a man by the name of Yed Smith. Do you know anything about him, sir?"

"Is he a friend of yourn?" was a quick query.

"I hope he is," replied Mr. Mills.

The old man looked the Chicago lawyer in the face just a moment, and answered:

"Well, stranger, I know him. And he'll stand without hitchin'."

That was a tribute from the heart. Education would have spoiled the thought."—Chicago Mail.

"Dr. Hammond says that death is not a necessity?" "Does he? Well, I have just finished settling up Hawkins' estate, you know, and judging from the undertaker's bill I paid, I'm prepared to agree with him. It's a luxury."—Tid Bits.

When Prohibition became a law in Iowa, there were in the state, outside of the river counties, 3000 saloons; in the same territory to-day there are but 24 saloons.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; but is often lost owing to the poverty and impurity of the blood and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion and giving strength to the whole system.

"I had been troubled with pimples on my lower limbs, loss of sleep and appetite, and in fact was generally run down. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla the pimples disappeared, my appetite was renewed, and I feel better in every respect." P. DEVLIN, S. E. corner 10th and Buttonwood Sts., Philadelphia.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon I felt as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

My Brother.

Who was it picked up all the chips,
And strewed the floor with string and whips,
And in the wash-tub sailed the ships?
My brother.

Who was it ate the current jell,
And threw the kitten in the well,
And made me promise not to tell?
My brother.

Who was it taught me how to skate,
Then left me on the ice to wait,
While he went home with cousin Kate?
My brother.

Who was it when he older grew,
To tops and marbles bid adieu,
And tried, but could not learn to chew?
My brother.

Who does a tiny mustache wear,
And oils and colors it with care,
And in the middle parts his hair?
My brother.

Who is it tumbles up my curls,
And buys me bracelets, rings and pearls,
And flirts with all the pretty girls?
My brother.

Who talks to me about his clothes,
And all my little secrets knows,
And teases me about my beaux?
My brother.

Who is it that I love the best,
Of all the boys in east or west,
Although he is a perfect pest?
My brother.

MY SISTER.

Who was it climbed the tallest trees,
And raised a most delightful breeze
By stealing off the school-house keys?
My sister.

Who was it stole the lemon pie,
Hid on the pantry shelf so high,
And gave me half upon the sly?
My sister.

Who was it in the mill pond fell,
And threw her thimble in the well,
And cried for fear that I would tell?
My sister.

Who sews the buttons on my clothes,
And with me to the opera goes,
And then neglects me for her beaux?
My sister.

Who coaxed me once to go to bed,
Because she had an aching head,
And then sit up with cousin Fred?
My sister.

Who was it cried the other day,
Because Fitzgerald would not stay,
But went off home with Jenny May?
My sister.

And who with all her crimps and curls,
And airs and graces, rings and pearls,
Is just the very best of girls?
My sister.

MY FAIR UNKNOWN.

The quaint, old-fashioned little town of Deal is one of the quaintest places on the Kentish coast. True, it possesses a tiny stone jetty, at the extremity of which a beacon flashes through the night, but no gay promenaders pace its asphalted parade, no Cockney children disport themselves upon its beach, and the burnt-cork minstrel is there a genius almost unknown.

Here I found myself three summers ago whilst on a sketching tour. I had "done', the town, washed in the sea in every mood, smeared, sketched, daubed and spattered, until there was not a stick or stone in the place that had not found its way into my sketch book.

On the last day of my stay I sauntered down to the beach with the lazy gait of a man who has done his duty, my camp stool under my arm, my box of tools in my hand—not that I set out with any distinct purpose of using the same, for I had exhausted the sea and my own capacity, but simply for the sake of my own companionship. I confess I was growing a trifle lonesome. Nature sometimes bored me.

As I strolled along, reflecting with satisfaction that I would leave the field with a clear conscience and empty paint-tubes, a rock laying in a peculiar position struck my fancy, and I stopped to sketch it.

I unfolded my little camp-stool and set it down on the hard, level sand. The tide was low, but the stool stood unevenly, and, glancing down to ascertain the cause, I saw that one leg tilted into a footprint, and, looking ahead I noticed that the footprints went on and on, zigzag along the beach, disappearing in the distance—narrow, dainty footprints—a woman's.

Feelings akin to those experienced by Robinson Crusoe rushed over me as I gazed. Remember that I had been for several weeks in this out-of-the-way place without another human soul with whom to commune except my landlady, and our communings were mostly of a sordid nature, and here were delicate prints of a personality that might lead to the most delightful consquences.

I could sketch no more. Gathering up my baggage, I prepared to follow the trail.

I am somewhat of a philosophic turn of mind, and as I walked along I lapsed into a train of thought worthy the great Darwin himself.

In the first place, I measured with my eye the length of the slender footprints, and calculating by the proper proportions that the foot should be as long as the distance from the wrist to the elbow, the maker of them must be I concluded, about five feet five—a good height for a woman.

That it was a woman I knew by the fringe-like marks where here and there the long dress made its delicate trail. Then she must be slender for such a narrow foot to support her weight; besides, the footmarks were lightly pressed into the sand. They were rather far apart. She took long steps for a woman, and nothing gives more grace to a walk, to my mind. I detest these tottering, tripping women!

With the astuteness of a detective I noticed that the distance between each two of the points was of equal length; that indicated alertness and the poise of elastic strength, for a dreamy woman would have walked all over the beach, and a weak woman would have taken uneven steps.

All along beside the footprints were other marks, after close inspection, I knew to be punctured by the end of a parasol. Another good feature, for it showed that the unknown female who I was tracking was not over-careful of her complexion, and argued a commendable absence of vanity, and corresponding presence of good sense. But, alas! the imprint of the heel was exceedingly small, and more sharply cut into the sand than the toe, making the unmistakable impression of the French heel. So my fair unknown was a damsel of civilization—a slave to fashion possibly.

As I pursued the trail around the point at Walmer Castle it turned into the white glistening beach above high-water mark, and there I discovered impressions in the soft sand as clear as if chiselled in stone, the square mould of a book, small—a novel; there were the lines of a garment, and the long, straight line where the umbrella or parasol had lain, each neat fold of silk reproduced perfectly, and the marks at the handle where fingers had clutched it—long, fine marks—a delicate hand. From this I knew she had stooped to put down her book and parasol—she did not throw them down, therefore she must be gentle—and then she must have stood there and gazed out at the sea for a long time.

How did I know this? From the two footprints side by side, pointing seaward, and sunk deep in the sand. She must be thoughtful, a little sad, which always follows; and here she had left a bunch of wild flowers, which she must have plucked in the fields on her way. To wander in fields, to pick flowers as you go, are these not evidences of refinement and a beauty-loving nature?

I could not help breathing a hope that she was neither old nor plain. I took up the simple boquet; it was limp, but showed every indication of being recently plucked. She could not be far away.

In my enthusiasm I darted forward, and started back as if I had been shot. There, written on the sand in clear, bold letters, was a name—"Constance."

So now, on circumstantial evidence, I had before me the picture of a being that I had never seen, and whose existence I had not known until this day. I could almost imagine that "Constance" walked before me, pressing footsteps in the sand, a tall, slender girl, with a graceful walk, stylishly dressed, and swinging a dainty parasol; but, alas! with her back always turned to me.

Was my fair unknown pretty? That she was strong, sensible, thoughtful and refined I had guessed; but the paramount question still remained unanswered—was she pretty?

I had walked for some distance under the cliffs towards Dover, when, lo! a flash of color caught my eye. Could it be a bird of brilliant plumage, or a child dressed in red, or a young lady with a crimson hat? It was the latter.

She reclined upon the beach, her head resting upon a little bank of sand, and, as I neared her, I noticed a parasol and novel. Constance!

I hesitated as to what I should do. Should I pass her, and thus turn my back upon those artistic little footprints forever? No, I could not do that.

I slackened my pace, and politely refrained from gazing too rudely until I almost reached her, when I turned to have a full look at her face.

Judge my disappointment, however, when I found that the pretty crimson sailor-hat, with its poppies and plush, was tilted over the face, obscuring it completely. I stopped short and gazed at her, and I was seized with an intent desire to snatch off the hat and unmask the face at whatever cost. But I could not nerve myself to do it.

My unknown appeared fast asleep. What if she should be wide awake, staring from under the bewitching little hat? There was something awful in this thought, and though I am not a coward, I confess I quailed before the mere idea of two staring, glaring eyes in ambush under the hat.

After contemplating such a desperate onslaught it seemed quite tame and civil, quite delicate and unobtrusive, when I quietly unfurled my camp-stool, and sat down and sketched her as she lay, washing her in grays and crimson.

Scarcely had I finished, when a sudden panic seized me. What if she should awake and come out from under the hat like a hideous vision? I shuddered at the thought, and bundling my paints into the box, caught up my stool and hurried away, retracing my footsteps and hers, reflecting ruefully that though I had seen her in the flesh, I knew no more than I did before.

The problem as to her age and her beauty, alas! was still unsolved.

Twelve months later I had painted two pictures, which I intented to send in to the Academy. One of them I had designated "Day Dreams." It was, as you will have guessed, an exact reproduction of the fair one whose footsteps I had traced along the sands at Deal. The central figure was that of a fashionably-dressed young lady reclining at full length upon the golden sand, her hat pulled down over her face to shade it from the sun. She was asleep, indulging in day-dreams, while the pale green waves sighed softly upon the shingle, and the white sails of a yacht relieved the broad expanse of blue.

My friends generally said that the picture was fantastical, but they all prophesied it would be a success; and some art critics, whose acquaintance I had made, thought well of it. My friend and college chum, Jack Barrett, though an artist himself was ecstatical over it. What sport he and I had in our studio about it! We always spoke of it as "Dreamy Constance," and we made a hundred guesses at what sort of facial expression was under the sailor hat.

The first of May had come and gone. My pictures had been accepted, and what is more important, "Day Dreams" was hung on the line.

Walking leisurely about among the throngs of people, his hands clasped behind his back, and trying to look like one of the crowd of commonplace young men who had not a picture accepted, was myself.

For the greater part of the first week I could not help hanging about my pictures and listening to what the public said about them.

One day as I was standing in the vestibule, just on the point of leaving, a carriage drove up, and from it alighted a young lady, accompanied by a gentleman perhaps ten years her senior.

As they were passing I caught the words "Day Dreams," and turned to see what they would say about it.

The face of the gentleman struck me as having a resemblance to some one I had seen before, and the lady was very beautiful—just the sort of creature whose grace and beauty would drive men distracted.

In the crowd at the entrance I lost them, but making my way to where my picture hung I found them before it. The man was evidently no lover of art, for he was staring about the room in an absent-minded manner; but the lady was bending forward intently, with her eyes fixed upon my canvas in a manner that caused me to feel delighted.

I was just noting down certain points in her girlish figure, for of course her back was turned to me and I could not see her face, noting casually that she was tall, slender and graceful, with a certain piquant dash about her stylish dress, when a man whom I took to be a clerk stepped quickly up and whispered something into the ear of her companion.

"Oh, yes; I'll be there immediately," he responded, and turning to the lady said: "Constance, I must run away on a matter of business. Don't move from this place until I return, so that I shall know where to find you."

He was walking quickly past me when I touched him on the shoulder.

"Why, Musgrave, old fellow, can it be you?" I cried, for I remembered in a moment where I had seen his face before. We had studied together in Paris. "Can I do anything for you, or"——I glanced toward the still averted figure.

"Good heavens, Ray, who'd have thought of meeting you?" said he, hurriedly.

"Thanks, yes; I'm called away on an important matter, introduce yourself. I'll be back in a few minutes. Want to run to the telegraph office."

The next instant he was lost in the crowd.

By her motionless attitude and fixed glance I saw at once that the lady had not heard a word of our conversation, and was quite unconscious of her escort's departure. I stepped up to her side, but before I could speak she was saying in a half whisper: "I never heard of anything so strange in my life. The beach down at Deal, don't you see? I know it's the beach, though it's horribly painted, —and oh, dear! it really cannot be, but"—she craned her neck and took a closer view. "Yes, I am positive of it! I ought to know my own clothes, my own Indian bracelet, the crimson hat—don't you remember it? and the fawn dress. And that book—one of Miss Braddon's—and parasol. I wish the hat were not so far down over the face, though. I should like to know whether it is intended for me or"——

"Pardon me, madam," I said.

She turned upon me swiftly, and I expected to be snubbed, but I was not.

"Pardon me, but Mr. Musgrave has been called away for a few moments on business, and has left you in my charge. I am an old friend of his—a schoolfellow in fact."

She smiled and replied: "Then I suppose I must stay here until he returns, or I shall never find him in the crowd." Giving me a searching glance she added: "Do you mind wating?"

Mind waiting! I would not have minded waiting an eternity with her, but I didn't tell her so.

I smiled, said something civil, and asked her opinion about the picture before us.

"Well, to tell you the truth," said she, blushing, "I really thought I recognized myself in it."

"Indeed!" I glanced critically at the picture, as if I had never seen it before.

"Not a bad painting, by the way."

"No, not very," she replied; "but I feel certain the beach is intended for that between Dover and Deal. And as for the dress and hat, why, I feel sure they are mine."

"Did you never pose for a picture then?" I asked.

"Pose for a picture in that outrageous fashion? I should think not.

"Possibly you may have been asleep when someone trespassed," I suggested.

"If that is so, I consider it a piece of impertinence," said she, very decidedly.

"All these artist fellows have no conscience. They think the world was made for them alone," I replied.

She bent over and looked in the corner of the picture.

"Ray," she said, "Harold Ray!" while I started, and grew pale and fiery in one moment, and felt that "Ray" must be branded upon my forehead. "I don't like the sound of it. Ray—Ray! I can just imagine him. A little man in velvet coat and big, broad-brimmed hat. Ugh!"

I ask you frankly, could I tell her at this moment that I was the guilty person?

No, I must put in a few words in favor of poor Harold Ray first.

"Ah! Did you say Ray?" I asked. "Why, Harold Ray—yes, yes—why, he's a great friend of mine!"

"Oh, I beg your pardon if I have said anything rude of your friend," said she punctiliously, not at all as if she was sorry though. "But don't you think yourself that it was a little, too well-presuming of him?"

I pulled my moustache and looked critical.

"Well, I grant you that it was hardly a fair thing, and all that, you know," I said with candor; "but you must consider the circumstances, the informality of the place—the temptation, so to speak. If you knew Ray I am sure you would never accuse of him impertinence. He is certainly not a bore, and he reveres the fair sex.

She was gazing dreamily at the picture, and when I paused she smiled, not at all disapprovingly, and murmured: "Oh, go on—pray go on! Tell me more about him."

"Well, there isn't anything more to tell," I said feeling myself fairly in a corner, for I really could not sound my own trumpet any longer-

"Is he handsome?" she asked with a nonchalant air, still gazing at my picture.

"Eh—hardly!" I stammered.

"Clever?"

"No; decidedly not. Has a little talent, but that is all."

"Not handsome, and not clever," she repeated, with a laugh. "Why, then, what is this interesting creature?"

"Only an artist with an ideal," I began, half-lightly, half in earnest; "a young fellow who tracking foot-prints to the sea, and wondering where they are going to lead him; a poor creature whose fate is marked by a crimson sailor-hat, which he can't pluck up the courage to lift. In short, were I to tell my friend that I had at last seen the original of his mysterious sketch he would be beside himself. Were I to hold out the promise that he might enjoy the same privilege, he would be in the proverbial seventh heaven; and did he meet you he would be—"

I felt a hearty slap upon my back, and heard Jack Barrett cried out: "Ray, old fellow, let me congratulate you! You deserve your luck! 'Dreamy Constance' is a grand success. The Earl of Sheppey has called at the studio this morning, and offered to buy it."

"Barrett," I said, as he desperately pressed my hand, "another time, old fellow. This lady——"

Jack saw for the first time that he was looking over the shoulder of a lady, who turned and met his gaze with eyes sparkling with anger. I suppose poor Barrett had never had a woman look at him like that before. He assured me afterwards that he should never care about the experience being repeated.

I managed to bustle him off, and then, for a moment, I wished myself anywhere rather than in the Academy, standing like a culprit, with my eyes cast down.

Suddenly I heard a pretty little laugh, and looking up I saw that Constance was holding her catalogue up to her face, while her eyes laughed over the top. I had burst into a loud laugh also, but just as I was enjoying the fun I was confronted by Musgrave, whose very existence I own I had forgotten.

"Oh, there is your—Ah!" I began.

I could not bring myself to say "husband," so closed my sentence with a silent epithet.

"Brother," she said, turning a pair of laughing eyes full upon me.

Addressing her brother, she said: "Do you know, Charley, I am afraid I have mortally offended Mr. Ray, who is a friend of yours, I understand. I had no idea it was he who had painted "Day Dreams," and I have been criticising it before his very face."

"Oh, do not mention it, Miss Musgrave! I must apologize for my impudence in sketching you whilst you were dreaming, and I trust you will forgive me," said I.

"Of course I will; only I hope you will forget all the harsh things I said about the man in a velvet coat and a big, flopping hat," she replied laughing.

"We will make a mutual apology, in the hope that our acquaintance, which was begun so strangely, will ripen into friendship," I said.

The facts of the case were explained to Musgrave, who, when we had finished, said: "Never mind, Conny, Ray and Barrett shall dine with us to-night. I know them both as the best of fellows, and am delighted to renew their acquaintance."

* * * * *

Before the bright days of spring came round again Constance and I were married, Jack Barrett acting in the capacity of best man.

When the Academy opened again I found I had another picture on the line. It was a portrait of my fair unknown.

A COSTLY RESERVOIR.—An entire village in Wales is to be sacrificed for a reservoir of water to supply Liverpool. Woods, cottages, inns and churches will be removed and in their place will be a lake four and one-half miles long, one-half to a mile broad and 80 feet at its greatest depth. There will be three lines of pipe, each 68 miles long, with filtering beds and secondary reservoirs. The aqueduct alone will cost £3,000,000, and it will be a finer thing than Rome ever dreamed of.

AN EXTRAORDINARY INCIDENT.—One of the most extraordinary incidents in the whole record of longevity is reported from Pesth, in Hungary, where a beggar, aged 84 tried to commit suicide by throwing himself into the Danube because he was no longer able to support his father and mother, who are 115 and 110 years old, respectively. When he told this story, after his rescue, it was laughed at, but a police inquiry showed it to be true. The family are Magyars from the extreme south of Hungary.—Frank Leslie.

IT LOOKED BAD FOR THE PARSON.—"Dæ ye ken," said a member of the Newark Caledonian club, as he walked homeward from church with a fellow countryman; "dæ ye ken, I think oor minister's in the habit o' gamblin'?"

"What gies ye think thet?"

"I'll tell ye. Ae Sunday no' lang ago in his prayers instead o' sayin' 'O, Thou who hast the heart o' kings in Thy hands,' he prayed, 'O, thou who hast the king o' hearts in Thy hands.' What dæ ye think o' thet?"

"It dinna look richt," commented the other, shaking his head sadly.—Newark Journal.

MARK TWAIN'S REFERENCES.

Mark Twain, whose real name is Samuel L. Clemens, first met his beautiful wife while on the famous voyage of the Quaker City, and he pursued his acquaintance after their return so closely that at last the young lady's papa one day called the ardent and devoted Mark into his private study, and said, after some preamble: "Mr. Clemens, I have something to say to you which bears upon a subject of grave importance, at least to me and mine. You have been coming here some time, and your manners leave no doubt in my mind as to your object. Now, my daughter's welfare is very dear to me, and before I can admit you to her society on the footing of a suitor to her hand, I would like to know something more than I do about you, your antecedents, etc. Stop a minute! You must remember that a man may be a 'good fellow' and a pleasant companion on a voyage, and all that, but when it is a question as grave as this, a wise father tries to take every precaution before allowing his daughter's affections to become engaged, and I ask of you as a gentleman that you shall give me the names of some of your friends in California to whom I may write and make inquiries as I deem necessary—that is, if you still desire our friendship." It was now Mark Twain's turn. "Sir," said he, bowing profoundly, as became a young man who respects his hoped-for father-in-law. "Your sentiments are in every way correct. I approve of them myself, and hasten to add that you have not been mistaken in my sentiments toward your daughter, whom, I may tell you candidly, seems to me to be the most perfect of her sex, and I honor your solicitation for her welfare. I am not only perfectly willing to give you references, but am only too glad to have an opportunity to do so, which my natural modesty would have prevented me from offering. Therefore permit me to give the names of a few of my friends. I will write them down. First is Lieutenant-General John McComb, Alexander Bedlam, General Landor, and Col. W. H. L. Carnes. They would lie for me just as I would for them under like circumstances." This conclusion broke the old man all up, and he never asked more reference nor wrote those gentlemen.—Detroit Free Press.

A MODEL JURYMAN.

"Are you a citizen of of Wyandotte county?" asked the Honorable Bailey Waggoner of an old colored man, who hobbled into the jury box with the aid of a long hickory cane.

"I is, sah," replied the aged darkey.

"How long have you been such?"

"I dunno, sah."

"Have you formed or expressed an opinion about the case?"

"Well, I dunno. I have resulted the matter considerable, an' when my mind was fully rectified I went down to the track. I met de sheriff, an' he told me to reappear an I left."

"Have you formed an opinion that the train was wrecked by accident or design?"

"Yes, sah; I think it wrecked by 'zign."

"Are you opposed to capital punishment?"

"No, sah."

"Do you know what capital punishment is?"

"No, sah."

"Have you any conscientious scruples?"

"No, I have not."

"Do you think that a man should be hanged for murder?"

"Yes, sah."

"If the evidence in the case would show the defendant to be guilty of murder, would you hesitate to find a verdict of guilty because the penalty might be death?"

"Yes, sah, I would."

"In the trial of the case would you be controlled by the evidence, or by what you have heard!"

"I would to the best of my ability."

"Would the evidence control you in arriving at a verdict?"

"Not if I could help it."

"Do you know what an oath is?"

"I does not."

"In the trial of the case would you feel yourself bound by oath?"

"I has not 'flected on that subject, sah."

He was excused.—Kansas City Times.

He was apparently making a bee-line for police headquarters. His clothes were torn and soiled, his whiskers full of cotton batting, his hands cut and bleeding, and the officer who met him promptly exclaimed: "Right down to the first corner and turn to the left! The sergeant will hear your case. "What case?" "Don't you want the gang arrested?" "For what? No one has done anything to me." "They haven't! Why I thought from your looks that—" "Oh, come off! I'm simply moving into another house."—Detroit Free Press.

A chimney on fire called out some Baltimore firemen the other day. One of them discharged a pistol up the chimney five times, when the soot fell and the fire was extinguished. The concussion loosened the accumulated soot. The police and firemen of that city say it is an old practice with themselves and has never failed.

Daughter: "There is only one thing more astonishing than the readiness with which Ned gave up tobacco when we became engaged." Mother: "What is that astonishing thing?" Daughter: "The rapidity with which he took it up again as soon as we were married."

'Twas All A Mistake.

Was it all a mistake? Ah, fold your arms closer
And press your hand nearer my breast;
For my brain has grown weary with thinking and weeping,
And my sad heart is longing for rest.
Was it all a mistake when, with your dear hand,
You clasped mine with quickening breath,
And vowed before God that, forsaking all others,
You would love me and keep me till death?

Was it all a mistake? Is there any one dearer
For whom your man's heart cries aloud?
Is there any "sweet hope" lying dead in your bosom
That your marriage vow hid like a shroud?
Was it all a mistake when I thought I could cheer you
And brighten your pathway through life?
Do you dream of a face that is fairer than my face?
Of a name you hold dearer than wife?

Was it all a mistake? Are you longing for freedom?
Ah! I pray that release may be near;
That death's arms may take me and bear me to Heaven
To wait—what was that? Not a tear!
Ah, my own, you are weeping! You're sorry you said it?
'Twas anger that made those words fall?
Then take me yourself, dear, and don't let death have me,
For I don't want to die after all.

UNCLE JAKE.

He was bowed by many a year of service—he was white-wooled, thick-lipped, and a true son of Africa, yet a grand and knightly soul animated that dusky breast—a soul that many a scion of the blood-royal might envy.

The children loved him, the neighbors respected him, his own color looked up to him as a superior being, and they, whose goods and chattels he had formerly been, were sure to heed his counsels in all important family matters. Aye, he had an honorable record. If his skin was black, his soul was as white as the whitest, and from lusty boyhood until the present there had been no need of "stripes" for Uncle Jake.

He had been the playmate of "Young Marster," the boon companion in all 'possum hunts and fishing frolics, and when each had arrived at man's estate, the good fellowship contracted in youth knew no surcease.

When the tocsin of war resounded through the South, and the call for volunteers was made, "Marster" was one of the first to buckle on his armor and hasten to the front—doing so with greater heart as Uncle Jake was left in charge of those dearer than life to him.

And royally did the poor unlettered African fulfill the trust committed to his keeping. He took upon himself the burden of all plantation matters, and sooner than one hair on the heads of "Missus or chillun" should be injured he would have sacrificed his life freely any day. And when the war was over he positively refused to join in the hegira of his brethren, preferring rather to live on in the same old place that had witnessed his birth and the strength of his manhood's prime.

In grateful recognition of his long servitude a comfortable cottage was built for him in a secluded nook of the plantation, in which, with his faithful old wife, he lived a peaceful and contented life, tilling the few acres which had been granted him, and doing all sorts of odd jobs out of the pure love he bore "ole marse."

But Uncle Jake was getting old now—more and more heavily the weight of years fell upon him—the whiter grew his locks, until at last the time came when he could no longer pursue his accustomed duties, and all reluctant and unwilling he took to his bed never to rise again.

For weeks and months he lingered on the "Border Land," attended by loving hands and his slightest wish was gratified; indeed, so long he hovered between life and death that those who loved him best began to cherish a faint hope that he would be spared to them.

But the fiat had gone forth—Uncle Jake must die.

One evening just as the setting sun was flooding the fair landscape with his golden beams, a tearful group was assembled at his bedside, who had been hastily summoned thither to bid farewell to one who had been so true a friend to them all.

There were marster and missus and their children and Jake's own wife and children, with a few of his fellow servants, all united in a democracy of grief that knew no distinction of caste in that supreme moment.

No sound was heard save a half-suppressed sob now and then—the tick-tick of the clock on the rude mantel, and the labored breathing of the dying man.

For hours he had lain in a sort of stupor, broken only at intervals by delirious mutterings, when suddenly his eyes, in which was a preternatural brightness, opened and fixed themselves long and earnestly in turn upon each of the faces bent so sorrowfully over him.

Then in a feeble, fluttering voice, like the last effort of an expiring taper, he addressed his master, who was tenderly wiping the moisture from his brow:

"Ole marse, I'se been a good and faithful servant to yer all dese years, has I not?"

"Yes, Jake."

"Ebber since we was boys togedder, I'se lubed yer and stuck to yer through thick and thin, and now dat Jake is goin' home yer doan treasure up nothin' agin him, do yer, marse?"

"No, no, Jake."

"Ole missus, come nearer, honey. Jake's eyes is gittin' mighty dim now, and he kan't see yer. Yer'll nebber forgit how Jake tuk keer of yer an' de chilluns when old marster gone to de war? An' yer'll be kind to my wife an' chilluns for my sake, won't yer?"

"Yes, yes, Jake, I'll be kind to them, and I will never forget your fidelity, old friend."

"T'ank de Lawd! I kin die happy now, when I'se know dat yer an' marster will 'member me an' be kind to dem I'se leaving behind. An' de chillun—whar's de chillun? I'se wants ter tell 'em all good-bye an' say a las' few words to dem, too."

And in his eagerness, with a strength born of death, the old man half arose upon his elbow and laid a trembling hand upon the head of each of the awe-struck children.

"God bless yer, chillun! one an' all. I lubs my own little picaninnies, but I lubs ole marster's jes' as well. I doan' want none o' yer to forgit how Uncle Jake has trotted yer on his knee an' toted yer on his back an' kep' a watchful eye on yer, les' yer git into mischief by yer pranks. Promise me, chillun, dat yer'll nebber forgit dese tings. It pleases Uncle Jake to think yer'll 'member him arter he's gone from yer sight for eber."

As well as they were able for their tears, the little ones gave the required promise, and, greatly pleased, the old man sank back exhausted upon his pillow.

After lying a few moments with closed eyes, as if in sleep, he suddenly whispered:

"Dinah, whar' is you? I want yer ter cum closer ter me, honey, an' put yer arms around my neck an' lay yer cheek ter mine like yer usen ter do when we was courtin' down ter de huckleberry patch. I want's ter die in yer arms, ole wife. Yer is black, an' de white folks mought not be able ter see any booty in yer, but Jake knows what a true an' lovin' wife you'se bin ter him, an' he kin see de booty dat's hidden out o' sight. I'se gwine ter cross ober de great, wide ribber dey call Death, into a kentry whar' dere'll nebber be any mo' black skins—whar' I'll wear de white robe an' de golden crown, an' I'se got ter wait fur yer dere. Dinah, my lub! my lub! Hark, honey! doan' yer hear de bells ob heaben a-ringin'? An' doan' yer see de pearly gates a-openin' to let ole black Jake go frew? I'se a-comin', holy angels—I'se a-comin' blessed Lawd! Glory hallylewger! Ole Jake's mos' got ober de ribber. His feet is touchin' de water—but it's gittin' so cold, Dinah, honey—I can't find de clasp of yer arms any mo'. I'se—"

And with a last, long, fluttering sigh, as knightly and true a soul as ever dwelt in human breast took its flight to a realm where there is indeed neither black nor white, nor bond nor free, but all are like unto the angels.

The attention of the incredulous public is called to this fish story from an exchange, which coolly vouches for its truth: "A Bangorean sportsman lost his chisel while fishing through the ice. But nothing daunted he hooked on a shiner and proceeded to business. Soon he tried his line and felt an immense weight, which he quickly brought to the surface. He not only had a fine three-pound trout, but also the lost chisel. The blade had stuck upright in the mud, the shiner had swum through the hole in the handle, the trout seized him and wound himself up around the handle, making the capture possible, providing the line held, as it did.

The pedagogue at one of our suburban schools gave a young lady a severe whipping the other day and then said: "Now if you think I did wrong in punishing you thus you may take the rod and serve me in like manner." To his astonishment, the contrite and repentant girl took him at his word and gave him such a lambasting as he never dreamed of.—Punxutawney Spirit.

I'm Growing Old.

My days pass pleasantly away,
My nights are blessed with sweetest sleep;
I feel no symptoms of decay,
I have no cause to mourn or weep;
My foes are impotent and shy,
My friends are neither false nor cold,
And yet, of late, I often sigh,
I'm growing old!

My growing talk of olden times,
My growing thirst for early news,
My growing apathy for rhymes,
My growing love for easy shoes,
My growing hate for crowds and noise,
My growing fear of taking cold,
All whisper, in the plainest voice,
I'm growing old!

I'm growing fonder of my staff,
I'm growing dimmer in the eyes,
I'm growing fainter in my laugh,
I'm growing deeper in my sighs;
I'm growing careless in my dress,
I'm growing frugal in my gold,
I'm growing wise, I'm growing—yes—
I'm growing old!

I see it in my changing taste,
I see it in my changing hair,
I see it in my growing waist,
I see it in my growing heir;
A thousand signs proclaim the truth,
As plain as truth was even told,
That even in my vaunted youth
I'm growing old.

Ah me! my very laurels breathe
The tale of my reluctant ears,
And every boon the hours bequeath,
But makes me debtor to the years;
E'en Flattery's honey'd words declare
The secret she would fain withhold,
And tells me in "How young you are!"
I'm growing old.

Thanks for the years whose rapid flight
My sombre muse too sadly sings;
Thanks for the gleams of golden light
That tint the darkness of their wings,—
The light that beams from out the sky,
Those heavenly mansions to unfold,
There all are blest and none may sigh,
"I'm growing old."

—John G. Saxe.

TWO OF A KIND.

In the drawing room of one of the brownstone houses that crown the hill opposite Boston Common sat Miss Dorothy Atkihs Miller, the eldest of three sisters who, having already appeared in society as "buds," were now in various stages of bloom and blossom.

Lillian, a tall graceful girl of nineteen, stood by the open window half hidden behind the lace draperies that swayed back and forth in the light breeze; while Grace, the younger, bent over her embroidery, absorbed in the mystery of the latest Kensington designs.

The air was full of the indefinable freshness and fragance of early spring. A hand organ that appeared as silently and almost as mysteriously as the crocus buds beneath the window, was grinding out a weary welcome to the April sunshine. Little patches of green lay here and there on the Common, like hopeful prophets in the sun, the sparrows chirped noisily in the trees, and the faint odor of opening maple buds mingled with the heavy perfume of the hyacinths in the window.

"Lillian," said Dorothy, looking up from the paper which she had been reading, "I have found my mission."

"Have you?" inquired Lillian, with languid interest. "And what may it be, pray?"

"Don't scoff, Lill, dear," answered Dorothy, "but listen," and glancing down the column of "Wants," she read the following item:—

"Wanted—An intelligent and comely young woman, capable of doing plain and fancy cooking. She will be received as one of the family, in a quiet country home. Address Mrs. Helen Henderson, Maplewood, Vt."

"There!" exclaimed Dorothy, waving her paper. "Am I not comely? Am I not intelligent? And can't I do plain and fancy cooking, after a three month's course with Miss Parloa and Mrs. Lincoln? The place was evidently made for me, and I for the place."

"But, Dolly," exclaimed Grace, "you are not really in earnest? You couldn't take a servant's position and expect to be received into society again."

"Nonsense!" replied Dorothy. "Society needn't know anything about it. Society will be politely informed that I am spending the summer with my aunt, in the country. She is our aunt, you know. Don't you remember the winter she made mamma a visit, just before I came out, and how she reviled us, one and all? 'Boston girls,' she said, 'could do nothing but attend Browning clubs and French classes, and dance the German.' Now, I will show her that they can do all that and something else beside. Mamma will give me a recommendation."

"Mamma will do nothing of the kind," interposed Lillian from the window. "She has engaged rooms at the Falmouth from the first of June, and Goldthwait is to begin on our dresses to-morrow."

Dorothy looked up with a bright smile. "Lillian, you and mamma ought to be glad to have me off your hands, especially when I relinquish, once and forever, all claim to those charming toilets which Goldthwait is concocting in that wonderful brain of hers. Think of the peachblow silk, Lill, and the India embroidery, and be grateful for my inspiration."

"You dear girl!" exclaimed Lillian, moved to enthusiasm by the generosity of this unexpected offer. "But what are you to gain from it all?"

"Success!" answered Dorothy dramatically. And seizing her sister by the waist, she waltzed gently around the room to the strain of the untiring hand-organ outside. Just then a caller was announced.

Dorothy glanced at the card.

"Mr. Clement Rich." Give him my excuses, please. I have an important letter to write—a business letter connected with my arrangements for the summer. Don't betray me, girls." She hastily disappeared through one door, just as the caller entered by another.

Mr. Clement Rich was a young man with a good figure and a prospective fortune. There was absolutely nothing to be said against him, and he was greatly admired by all discreet and sensible mammas.

If the lines of his mouth indicated irresolution and indecision no one was the wiser; for his handsome blonde mustache was so well trained as to conceal the fact in a manner that was both clever and becoming, and if the young ladies voted him dull, they must have been very exacting to expect nature to bestow all her good gifts on one person.

If Mr. Clement Rich was not intellectual, neither was he arrogant; if he was dull, he was good-tempered: and the annoyance which he experienced at being deprived of the pleasure of the eldest Miss Miller's society, found no expression in the gentle suavity of his tone and manner.

He had fallen into the habit of depending on Miss Dorothy to guide the conversational frigate of an evening call; and, at first, feeling somehow as if he had lost his bearings, he was puzzled how to proceed. But, if the conversation moved less briskly than was its wont, it was also less exacting; and to a person of Mr. Rich's ability, it seemed quite as pleasant, now that he had tried it, to drift quietly with the tide of aimless talk, while he allowed all his energy to become absorbed in the contemplation of Lillian's fair face.

He had for a long time considered himself hopelessly in love with Miss Dorothy, but he missed her much less than he would have expected; and when at parting, he told the young ladies that he had spent a most delightful evening, he did not feel that his immaculate conscience had been stained by even the shadow of an untruth.

Lillian went up stairs with a half smile on her lips, that made her look prettier than ever. As she looked into Dorothy's room to say good night, she hesitated a moment, and then said abruptly:—

"Dolly, are you sure—quite sure—that you want to go to Vermont?"

"Perfectly sure," answered Dorothy with emphasis.

"Because," said Lillian, "I ought perhaps to tell you that Mr.—that a certain person—is to be at the Falmouth, this season; and, if you are not there, I am afraid that something may happen."

Dorothy took her sister's delicate face between both her hands, looked into the blue eyes until the faint blushes came and went in the girl's cheeks, and said gayly:—

"Let it happen dear—mamma will be very well pleased."

Lillian turned away with a little shamefaced sigh of relief.

"I really am glad that Dolly doesn't care, she said to herself; I have thought sometimes, that perhaps she might." And she went to sleep with rosy dreams floating before her eyes, satisfied that in the end, everthing would arrange itself quite to her satisfaction.

Early June found Mrs. Miller and her two young daughters settled at Long Harbor, where a brilliant season was predicted—and in fact, already begun, according to the society column of the leading paper of the place.

"How much your poor, dear papa would have enjoyed all this," observed Mrs. Miller plaintively, as they stood together on the upper veranda overlooking the beach. "He was so fond of the sea, although so absorbed in business, poor man, that he never had any time to devote to needed recreation."

Mrs. Miller did not often indulge in sentimental or painful reflections, but it seemed proper that her daughters should be reminded occasionally of the fact that they once had a father, who, it is true, disappeared from their view so long ago that they were in some danger of forgetting him. He had been a quiet man of simple habits, and having provided for his family an ample fortune, which seemed to be all that was expected of him, he had unobtrusively exchanged this world, with its ever-changing tide of events, for the serenity of that changeless world which we have all been taught to consider a far better one.

Mrs. Miiler would have considered herself deeply sinful if she had not been resigned, and no one ventured to presume that she was not; but certain events had transpired of late which made her feel the loss of her excellent husband in a very real and practical way.

Many of her investments had proved unfortunate, and unless a certain combination of railroad magnates could be brought about, her confidential agent warned her that nothing else than financial ruin was to be expected.

However, there was no use in pulling down the blinds before the house was sold, so she put the best possible face on the matter—arrayed her daughters rather more gorgeously than usual, was especially cordial to Mr. Clement Rich, and very thankful that Dorothy had taken a fancy to pass the summer where she would add neither to her cares nor her expenses.

Dorothy's letters were full of enthusiasm for her new life.

"Aunt Helen has no idea who I am," she wrote. "Of course I have changed in five years, and when I introduced myself as 'Dolly Atkins,' the girl whom she had engaged to do plain and fancy cooking, there was not the slightest hint of recognition in her face.

"You can have no conception of the feeling of exhilaration it gives me to prove to oneself that one is capable of earning one's own living. Aunt Helen is more than kind, and treats me like a daughter rather than a servant. And the cooking is a great success. Everybody praises it and everybody has a prodigious appetite.

"Aunt Helen—or Mrs. Henderson—has a Cousin Gerald staying here; a young man whom the whole household admires, down to the dog and the cat.

"He only came for a week, but he declares that he shall stay all summer, and has 'hired out,' as they say here, with Mr. Henderson. I don't know whether it is the biscuit—of which he eats an enormous number—or something else which tempts him to prolong his sojourn."

"Of course his being the hired man and my being the hired girl throws us together a good deal; and, although this country life is absolutely delightful, I am not sure but that it might be a little dull at times if there were no one in the house beside Mr. and Mrs. Henderson."

"I didn't know that Helen had relatives by the name of Gerald," said Mrs. Miller, thoughtfully, as she read the leter. "They must be some of Mr. Henderson's family from northern New Hampshire—obscure farmers, I suppose."

Meanwhile the days and weeks were hurrying by.

June, with its singing birds and orchards smothered in apple blossoms, had passed, and midsummer was at hand. The green world semed in a languid dream, the birds were silent, and the long grass in the fields hardly stirred, so motionless was the air, save as it fell beneath the mower's scythe.

Dorothy sat on the back porch, watching the men at work in the fields, listening half unconsciously to the monotonous droning of the flies, and feeling as if, for the first time in her life, she were really happy.

The sunny outlook from the house, the surrounding hills, with their ever-changing shadows, and the simple country life, with its freedom from restraint, were all inexpressibly delightful to her. There was but one cloud and that no bigger than a man's hand, to mar her happy serenity.

Only the day before "Cousin Gerald" had told her that he had about made up his mind to remain with Mr. Henderson for the rest of his life, and Dolly felt almost sure that it was not altogether on account of the biscuit. "Of course," she said to herself, "if he knew who I was, he would not dare to think such thoughts." And then in a more generous mood, she said to herself: "He is far too much of a man to waste his life in a country place like this. I will tell him so, and then go home."

But, although Dolly was not wanting in courage, she did not immediately put her excellent resolves into execution. Sober second thought convinced her that she had been inexcusably conceited and unmaidenly; that it might, yes—it might possibly be the biscuit, after all, so she remained, and July merged into August. As Mrs. Henderson watched her cousin Gerald and her pretty young handmaid sitting together on the broad stone step that led to the lilac-shadow porch, talking, evening after evening, in the old, old fashion of youths and maidens, she thought of her own youth and smiled not disapprovingly.

One afternoon, early in September, Dolly went into the orchard for apples. They lay on the ground in lavish profusion, and it was altogether unnecssary for Cousin Gerald to leave his work and come to her assistance.

Because he chose to do so, however, Dolly chose to blush, and, as she felt the warm color mounting to her cheek in such an uncalled-for and exasperating manner, she became all at once convinced, by some inscrutable feminine logic, that the time had come for her to put an end to the innocent deceit which she had been practicing for the last three months.

"Mr. Gerald," she said, as they turned toward the house, "I'm going away to-morrow. Perhaps I shan't have any better opportunity to say good-bye."

"Going away?" he echoed. Isn't this very sudden? Has anything happened? Are you dissatisfied?"

"Yes—no. What I mean is," said Dolly, suddenly embarrassed, "I didn't expect when I came to stay here always, and I think perhaps my mother will be glad to see me by this time,"

"I have no doubt she will," said her companion, planting himself in front of a tree in such a way as to most effectually bar Dolly's progress. "I should think she might. You have never told me very much about your mother, by the way, or where you live. Perhaps you might be willing to do so now."

"There is not much to tell," answered Dolly, demurely. "My mother is a widow, and there are three of us girls. But what I wanted to say, Mr. Gerald," she continued, with a sudden rush of words, lest her courage might desert her, "If you will excuse me for saying it—and we have been such good friends I think you will—is that I can't help feeling as if you were doing yourself an injustice by staying here. Of course, it is very pleasant for a while; but if I were your sister I should tell you that you were throwing yourself away, and wasting your abilities."

"I am rather glad, on the whole, that you are not my sister," remarked the young man, apparently quite unmoved by Dolly's criticisms. "But tell me what you would like to have me do. I should be willing to do a good deal."

"Oh, I only thought that if you ever had any plans for another sort of life, and knew that I—that other people took an interest in them, it might make a difference."

"It would make a difference—a great difference," said young Gerald, earnestly. "And you do take a little interest in me," he added, "even if you are not my sister—a very little?"

"Yes," admitted Dolly, looking up from under her hat. Then, as he started forward, with what desperate intent he himself only knew, she continued breathlessly, "But not enough for that—oh, no!" And she made a little rush past him, disappearing through the trees, in a manner which she always afterward regretted.

"It was so undignified," she reflected. And then she reproached herself for her blushes and needless confusion, atoning for her misdeeds by bidding them all good-bye the next morning with unapproachable dignity, and assuring Cousin Gerald, as he helped her into the cars, that she had left her address with Mrs. Henderson.

Then the train rolled away; she shed a few furtive tears, but dried the salt drops with angry resolve.

Six weeks later she was sitting with Lillian in the back parlor, discussing family affairs. Indeed, they had done little else since their return, for Mrs. Miller could no longer conceal the fact that their fortune was irretrievably lost, and there were questions of the greatest importance to be settled. Lillian, as the betrothed of Mr. Clement Rich, had an assured future.

"Of course," said Dorothy, "I can take care of myself; I can cook, and mamma can live with you; but what are we to do with Grace and her everlasting embroidery? Now, if this tiresome Mr. Farnleigh had only proposed for Grace, instead of me, everything would be right."

"But, Dolly, dear," said Lillian, in her most soothing tones, "you are very brave, of course, and independent; but you know this Mr. Farnleigh is perfectly unexceptionable. Mamma says that papa used to know him. He saw you once somewhere, and fell in love with you at first sight; and I'm sure, Doll, I can't see what else you can ask for."

"Lillian, you have no more heart than a kitten. If he fell in love with me, I didn't with him. I don't even remember his face; and I am going to write this minute and tell him that I can't and won't think of it."

"But you won't say it in just those words," interposed Lillian, with a gentle air of expostulation. "Do be cautious, Dolly, and—well, it wouldn't do any harm to wait a day or so, and think it over. I am sure I wouldn't be rash."

"No, you wouldn't," exclaimed Dolly. "But I would rather be rash than calculating."

At that moment Grace came with a card. "It is Mr. Farnleigh," she said, "and he wants to see you, Dorothy, in the library."

"Then I shall be spared the trouble of writing a letter," said Dolly, scornfully. "Very kind of him, I am sure, to call for his dismissal." And she left the room.

Dorothy was gone a long time, and the two girls awaited her return with impatience.

"I shouldn't think it would take so long to say no," said Grace, meditatively. "If it were yes, now, one could imagine how it might."

"Certainly," admitted Lillian, with an air of experience, "one might."

At length Mrs. Miller, who had also been summoned to the library, came up stairs, looking more contented than her daughters had seen her since the failure of Lee, Hubbard & Sons, which had involved them in its downfall.

"Mamma, do tell us what it all means," called Grace.

Mrs. Miller sat down in an easy chair, and rested her head against its high-cushioned back.

"Mamma," repeated Grace; but before Mrs. Miller had time to reply to the eager query, Dorothy came in with her own explanation.

"Come down," she said, "and be presented to your future brother-inlaw, Gerald Farnleigh. I have known—and liked him all summer, but it did not occur to me to ask if Aunt Helen's Cousin Gerald had any other name. He allowed me to call him Mr. Gerald, and now he declares that I was as much of an impostor as he."

"So you didn't refuse him, after all?" said Lillian.

"Why, no. I—I was so surprised that I—I suppose I forgot it," answered Dolly. "At all events, it is too late now."—Peterson's Magazine.

A WOMAN'S PRACTICAL ARGUMENT.

"What brings you here, Mary?" said Truesdell to his wife, as she entered the liquor shop.

"It is very lonesome at home, and your business seldom allows you to be there." replied the meek and resolute wife. "To me there is no company like yours, and as you cannot come to me, I must come to you, I have a right to share your pleasures as well as your sorrows."

"But to come to such a place as this?" expostulated Tom.

"No place can be improper where my husband is," said poor Mary. "Whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder."

She took up the glass of spirits which tha shop-keeper had just poured out for her husband.

"Surely you are not going to drink that?" said Tom in huge astonishment.

"Why not! You say that you drink to forget sorrow, and surely I have sorrows to forget."

"Woman, woman, you are not going to give that stuff to the children!" cried Tom as she was passing the glass of liquor to them.

"Why not? Can children have a better example than their father's? Is not what is good for him good for them also? It will put them to sleep, and they will forget that they are cold and hungry. Drink, my children, this is fire, and bed, and food and clothing. Drink; you see how much good it does to your father."

With seeming reluctance, Mary suffered her husband to lead her to her home, and that night he prayed long and frevently that God would help him to break an evil habit and keep a newly formed but firm resolution.

His reformation was thorough, and Mrs. Truesdell is now one of the happiest of women, and remembers with a melancholy pleasure her first and last visit to the dram shop.

It is said that care once killed a cat. If care is out of a job, we know a street uptown where he can find employment by the week, at good wages.—Puck.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 15, 1888.

Rev. A. W. Weeks of the Second Baptist church will conduct the religious services at Forest Lake Gardens Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

An auction sale of household goods of the late Levina Converse will be held at the house of John Foster on Thorndike street to-morrow.

President Smith of the Central Vermont Railroad came to Palmer from the north by special train, Monday afternoon, en route to New London, Ct.

The literature committee of the Palmer Reading Room Association met Wednesday, and voted to procure new publications for the reading-room.

Mrs. E. T. Sherman of Brimfield is now in telephonic communication with the local exchange, having had an instrument put in during the past week.

A local picked nine visited West Brookfield, last Saturday afternoon, and were beaten by the Riversides of that place, the score standing 29 to 0.

Excursion trains will be run on the Ware River and New London Northern railroads, to-night, for the accommodation of those wishing to attend the circus.

Henry Graves, residing on Baptist hill, was married, Tuesday evening, to Miss Jane M. Cross of Palmer, Rev. M. Eyers of Three Rivers performing the ceremony.

The adjourned meeting of the Young Mens' Library Association, which was called for last Wednesday evening, was again adjourned to next Monday evening.

The Converse House has been wired this week for the incandescent system of electric lights. The Nassowanno House is also to be lighted by the same system.

The annual strawberry festival at the Second Congregational church, Wednesday evening, was a financial success, and a very creditable musical entertainment was presented.

The new iron bridge of the Boston & Albany Railroad Company, west of the union passenger station, will be completed so that trains can use both tracks by Monday evening.

The selectmen have forbidden all ball playing on the business section of Main street, as it is a great source of annoyance and danger to pedestrians and those who ride in teams.

Insurance Agent Ely has been corresponding with the chairman of the rating committee for Palmer, and has the promise of a call from them very soon to look over our business blocks.

Charles Squier of Monson has opened an ice-cream parlor in the W. F. Tracey confectionery store. His reputation as an ice-cream manufacturer is sufficient to warrant a large patronage.

Dr. Sarah M. Wilbur, resident physician of the state primary school, read a paper yesterday on "Higher Female Education," at the commencement of Rutgers Female College, New York city.

The residence of Mrs. Fox on Pleasant street has been improved in appearance, this week, by a coat of paint, and John A. Squier's Main street residence has been undergoing a similar operation.

The foundation for the new iron deck bridge, to be constructed near Holden's mill by the New London Northern road, is being put in. The bridge will be about 150 feet long and 20 feet wide.

Charles W. Eddy of Ware has just issued a neat and attractive book on Forest Lake Gardens, the town's popular summer resort. The work contains several beautiful illustrations, and is a credit to the author.

Charles Atwater, well known here, was given a roll top writing desk and an easy chair, Tuesday afternoon, by the employes of the North Monson mill, where he has held a responsible position for some time past.

Daniel B. Collity, who has driven the mail team for some time past, has taken his old position as clerk at the Weeks House. He is succeeded on the team by John Manning, who formerly carried the mails.

Charles E. Fish has secured a five-years' lease of a tract of land at Forest Lake Gardens, which he will use for camping purposes. The spot is one of the most picturesque and beautiful to be found in that locality.

The supreme court has granted decrees absolute in the divorce cases of Lyman A. Shaw of Monson from Hannah A. Shaw, for desertion, and Royal J. Butler of Wilbraham from Ella M. Butler of Ware, for adultery.

The match game of ball between nines representing the Springfield business college and the Palmer high school, announced for yesterday afternoon, on the park, was postponed until later on account of the weather.

The sermon to young men which was to have been delivered at St. Paul's Universalist church last Sunday evening by Rev. F. W. Betts, was postponed to next Sunday evening on account of the concerts at the other churches.

Mrs. W. A. Perry died Monday morning, of consumption, at the age of 21. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon, at the Second Baptist church. Rev. A. W. Weeks officiated, and the burial was at North Wilbraham.

All the public schools in town, with the exception of the high school, closed yesterday for the annual summer vacation. The reason for closing one day earlier was to allow the children and teachers to attend the circus to-day.

Rumor says C. W. Johnson goes to Dakota in August to attend to the harvesting of 30 acres of oats which he has sown on the farm purchased of Geo. W. Ely some two years ago. This must mean good feed for the trotters next winter.

The concert at the Congregational church last Sunday evening was an enjoyable success, the children from the state primary school adding much to the pleasure of the evening by their singing. There was also a concert of unusual excellence at the Baptist church, the speaking being good and the floral decorations very tasteful.

The Palmers will visit Southbridge to-morrow and contest a match game of ball with the famous nine of that place, which stands at the head of all amateur clubs in the state. The nine will be conveyed to that place in J. W. Weeks's four horse coach, starting about 8.30 a. m. Quite a number of the local enthusiasts expect to accompany the team.

Samuel S. Parks, formerly of this place, graduated from the Union College of Law, Chicago, yesterday, receiving one of the eight commencement appointments in a class of fifty-two. Mr. Parks was admitted to the bar the same day, and will remain in Chicago, where he has formed a partnership with a young attorney under the firm name of Pratt & Parks, at 97 Washington street.

A special meeting will be held at the district court room, next Tuesday evening, at 7.30 o'clock, when some definite action will be taken relative to celebrating the Fourth of July. It is proposed to have an antique and horrible parade which will surpass all former attempts, while in the evening there will be a display of fireworks. All the citizens and others interested are requested to be present.

Childrens' day will be observed at St. Paul's Universalist church Sunday morning. Appropriate music will be given by the choir, while the floral decorations will be elaborate. The children at the state primary school will also recognize the day, and have a programme to present in the evening at 6.30. Superintendent Andrews extends an invitation to all those who wish to be present in the evening.

During the ball game on the park Saturday afternoon two horses became frightened at something unknown, and took a three-minute gait for the park entrance, where the vehicles came in direct contact with the fence and were badly smashed. One man, who was riding in the wagon with a load of bananas, peanuts, etc., began to think he was being given a pretty close call, and leaped to the ground uninjured. There were no persons in the carriage, which was owned by Alexander Adams of Bondsville. The peanut cart was the property of Henry Tracey, who resides near Three Rivers.

A gathering of ladies and gentlemen which nearly filled the district court room last Monday evening attested the interest felt in the proposition to organize an association for the care of the village cemetery. Rev. F. W. Betts was made chairman of the meeting, and L. E. Chandler secretary. A general discussion followed, as to the possible powers and scope of such an organization, some inclining to the idea that it should have entire control of the cemetery, while the larger number of those present seemed to feel that the society should simply supplement the work of the town by beautifying and keeping the cemetery in order as far as possible without assuming any authority. The matter was finally referred to a committee, consisting of Geo. Robinson, C. B. Fisk, W. A. Breckenridge, Mrs. George Davis and Mrs. M. Lawrence, to consider plans and report at an adjourned meeting to be held at the Congregational church next Monday evening, at 7.30 o'clock, when a full attendance is hoped for.

Palmers 14, Holyokes 2.

The most bravely contested game of ball that has been seen on the park this season occurred Saturday afternoon between the Palmers and the Holyokes. The victory proved an easy one for the home team. The Palmers batted finely, but played another wretched fielding game. The score by innings follows:

| INNINGS. | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Palmers | 0 | 0 | 4 | 6 | 3 | 0 | 1 | 0 | | —14 |
| St. James | 0 | 0 | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | — 2 |

Time of game, 2.10; umpire, F. W. Betts.

District Court.

June 9.—In the civil case of H. W. Smith vs. James Barry of Monson, for an action of contract, the finding was for the defendant with costs. Newton and Taft appeared for the plaintiff, and E. A. Day for the defense.

13.—John A. Plympton, for drunkenness, paid $5 and costs of $6.98.

14.—John F. Guilday, for larceny from the North Monson school house; four months in the house of correction. Appealed.

John Collins, for drunkenness; committed to the house of correction in default of $7.33.

To-morrow is civil entry day.

Forepaugh's Big Street Parade.

This has been a red letter day for Palmer and the surrounding towns, owing to the visit of Forepaugh and his mammoth aggregation. Long before the time announced for the grand street pageant to appear, the main thoroughfare was literally packed with people to witness the big show and its many features. The incoming trains and other conveyances brought crowds to swell the multitude, and the mills in this and the neighboring villages shut down so that those who wished could "see the elephant." The street show with its glittering chariots, beautiful cages and gaudy coaches was a spectacle worth witnessing. The afternoon performance began at 2 o'clock with a large crowd in attendance. This evening it is estimated that in the vicinity of 7000 persons will be present.

Personal.

Dr. E. Hill passed the Sabbath at the Hub.

Miss G. Calkins is the guest of Mrs. J. W. Weeks.

Harry Spingler of New York city was in town over Sunday.

George Fox of Woodstock, Ct., has been in town this week.

John Shaw and wife of Springfield spent Sunday in town among friends.

C. J. Tuthill, a student of Boston University, is at home for the summer.

George B. Kenerson, wife and daughter have returned from their New York journey.

Mrs. H. J. Ball of North Adams has been spending the week with Mrs. W. H. Blanchard.

J. F. Hobart of West Randolph, Vt., was the guest of Station Agent Fish, last Sunday.

Gov. Ames and staff have engaged rooms at the Weeks House for next Monday night.

Chief Clerk Moore of the railway mail service was in town on business, Tuesday.

J. W. Robinson of Ware made a brief visit among relatives in town, the first of the week.

Mrs. E. M. and Mrs. T. Blanchard started Monday evening for an extended stay in the West.

G. F. T. Reid, a wealthy New York jeweler, was registered at the Weeks House Wednesday.

Rufus Leach and wife of Springfield spent Sunday with W. W. Leach on Pleasant street.

Miss Eva Kenerson has returned from Boston University and will spend her vacation here.

Mrs. Jeannette Wallace of Brattleboro, Vt., was in town, this week, the guest of L. E. Moore.

M. R. Stevens and daughter of New York city are stopping at the Weeks House for the summer.

E. W. Wall of Pittsburg, Pa., a well known clarionetist, has been spending a few days here, this week.

Charles Bannister, clerk in Smith & Company's grocery store, spent Sunday with acquaintances at North Brookfield.

Mrs. W. D. Johnson and daughter of Fitchburgh, who have been visiting here, this week, will return home to-day.

LUDLOW.

James S. Borthwick, a farmer about 50 years old, living at the Center, was struck by Harry Taylor, an employe of Forepaugh's circus, during the performance at Springfield, Wednesday, and was instantly killed, the blow causing the rupture of a blood vessel at the base of the brain. Borthwick was slightly intoxicated, and got into a dispute with Taylor. The latter escaped, and has not been found.

BONDSVILLE.

There are three cases of scarlet fever in the place.

Miss Emily Sedgwick died Tuesday evening of apoplexy.

These scholars have been neither absent nor tardy in the intermediate school: Maggie Bruce, Medos Bedard, Henry Sharatt, Patrick Scanlon.

Patrick Clifford died on Tuesday evening. He had been section master of the Athol branch of the Boston and Albany ever since the road was built, and will be missed by many friends.

The Ladies' Aid Society gave a literary and musical entertainment Wednesday evening, consisting of songs and farces, and at the end the celebrated Peak sisters of Alaska gave a concert.

HAMPDEN.

Mr. Rich, the selling agent for the creamery, has left town, and Mr. George Ensleigh takes his place.

A Grange has been organized, and some that would like to join it are kept away on account of the "Corner" management.

Clarence S. West has sold his mail stage route to East Longmeadow together with his team to John Sheldon, as the work was too hard. It is rumored that Mr. West will move to Longmeadow and work at his trade.

Eleazer Bradway, who has not been able to labor for four years, and has not left the house for eight months, had a fall five weeks ago and for several days was thought to be dying, but has rallied somewhat, though he still is unable to move anything except one hand.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The ladies of Grace church gave an ice cream and strawberry festival Tuesday evening, and cleared about twenty dollars, which will be added to the fund for the repair of the chapel.

The Christian Endeavor Society held its semi-annual election Monday evening, when the following officers were chosen: President, A. L. Bell; vice-president, E. W. Wall; secretary, Miss Nettie M. Bell; treasurer, Fred Pease; chairman of lookout committee, E. W. Wall; of prayer-meeting committee, C. E. Fletcher; of Sunday school committee, H. W. Cutler; of social committee, Miss Ella J. Devere. H. W. Cutler was chosen delegate to the national convention at Chicago. Although there is no large increase of membership the society is in a prosperous and satisfactory condition.

WEST WARREN.

Druggist Ethan T. Hall is recovering from a severe attack of measles.

The Methodists gave a strawberry festival in the church, Thursday night.

George Bliss has bought two building lots of A. W. Crossman & Son, on High street, and will put up two dwelling houses in a short time.

The band gave a concert and ball in Washington hall, Thursday night, which was well attended. The concert programme was very fine and well rendered. Messinger's orchestra furnished dancing music.

A picked nine went over to Fiskdale, last Saturday, and were defeated in an eleven-inning game, 27 to 26. The score by innings was:

| INNINGS. | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Fiskdale | 3 | 4 | 1 | 9 | 1 | 1 | 1 | 2 | 1 | 0 | 4 | —27 |
| West Warren | 3 | 1 | 7 | 0 | 2 | 2 | 2 | 2 | 4 | 0 | 3 | —26 |

WALES.

The connecting links between the present and past generation are being slowly severed by the death of old residents. Two weeks ago Mrs. Amanda Houghton passed away at the ripe old age of 89, being the oldest person in the town. Her husband, Capt. Asa Houghton, had died many years before. A week ago, Mrs. Nancy M. Royce also passed peacefully away at the age of 77. She was the widow of James C. Royce, and was a daughter of Capt. Jacob Miller of Worcester, and the last survivor of her father's family. She and her husband in the prime of their lives were active workers in the church, here, and could always be relied upon in all movements for the uplifting of the standard of Christian character and good citizenship. The patience and sweet resignation of these two old ladies in their declining years, and the kindly influence of their peace-loving lives, will long be remembered by many outside their own families, while "their children shall rise up and call them blessed."

WILBRAHAM.

Tetsutaro Yoshida, one of the Japanese students of the academy, will enter Yale university next fall.

Visitors and several of the alumni have already arrived to witness the commencement exercises of next week.

The ladies of the Congregational church gave an ice cream supper and festival in the chapel Tuesday evening. A very large number of patrons were present.

Dr. G. M. Steele will preach the annual sermon to the graduating class at the M. E. church next Sunday morning. The church will be decorated by the class of '89.

Professor A. W. Lowe will spend the first few weeks of the vacation at Nashua, N. H., and Providence, R. I., after which he will cruise in a U. S. pilot boat from Boston along the north and south shores.

The Wesleyans played the Massachusetts Agricultural College nine on the campus Saturday last, and defeated them by a score of 6 to 5. To-morrow the Wesleyans will again contest with the Amherst Freshmen, who defeated them two weeks ago.

THREE RIVERS.

Schools closed Thursday, for the summer vacation.

Rev. E. Leger, French Protestant Missionary, will preach at the Baptist church next Sunday morning at 10.45 a. m. There will be a Sunday-school concert in the evening.

The Three Rivers played a game of ball on their grounds, last Sunday, with the Unions of Ware, and won the victory. It was a very close game up to the fifth inning, being one to nothing in favor of the Unions, when the Three Rivers came to bat, making nine runs. Following is the score by innings:

| INNINGS. | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Unions | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | — 1 |

Names of scholars perfect in attendance in the Three Rivers schools: Grammar—Lucy P. Graves, Lizzie A. Twiss. Ernest M. Lord, Jennie C. Twiss, Phillip C. Story, Lucy B. Twiss, Hattie L. Warriner. Second intermediate—Elmer L. Bowen, Lena M. Bowen, William H. Gokey, Alexander M. Wilson. Third primary—Eda F. Garant, Annie G. Mason, Robert B. Parton, Amede Lebeault, William Morin, Peter Ouimette. First primary—Maude Chevier, Alice Laramie, Albert Laramie, Alma Laramie, Frank W. Forte, George Lonzo, Alexander Lapointe, George H. Wheeler, Albinie Foucher. Second primary—Clara Boisy, Bottine Beauchamps, Alphonse Bareau, William Blean, Joseph King.

BRIMFIELD.

On Wednesday, an omnibus with 15 ladies from Monson made a visit by invitation at Mrs. Nathan M. Goodale's. They were all members of the same class in the Sunday school of the Congregational church, of which Mrs. Goodale was a member when she resided in Monson. They took dinner with their hostess and enjoyed a pleasant afternoon.

On Thursday, Thomas Hubbard of Chicago, Ill., celebrated his 87th birthday, in company with Joseph Ramsdell of Warren, in his 88th year—an old friend and neighbor—by a visit to the old Hubbard homestead, where he was born, and other places and friends in the neighborhood. After dinner at the hotel and calling upon several friends in the village, they returned to Warren well pleased with their day's work. Mr. Hubbard expects to make another visit to this place before he returns home.

The graduating exercises of the Hitchcock Free High School will be held on the 29th inst., with the following programme:—

Salutatory address—"Harmony of the Spheres," Herbert D. Smith.
Essay—"Living Thoughts," S. Valley Kyte.
Paper—"The Signal Service," Allen E. Shephard.
Essay—"Modern Jobs," Anna L. Griggs.
Essay—"The Shakesperian Myth," Cora B. Jones.
Oration—"Socialism," Michael Eagan.

Essay—"A Bit of Philology," Lillian M. Booth.
Essay—"Design in Nature," Ida R. Agard.
Sketch—"The Phantom Coach," Frank H. Potter.
Valedictory—"King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table," Lizzie D. Miller.

THORNDIKE.

Druggist A. P. Adams is spending a vacation with his parents at

A picnic will be held at Forest Garden July 4th, with several attractions.

The new tenement house which Jerry Shugrue is building is progressing rapidly.

Scarlet fever remains about the same, this week, only one new case being reported, and the rest are getting along nicely.

James F. Loftus and Patrick Crowley have been drawn as jurors for the June term of the Superior Court, and are acting in that capacity at Springfield.

A large number from this place will embrace the opportunity given this evening by the railroad to visit Forepaugh's circus at Palmer by special train, returning after the performance.

The clerk's base ball club of this place would like to arrange games with the clerks in the other villages for Thursday afternoons. Challenges should be sent to Clerks B. B. C., Box 81.

The Stars of this place went to Three Rivers last Saturday and did the Three Rivers brethren "up" to the tune of 9 to 0. Lynch of the Thorndikes was too much for them; they failed even to get one single hit.

A grand picnic will be held in the church grove on July 4th, by the parishioners of St. Mary's church. Great pains will be taken to make it an enjoyable affair. The amusements will consist of dancing, swinging, etc.

The once flourishing ball club, of which so much has been said, is now, it seems, on the point of disbanding, as there is no interest taken in the club, and unless there is something done at once to revive the interest it will soon be a thing of the past.

Some boys broke into a freight car which was standing near the depot on Sunday, and secured a quantity of liquor which they drank freely, and became so intoxicated as to require the aid of their parents and others to get them home. Three or four of the party were not over 12 or 13 years of age.

The game of ball between the Hansoms and Consolidates, which was played on Saturday last, was full of excitement, and was a close game to the finish, but was won by the Hansoms by a score of 17 to 15. Both clubs, it is said, will play again soon, this time for a supper. The score by innings:

| INNINGS. | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Hansoms | 2 | 3 | 0 | 2 | 0 | 3 | 5 | 0 | 2 | —17 |
| Consolidates | 3 | 1 | 1 | 0 | 2 | 2 | 1 | 3 | 2 | —15 |

Bold Work Done at Night.

Burglars broke into Mrs. Dennis Crowley's house at 2 o'clock Saturday morning. They gained an entrance through one of the windows, and then opened the front door, so in case they were discovered, they could make their escape either way. Miss Crowley heard a noise in her sleeping room and asked who was there, whereupon a man came and pressed his hand on her forehead, telling her to be quiet. She began to scream, when the other members of the household came down stairs with a light, and saw the burglar make his escape through the window. It is said somebody broke into another house near by and carried away three dollars the same night.

MONSON.

The public schools will close next week, Friday.

O'Brien Bros., are out with a new delivery wagon.

Mark Noble lost a valuable horse by colic, Saturday night.

The boys want to know who put turpentine on the horse's back.

The Ware clerks have challenged the Monson clerks to a game of ball.

J. M. Graves has the frame of Luther Peck's new house up and inclosed.

A party of young men went to State Line Tuesday night and had a fish fry.

Steward and Harvey are building an addition to Dr. G. E. Fuller's house on State street.

Special meeting of the Windsor club for the transaction of important business to-morrow evening at 9 o'clock.

Mrs. N. M. Field's Sunday-school class enjoyed a ride to Brimfield Thursday behind J. M. Ward's four-horse team.

The Stafford base ball team defeated the Shamrocks in a game of ball on Flynt's park, Saturday by a score of 19 to 17.

Julius N. Graves is the latest to buy a bicycle, which he hopes will be a source of pleasure, and useful as well in his business.

A ball game between the members of the Windsor club and the Washington club is among the probabilities in the near future.

Forepaugh's circus at Palmer, is the center of attraction to-day, and a large crowd of Monson people have availed themselves of the opportunity of attending.

Engine Co. No. 1, was out for practice, Tuesday evening. A large brush heap was set on fire and the extinguisher turned on, but it did not succeed in putting all the fire out.

It is expected that the repairs on the bridge near R. M. and T. Reynolds's mill will be completed this week, much to the relief of the public, especially the loaded teams, which have been obliged to go around by Bridge street.

Personal.

Robert Cushman of Amherst college was at home Sunday.

E. F. Willis of Springfield spent Sunday among friends here.

F. W. Hall spent a few days with relatives here this week.

Emanual Fozzy has accepted a position in a Boston tonsorial shop.

Mrs. Nathan Blanchard is seriously ill at her home on Green street.

Henry Butler of Butler Bros. is very sick with inflammatory rheumatism.

E. B. Potter, clerk at Gage Bros'., is taking a much needed rest for two weeks.

Miss Helen Thresher is at home after completing her first year at Lasell seminary.

William Potter, for some time repairer at Cushman's mill, has resigned his position there.

Wilbur Holbridge and family are on a visit to his father, William Holbridge, of East Hill.

Children's Day.

At the Congregational church, the decorations were handsome, and were composed almost entirely of wild flowers. The high pulpit and choir gallery were nearly concealed, and the organ was tastefully decorated.

At the Congregational and Methodist churches the juvenile attendance, last Sunday, was much larger than usual, and to them was probably the happiest Sunday in the year. The services in the morning were of a special nature, and sermons by the pastors were especially addressed to the children, while there were interesting concerts in the evening.

At the morning service the children occupied seats in a body in the front of the church, and the sermon by the pastor Rev. F. S. Hatch, was chiefly addressed to them. The service, however, was not different from that of every week. In the evening there was a very large attendance at the concert. The exercises opened with the processional, the various classes, headed by their teachers, marched into the church from the chapel, singing with organ accompaniment. The concert consisted of singing, recitations and a short address by the pastor.

Misses Cantwell, Keep, Feather and Coleman, composing the ladies quartette of this place, carried of the honors at the recital of the Worcester county musical school held at the First Universalist church, at Worcester, Monday and Tuesday evenings. On Monday evening the quartette had the only encore of the evening, and on Tuesday evening Miss May Feather's solo, "Marguerite," was one of two who received encores during the evening, and Charles Orcutt's solo, "Come where the linden bloom," by Buck, was well received. When taken into consideration that this was the best recital the school ever gave, Monson people have every reason to feel proud of such talent.

The services at the Methodist church were of an exceedingly interesting character. The floral display was profuse, the altar, pulpit and choir gallery being simply one huge mass of evergreens, ferns, cultivated and wild flowers, all arranged with excellent taste. Suspended on the left side of the pulpit in large letters, were the words, "Suffer little children to come unto me," and on the opposite side in letters of the same was, "Enter into the courts with praise," while in the center were three arches, with the inscriptions "Rose of Sharon," "Jesus," and "Lily of the Valley." At the morning service, the sermon by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Emerson, was especially addressed to the children, and the choir furnished an excellent programme of music. In the evening was held the children's concert, under the direction of the superintendent, F. M. King, the audience room being filled with an interested audience. The little folks of the primary department took a conspicuous part in the service, and did themselves much credit, and the singing and recitations were much enjoyed. The presiding elder, Rev. Mr. Eaton, was present and briefly addressed the children.

Academy News.

Dr. Ellis again visited the botany class Tuesday afternoon.

The rhetorical work of the term was completed last Friday.

Some of the members of the botany class have collected fifty different specimens of flowers.

J. Julian Tuthill, of the class of '86, was present at the chapel exercises, Thursday morning.

Rev. Mr. Dinsmore, a graduate of the class of '79, was present at the recitations Tuesday morning.

Miss Minnie Flint spent Sunday in town as the guest of her brother, Prof. G. H. Flint of the academy.

The Clipper base ball nine defeated the second nine of the academy, Saturday forenoon, on Flynt's park, by a score of 15 to 14.

The academy base ball nine cross bats with the Stafford high school nine in Flynt's Park Saturday morning, at 9.30. The academys have improved a great deal of late, and a good game may be expected.

The Academys defeated the Wide Awakes of Palmer in a well played game of ball on Flynt's Park last Saturday by a score of 7 to 3. The feature of the game was the catching of Thresher of the Academys.

The academy base ball club play the former students of the academy next Tuesday afternoon. The former students' team is composed as follows: Julian Tuthill, A. L. Squier, L. C. Flynt, Geo. C. Flynt, H. W. Shaw, Edward Lacey, Chas. Keep, W. A. Squier.

The order of the graduating exercises of Monson academy is as follows: Sunday evening, Baccalaureate sermon by Rev. P. W. Lyman, formerly of Belchertown, at the Congregational church. Monday, public examinations. Monday evening, public Linophilian, and trustees' meeting.

The last regular meeting of the term of the Linophilian society was held Friday evening. Owing to the absence of President Fiske the chair was very acceptably filled by Miss Mary Peck. The question for debate was: Resolved. That the publication of Sunday newspapers is a benefit to the country. The weight of argument and merits in favor of the negative.

The 85th anniversary and graduating exercises will be held in Memorial hall Tuesday morning, at 10.30 a. m. The Springfield Orchestral club will furnish music. The following is the order of exercises: Salutatory, Clara Bell Clark; oration, "A Poor Boy's Chance," Albert Eben Thresher; essay, "No Cross, No Crown," Nellie May Leary; essay, "Gates Ajar," Clara Belle Clark; essay, "To See Ourselves as Others See Us," Eliza Leonard Walker; essay with valedictory, "Horizons," Sarah Esther Stebbins; address, "The Education of the Feelings," T. M. Balliet, Ph. D., Springfield. Presentation of diplomas. At 1 p. m., alumni reunion. At 4 p. m., class exercises. At 5 p. m., senior reception.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The state tax for Ware, this year, is $3892.

A picnic and dance at Sturtevant's grove Saturday.

P. E. Grey is to build an addition to his four-tenement block on Water street.

J. W. Lambert has bought the bill boards on Grey's block from Thomas F. Clark.

There is a loud call for repairs on the sidewalk on the west side of Bank street.

Mariot, the barber, has moved to the basement of Storrs' block, under the market of Barnes & Packard.

The officers have raided several places on Aspen and Vigeant streets, but no evidence was secured except in one case.

James Neville's saloon was burglarized last Friday night, and it is reported about $70 and some cigars were taken.

James E. McGrath has given up the boarding house in the old Delavan House block, and gone to Athol to manage a hotel there.

Thomas McArdle was severely injured by being thrown from his wagon on Monday. He was badly bruised and his collar bone broken.

C. W. Eddy has published, this week, a set of views from the tip of the spire of the French Evangelical church, including a fine photo-print of the church itself.

Alexander Duprez fell from his wagon Monday evening, and was so severely injured that he died on Wednesday. He leaves a wife and seven children.

Misses Sadie Hyde, Mabel Storrs, Anna Fenn and Mabel Coney have passed satisfactory examinations and have been admitted to the Mt. Holyoke seminary.

About 60 of our business men met in the district court room Thursday evening to make arrangements for inviting the Northampton Board of Trade to visit Ware.

A golden eagle, measuring six feet eight inches, shot by A. F. Bennett at Forest Lake, was on exhibition at our office on Wednesday evening, and visited by a large number of persons.

Louis N. L'Heureux did not rally from the shock he received, last week, but died on Saturday. It is sad to see the ranks of our business men thinned by the removal of one so young.

The Oregon steamer company are to give a grand social at Firemen's hall, the 29th, and installation of officers. The committee of arrangements are Edward T. Hampton, P. J. Boyle and Charles Martin.

Extensive repairs are being made on the Park sisters' house on Bank street, and when completed Rev. Wm. Morin is expected to move there from the old house, where he has lived so long on North street.

There was a lively runaway, Monday evening, when a large horse attached to F. T. Bosquet's bread wagon ran down North street, and tipped over the wagon in front of Brown & Minor's blacksmith shop.

Children's day will be observed at the Unitarian church, next Sunday, by a special sermon to the children by the pastor at 10.30 a. m. Subject, "Getting a Good Start." Sunday-school concert at 6 o'clock in the evening.

The Sunday-school concert at the East Congregational church, Sunday evening, was one of the best ever given, the little ones giving their recitations, which were well selected, so plainly as to be heard in all parts of the house.

The following officers of the hook and ladder company were elected last evening: Foreman, J. L. Fairbank; 1st assistant, M. T. McMahon; 2d assistant, Wm. O'Brien; clerk, F. S. Cushman; treasurer, H. A. McGrath; steward, Wm. Chabaneau.

A strawberry festival and social dance is to be held under the auspices of the "Circle Canadien," at Music hall, Friday evening, June 22. This society is to send three delegates to the national French convention, to be held at Nassua, the last week in June.

Pliny C. Marsh, a former resident of Ware, and brother of Gamaliel and Daniel C. Marsh, died at Wacross, Ga., June 6th, aged 64 years. He was formerly in the stove and tin business here, a member of the Methodist church and a good man. He leaves two children.

There will be a meeting at Music Hall on Monday evening, to see if any arrangements can be made to celebrate Fourth of July, with a trades procession. Twelve years ago was the last time anything of this kind has been attempted. It is hoped there may be a large turnout, as it is a good advertisement to everybody engaged in it, and enjoyable for the public.

The community were saddened by the report on Sunday, that Mrs. A. W. Edmonds had attempted suicide by shooting, caused by her becoming dispirited, and feeling that no one cared for her. Could she hear the expressions of sympathy and sorrow for her she would be assured that she has many warm friends who will do all in their power to banish this idea from her mind.

One of the most enjoyable entertainments of the season was given at the town hall, Tuesday evening, under the management of Rev. James Boyle, for the benefit of St. William's church. The dramatic recitations by Mr. Younge were good and of excellent moral tone. The music and singing were very fine. Mr. Mulvany, in response to an enthusiastic encore, gave "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep." The singing of Masters John and Henry Kennedy was especially fine, accompanied by their sister, and they had good reason to be proud of their part in pleasing the audience.

The East Congregational parish on Tuesday night elected the following committee to carry out the remodeling of the church, the cost not to exceed $14,000: C. D. Gilbert, George E. Tucker, W. S. Hyde, W. C. Eaton, Calvin Hitchcock and George H. Hall. They also authorized the treasurer, under the direction of the building and parish committees, to raise an additional $2000, which, with the proceeds of the sale or exchange of the present organ, will be used to buy a new organ. The parish committee of the church were empowered to arrange for a place in which to worship during the alterations.

The new French Protestant church on North street will be dedicated next Sunday at 3 o'clock, with this programme:

Invocation Hymn.
Reading of the Scriptures—2 Chron., v. Rev. E. Hitchcock.
Introductory Prayer, Rev. J. Provost.
Responsive Scripture Reading, Rev. C. W. Duffield.
Statement by the pastor, Rev. Thos. A. Dorion
Address, Rev. T. G. A. Cote.
Address, Rev. Alfred T. Perry.
Cantique de Dedicace.
Dedicatory Address, Rev Joshua Coit.
Prayer of Dedication, Rev. E. S. Huntress.
Hymn.
Benediction by the pastor.

The late Mrs. John Jacob Astor's laces, which form one of the finest collections in the world, are in accordance with her wish to be given to the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

The results of high license at St. Paul, Minn., are very striking. The law fixing the saloon license fee at $1000 went into effect February 1, and the number of saloons has been reduced from 780 to 200.

A New York paper pessimistically estimates that one in 10 of the friendless young girls and women that land at Castle Garden go to the bad; that is in five years out of 600,000 who land there, 60,000 are lost.

Fall Brook, Cal., is a prohibition town and all deeds to town lots forever forbid the sale of liquors.

CARD.—L. L. Merrick post, G. A. R., wish to extend their hearty thanks to each and every one who contributed or helped in any way to make Memorial Day so much of a success. The comrades appreciate the respect shown them by the public in the observance of this, their day.

NEWS ABOUT TOWN.

It is the current report about town that Kemp's Balsam for throat and lungs is making some remarkable cures with people who are troubled with coughs, sore throat, asthma, bronchitis and consumption. Any druggist will give you a trial bottle free of cost. It is guaranteed to relieve and cure. The large bottles are 50c. and $1. (4w8)

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she was a Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children she gave them Castoria.

Goodyear's Rubber store, 391 Main-st., Springfield, Mass., offer lawn and garden hose at very low prices. They sell 50 feet of Standard Hose for $5.00, warranted. This is a great bargain. They have Hose Reels and Garden Sprinklers on hand in large variety. When in the city visit this store, where you will find everything in the line of Rubber Goods. (2w10)

INTERESTED PEOPLE.

Advertising a patent medicine in the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam for coughs and colds does, is indeed wonderful. He authorizes all druggists to give those who call for it, a sample bottle free, that they may try it before purchasing. The large bottles are 50c. and $1. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption.

WORTH KNOWING.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, merchant, Lake City. Fla., was taken with a severe Cold, attended with a distressing Cough and running into Consumption in its first stages. He tried many so-called popular cough remedies and steadily grew worse. Was reduced in flesh, had difficulty in breathing and was unable to sleep. Finally tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and found immediate relief, and after using about half a dozen bottles found himself well and has had no return of the disease. No other remedy can show so grand a record of cures, as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption Guaranteed to do just what is claimed for it.—Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 4

RENEWS HER YOUTH.

Mrs. Phœbe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." Try a bottle, 50c. and $1, at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 4

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle. 1y8cow

TO THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.—

Respectfully represent the undersigned, that the public convenience and necessity require the discontinuance of so much of the county highway in the towns of Brimfield and Palmer, as lies between a point on the Tower Hill road, so called, near the house of Theodore Farrell in said Brimfield, to near a house formerly owned by Col. John ton in said Palmer, and also the discontinuance of so much of the county highway in said towns as lies between a point on the Fenton Bridge road, so called, near said house of Col. John Fenton, and a point near the house occupied by Oscar D. Wells in Brimfield.

And the undersigned further represent that the public convenience and necessity require that a new highway be laid out in said Brimfield, commencing near the the said house of Theodore Farrell and ending near the said house of Oscar D. Wells.

Wherefore they pray that you will view the premises aforesaid, and grant the prayers of this petition.

SULPHUR

BITTERS

THE GREATEST BLOOD PURIFIER KNOWN.

This Great German Medicine is the cheapest and best. 128 doses of SULPHUR BITTERS for One Dollar. It will cure the worse cases of skin disease, from a common pimple on the face to that awful disease scrofula. SULPHUR BITTERS is the best medicine to use in all cases of such stubborn and deep-seated diseases. DO NOT EVER TAKE BLUE PILLS or mercury; they are deadly. Place your trust in SULRHUR BITTERS, the purest and best medicine ever made. Is your tongue coated with a yellow, sticky substance? Is your breath foul and offensive? Your stomach is out of order. USE SULPHUR BITTERS immediately. Is your urine thick, ropy, cloudy or high colored? DON'T WAIT! Your kidneys are out of order. Use SULPHUR BITTERS. If you are sick, no matter what ails you, use SULPHUR BITTERS. Don't wait until you are unable to walk, or are flat on your back, but get some at once. It will cure you. SULPHUR BITTERS IS THE INVALID'S FRIEND. The young, the aged and tottering are soon made well by its use. Remember what you read here, it may save your life; it has saved hundreds. Don't wait until to-morrow, TRY A BOTTLE TO-DAY! Are you low-spirited and weak, or suffering from the excesses of youth? If so,

CURE OF CANCER AND ULCERS.

Judge T. C. McLendon writes to the Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., under the date of February 14, 1888: "About three years ago, Jerry Bradley, a colored man, had a cancerous sore on his face, near the right eye. It caused him a great deal of pain, and he lost the sight of the eye, but was finally cured of the cancer by the use of Swift's Specific. This case is well-known in Wilkes Co., Ga., where he lived (near Danbury), and of this case, I, myself, had personal knowledge."

Mr. L. Cox, of Arkabutla, Tate Co., Miss., writes February 24, 1888: "I suffered a great deal from old ulcers for six years. Your medicine was recommended to me, and after using six bottles, I was completely cured. I never saw its equal as a blood purifier. My neighbors will use no other. Your medicine does even more than you claim for it. I have known it to cure cases which were thought to be hopeless. It is the best medicine made."

Mrs. A. M. Goldsmith, No. 674 Warren St., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes February 22, 1888: "I commenced using S. S. S., about three years ago. I had suffered with a sore throat for over a year, when I commenced using your remedy. I used a great many other remedies with no good results. My little girl also had sore fingers; it commenced from the quick, and then the nails would come off. We doctored her for over two years, and when I commenced using S. S. S., I thought I would see what it would do for me. I am thankful to say that it entirely cured her. It is the best remedy I know of for the blood. I really believe it was the means of saving my life. The doctor told me I had a throat disease similar to General Grant's. I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from disordered blood. I use it now as a tonic whenever I think I need it."

Mr. B. F. George, Miford P. O., Ellis Co., Texas, writes: "I had a cancerous wart or mole on my eyelid, as large as the end of my thumb, which had the appearance of cancer, from which I suffered a long time. Seeing the S. S. S. advertised I commenced using it, and after the use of a few bottles the sore dropped out, my cancer was gone, and I was entirely relieved."

Mr. G. W. Pettis, of Aiken, S. C., writes: "I was a sufferer from cancer of the breast, and had been under the treatment of five physicians, but it did me no good. It was so bad that I had to stop work. After taking a course of S. S. S. I was entirely cured."

The Economical Girl.

She's a dashing little student
Of economy, and prudent,
In a most painstaking fashion,
I would really have you know;
And she looked with eyes upglancing,
Most bewitchingly entrancing,
And my thoughts flew back to courtship,
Many happy years ago;
Soon her gaze grew fond and fonder,
And then I began to ponder
Some sweet words I'd whisper to her
Of a liberty I'd take;
But she smiled a smile Platonic
And she said in words laconic:
"What a splendid lot of carpet rag
Your overcoat would make!"

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

A "corner in kisses" is reported. A corner is a good place for a kiss—especially a dark corner.—Norristown Herald.

Bobby—"What are the wages of sin, pa?" Father—"Depends on the locality. In Washington they'll average about five thousand a year."—Texas Siftings.

A Case of Must—Mr. Ham (the eminent tragedian)—"The dramatic profession in this country, my dear sir, is making rapid strides." Dear Sir—(very much impressed) —"Yes; I suppose it has to at times to get out of the way of trains."—Tid Bits.

Tramp (to woman)—"Can you give me something to eat, madam?" Woman—"Naw; there ain't a thing in the house; an', besides I have got a couple of letters to write an' no time to bother." Tramp (pleadingly)—"Madam, let me lick the stamps, I can't starve."—New York Sun.

Invalid—"Oh, Anabel, I'm so glad you've come; I had the most horrible dream last night; I dreamt I died and that I met that horrid Susan Dingley with the angels, and her halo fitted her ever so much better than mine did me, and her wings were too beautiful for anything.—Life.

Dr. Agnew says, "That no man has lived to be one hundred years old since biblical times." The doctor has evidently never traveled in Vermont, where at every railroad station there are five or six centenarians standing around to help the train pull up and get started again.—Burlington Free Press.

"How to be happy, though married.—Jabber—"Hello, old man! Spring cleaning up at your house this week?" Jiber—"No, not much!" Jabber—"No? How in the world do you get rid of the pesky thing?" Jiber—"Easy enough. We move into a new house on the first of May."—Lowell Citizen.

"Mabel, I love you." The words came forth like the plaintive, vibrant sigh of an Æolian harp. "It can never be." "But I am rich, and I can furnish you with every luxury. Besides, I am doing well in my profession, and may one day be famous." "I know it, Harold, but you cannot tell the difference between a home run and a three-base hit."—Merchant Traveler.

A SALT MONOPOLY.

In Italy, salt and tobacco are government monopolies, and the person who sells them has to display the royal arms over his door, and is obliged to sell postage stamps and stamped contract paper.

This salt monopoly is very hard on the people. The salt comes from the government works in Sardinia, and is sold for export at one centesimo a kilo, while the Italians had to pay sixty-six centesimi for the same amount. So much was said of the hard effect of this tax on the people, of the increase of scrofula, pelagra, and such terrible scourges, that about a year ago the government reduced the price of salt to forty-four centimes a kilo. It is needless to say that salt smuggling is a regular business. The Swiss buy it for one centisimo a kilo, load it on men's backs and send them on a weary tramp over the mountains to carry it back to Italy. But the salt dealers in Italy can only buy a certain amount of salt at a time and their stores are liable to be visited and weighed at any moment by the custom officers,—and then woe be to the man who has more salt than he has bought! In the country keepers of cattle are permitted to buy from the government a certain kind of coarse salt, but they must have a certificate showing how many animals they have to care for. The peasants often boil and evaporate this salt for family use, but if they are caught at this illicit stilling heavy fines and imprisonments await them.—Marie Gozzaldi, in Good Housekeeping.

A HEAVY SEA ON.

Joseph Cook met with a painful accident on his way to Japan. During the prolonged continuance of most vehement meterological disturbances and electrical discharges and phenomena, accompanied by irregular and violent undulations and movements of the saline aqua, he was impelled from his insecurely established footing on the superior deck to a recumbent position on the deck subjacent, the broadness of the deck, aggravated by the nailness of the spikes, dismembered the cartilaginousness of the enribbed sides. The injuries caused by the fallness of the fall were skilfully ensurged by the chirurgeon, and in the near to be, the ecrochasmilated antichism resulting from these saline-aquatic porphyritic blendings will leave no residue of their one-time hereness in the system of the sufferer, who will remember them only by their ever-present goneness.

"Husband in?" asked the assessor, cheerfully. "No," answered the woman, "he isn't home." "Expecting him soon?" asked the assessor. "Well," the woman replied, thoughtfully, "I don't know exactly; I've been lookin' for him 17 years, and he hasn't showed up yet. You travel round a good deal, and if you see a man who looks as though he'd make me a pretty good husband, tell him I'm still a-waitin' and send him along. How's your wife?" But the assessor wrote something in his book and, without speaking, slid softly away, with the cautious gaite of a man walking over a thin place in the ice.—Brooklyn Eagle.

ALL HIS OWN—Captain Hightone (looking at Mr. Crœsus' flowers)—Aw—what are these flowers, Miss Crœsus?

Miss Crœsus—Oh, those belong to the Orchid family.

Mr. Crœsus—Orchid family indeed. They ain't no flowers in this here conservatory but what belongs to our own family. All bought'n paid fer. We don't do no borryin' from the Orchid family nor any other family.—The Beacon.

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one in warm weather, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

"I was all run down and unfit for business. I was induced to take a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it built me right up so that I was soon able to resume work. I recommend it to all who are afflicted." D. W. BRATE, stone-cutter, No. 4 Martin St., Albany, N. Y.

FRENCH EVANGELICAL CHURCH, NORTH STREET, WARE.]

The church which now has its home in this neat and convenient church edifice was organized September 27, 1887, with 22 charter members and Rev. Thomas A. Dorion installed as pastor, although for some time previous to this there had been a mission society here, holding meetings in Grand Army Hall and the chapel of the East Congregational church. The church was incorporated February 2d, 1888. Work was commenced in preparing the foundations for this building in November, 1887, and the corner stone laid with appropriate ceremonies March 18th, 1888.

The plan of the building is excellently adapted to its use, class rooms for the Sunday-school being arranged to be thrown into the auditorium when desired, giving a seating capacity of 350. The interior is neatly finished, and lighted by 25 incandescent electric lamps.

My Creed.

I hold that Christian peace abounds
Where charity is seen; that when
We climb to Heaven, 'tis on the rounds
Of love to men.

I hold all else named piety
A selfish scheme, a vain pretense,
Where centre is not—can there be Circumference?

That I moreover hold and dare
Affirm where'er my rhyme may go—
Whatever things be sweet or fair,
Love makes them so.

'Tis not the phylactery,
Nor stubborn taste, nor stated prayers
That makes us saints; we judge the tree
By what it bears.

And when a man may live apart
From worlds, on theologic trust,
I know the blood about his heart
Is dry as dust.

—Anon.

A VILLAGE SCANDAL.

"I do not believe it!" said Mrs. Grant emphatically.

"But what everybody says must be true," persisted Mrs. Jeffrey.

"By no means," said Helen Grant. "Once everybody said the earth was flat, now we all know it is round."

"Speak for yourself,' retorted Mrs. Jeffrey. "I don't know it's round, but I'm willing to believe it on good evidence. Thank Heaven, I'm not so stubborn that I won't believe. I'm one of the sort that can be convinced of a thing even if I don't see it."

Mrs. Grant flushed a little and tears came to her eyes.

"She is my friend, and I love her dearly," she said. "She has faults—every one can see that—but this wicked, shameful story, I simply cannot believe it. Oh Mrs. Jeffrey, can you not see that it is a matter of conscience with me as well as with you?"

Mrs. Jeffrey, a little ashamed, but of the same opinion still, rose to go.

"If the matter is brought up in the church, you will then hear all the evidence. After you see the letter you may change your mind."

Pine Falls was convulsed over its first scandal. The tongue of censure that had faintly reproved when Abram Harris had carried his mother off to the poor house, and indulged in audible criticism when Laura Cowles had been baptized in the river in midwinter during a revival and died of inflamatory rheumatism a week afterward, had now broken silence and carried the story from house to house until it was on everybody's lips.

A mania for visiting seemed to have broken out among the ladies. Half-a-dozen could be seen any day, with a little bundle of knitting or crocheting in hand, going to make informal visits or calls at the homes of their intimate friends or neighbors. To be sure, each lady was very particular to explain, if opportunity offered, that she had promised Mrs. So-and-so a new stitch or pattern, or she had been intending to take her work and "run in" to see Mrs. Such-a-one for six months or more. It is really a shame to neglect one's neighbors so.

Mrs. Jeffrey and Mrs. Martin were seated on the back porch of the Jeffrey mansion, engaged in earnest and confidential conversation. Overhead in the apple tree the robin sang unheard. On the floor a mischievous kitten played with Mrs. Martin's ball of zephyr, tangling the tread unheeded, while her crochet lay idly in her lap.

"She always did seem frivolous to me," remarked Mrs. Jeffrey. "No care of her house, no interest in domestic matters. There's a great deal said these days about a woman hiding a God-giving talent under a bushel, and smothering her genius under domestic drudgery; but I've noticed that the women who are domestic and take an interest in their homes are not the women who figure in scandal cases or elopements."

"Perhaps," replied Mrs. Martin, who was not so conservative as her neighbor, "there's a great deal of human nature in women as well as in men. Most of them take an interest in some one thing besides housekeeping. With some it is painting; with others music; and others fancy work, or religion. I've known women who were really dissipated, you might say, in religious work; they carried it to such unreasonable lengths. You and I, not being gifted in any of these directions, have gone on in plain, quiet home life. But we must not, on that account, find fault with those who see life from a different standpoint, or call them frivolous because they take an interest in things we don't care for. Mrs. Downs was always fond of dress and fancy work, but until this story came out everybody seemed to like her."

"Well, you can say what you please," returned Mrs. Jeffrey, wrathfully, "when a woman behaves herself, she won't be talked about. The most shameful part of the whole affair is her assumed innocence. I saw her myself walking the streets with Mr. Colton only last evening as cool as you please. If there's a man in this village that I pity, it's Jack Downs."

* * * * * *

The next day was Sunday, and the minister, Mr. Snow, looked around at the rapidly filling pews with a feeling of calm complacency. Everybody belonging to the congregation was there. Every face wore a look of keen expectancy, and when Jack Downs entered with his pretty young wife, significant looks were exchanged and a suppressed sensation was visible throughout the audience.

Youthful and pretty, she added to these attractions by a taste in dress that was simply perfect. As she came slowly up the aisle twirling her fan nonchalantly, whispered comments passed from one to another.

"How brazen! Did you ever see such effrontery?" murmured Mrs. Dorr to Mrs. Cowles.

"She's a plucky little piece!" said Mr. Martin to his wife, in a tone in which surprise was so evidently flavored with admiration that his better half bestowed on him a glance of withering scorn.

"What audacity?" said Mrs. Brown to her daughter Cora.

But that young lady who rejoiced in the distinction of being the village poetess was wrapped in poetic contemplation. She knew that Mrs. Downs had fallen under public disapprobation because of a love letter that had been found by some one, addressed to her in Mr. Colton's handwriting.

Other people saw the reprehensible married flirt accepting protestations of love from a gentleman acquaintance. Not so, Miss Cora. This Byronic state of affairs did not so much shock her moral sensibilities, as it presented a theme for her muse to portray the agonies of misplaced affection. Viewing the matter simply as an abstraction, she surreptiously drew out her hymn book and slyly penciled on the margin:

Let the cold world deride me
I will but love thee more,
Whatever fate betide thee—

Here she stopped, the only rhyme that suggested itself being "gore." Struggling with the situation she had just chanced the line, "I will not shed thy gore," to "My heart but can adore," when she was recalled to herself by the sound of Mr. Snow's voice as he finished reading the usual list of notices.

"A most painful circumstance having arisen that seriously affects us as well as a congregation, since it compromises the good name of two of our members, I feel it a duty to afford an opportunity for a full explanation. The congregation is invited to meet at the parsonage to-morrow evening at 8 o'clock. I hope that every member of this congregation will be present."

After that it mattered little whether the sermon was a marvel of brilliancy or the dullest disquistion that ever bored a long-suffering audience. No one paid the slightest attention to it, expect old Major Dorr, who was so deaf that he only caught one word in ten, and had thus missed the story of the love-letter that the school teacher had written to Mrs. Downs.

After the conclusion of the services Mrs. Cowles, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Jeffrey stopped in the aisle for a moment's conference.

"I shall take Beatrice Cenci out of the school," said Mrs. Jeffrey. "No child of mine shall be under the instruction of a teacher who writes love letters to a married woman."

"And to think that Mr. Snow should attempt to cover it up and excuse it!" added Mrs. Cowles. "I don't know but we shall be obliged to withdraw from the church. My husband thinks there is a great deal of corruption among ministers themselves nowadays."

Certainly no one was better able to detect corruption anywhere than Mr. Cowles, if half the stories of his own immoral escapades could be relied upon. But Mrs. Cowles friends remained discreetly silent on this point.

"I shall not allow Cora to go to the parsonage to-morrow evening," interposed Mrs. Brown. "I think the discussion of such subjects has a most demoralizing effect on young people. It is a deplorable affair all round.

But when the evening came Cora did go. More than that, to her mother's great horror, she crossed the room and sat down by Jack Downs and his wife, who sat alone on the long sofa, although a great many were standing up around the large parlors."

This was not so much from sympathy with Mrs. Downs, as a professional instinct such as that which compels a surgeon to investigate all sorts of pathological monstrosities. She wanted to observe for herself the ravages of remorse, humiliation and unhappy love, the better to finish her poem.

But Mrs. Downs was as pretty, as gay and as nonchalant as ever. Once or twice she whispered behind her fan to her husband, and once she actually laughed, which so outraged the sensibilities of the more severely virtuous matrons that they shuddered with horror.

Mr. Colton was a romantic looking young man, with disheveled hair and a look of general shrewdness. He had lately come to Pine Falls as a teacher, and now stood leaning against the mantel. His romantic appearance, so attractive to the ladies, was due to his hair, which he wore long on account of his ears, they being enormously large, and an interesting pallor, which was caused by dyspepsia, and not by unhappy love, as the young ladies supposed.

"I have here," said Mr. Snow, "a letter which has been a theme of much severe comment. The envelope is addressed to Mrs. Downs, and it was picked up in the street by Mrs. Martin's little son, who took it to his father's grocery. The contents are in a different penmanship, with Mr. Colton's name as signature. I will ask Mr. Colton to make an explanation, which will no doubt, be satisfactory."

"Satisfactory!" repeated Mr. Cowles, with more spirit than politeness. "It seems to me that when a man writes in that style to another man's wife calling her husband a base wretch"—here he cast an indignant glance at Jack Downs—"and urging her to run away with him, a satisfactory explanation is not an easy matter."

"You are mistaken, sir," answered Mr. Colton. "An explanation in this case is very easily made. I am a member of an amateur theatrical club, and I wrote out my part at Mr. Downs, one evening, copying it out of a book of his. Mrs. Downs gave me an envelope from one of her letters that lay on the table, to put the manuscript in, and I unfortunately lost it on my way home. I will now read the lines, if Mr. Cowles will look over the printed pages and see if I read them correctly."

Shameful Mr. Cowles looked on while Mr. Colton read, with much dramatic effect:

My angel, fly with me!
Afar in other lands beyond the sea
We'll build a house sacred to love and thee
Scorn the base wretch who in your humble home
Profanes the name of love—ah, be my own!
And Heaven is not so high, nor earth so vast
But that its treasures at thy feet I'll cast.

"There is a full page of it, with my name signed at the bottom, but this will suffice, I think," and Mr. Colton coolly sat down, while a look of consternation went round the room.

Mrs. Downs went up to Helen Grant and kissed her.

"Thank you, dear, for your faith in me. I heard all about it, and I'll never forget it as long as I live."

She looked so gentle and girlish in her dainty white draperies, with that look of childish gratitude in her blue eyes, that kind-hearted Mrs. Jeffrey went up and put her motherly arm around her, and said with tears in her eyes:

"Forgive—forgive us all, won't you?"

Jack answered for her.

"She forgives you, we both, forgive, you neighbors and friends; but if any man repeats such stuff again, about my wife or any other woman, I give him warning here and now that it will afford me infinite pleasure to give him a sound thrashing."

And that was the last of the great scandal at Pine Falls.

THE CONTRIVANCE HE WANTED.—"Mr. Doppenheimer, I want to introduce a burglar-alarm into your house. It will indicate at which door or window—"

"I don't want none of dose tings. I don' bodder me mit burglars."

"Once you have tried them, Mr. Doppenheimer—"

"Look here, meester. If you wash got a contrivance what keeps mine wife from goin' dru mine pockets when I wash ashleep, den I talk mit you a leedle bit."—Harper's Bazar.

TRAVEL REMINISCENCES.

A trip to New York enriches the memory with many reminiscences, whatever route one chooses to reach the metropolitan city of our country. Traveling by rail is usually tedious. Only too frequently you are driven to tax your ingenuity to invent means to beguile the weariness that is overwhelming in its oppressiveness. But the route from Palmer to New York has much of interest in the picturesque scenery through which it lies. Now one skirts the Connecticut, sparkling silver bright in the sunlight, and seeming to revel in joyous consciousness of the liberty that spring has brought it after its winter's long imprisonment. Now your speed through stretches of meadow, which, beautiful in its dress of green, fascinates the eye and forces upon your thoughts the great and wonderful change that in a few weeks has taken place in nature. Now you suddenly whirl from the peaceful calm of the country into the bustle and turmoil of the city. Church steeples—tall chimneys—towering blocks—crowded streets—the fierce contention of indescribable noises for supremacy—all impress you with the significance of that word much used and vaunted, but so little understood—civilization. It was my fortune to be in New York on that beautiful holiday which our country has dedicated to the memory of her patriot and heroic dead. On Memorial Day there was a general suspension of business—the business of a great city. Crowds thronged the streets and rendered the principal thoroughfares almost impassable. They came from the bank, store, shop and the exchange. The surrounding towns poured their thousands into the sea of humanity. This vast concourse of men, women and children, dressed in holiday attire, was of itself an impressive sight. But when you reflected upon the cause that brought together these innumerable thousands it transcended the impressive and became the sublime. Practical America? Yes, but sentimental, too. On this day she pays homage to sentiment in one of its highest exemplifications. She bows the knee and drops the tear, while with hands trembling with emotion, she bedecks with flowers the soldier's grave. Sight beautiful and sublime, indeed. And men, long after the duties of Memorial Day are over, feel themselves better beings. They return to their daily toil refreshened and strengthened in soul from this single day's sojourn, into the ethereal and spiritualizing atmosphere of true sentiment. This Memorial Day in New York was made memorable in New York by the visit of the chief executive of the nation. President Cleveland had come from Washington to partake in its celebration. All were eager to catch a glimpse of his face, and, though he rode in an open barouche, many were disappointed in their desire. The military display was one of the grandest ever seen in the city. One of our first visits was to the famous St. Patrick's cathedral. Few edifices attract so many visitors as this grand monument to Catholicity. It is situated in the most aristocratic part of the city, on the highest elevation of Fifth Ave., corner of Fiftieth Street, opposite the palatial residences of the Vanderbilts, and not far from Central Park. It is a majestic structure, and art has lavished her riches upon it. There is no structure in this country that will compare with it. It is acknowledged to be the most magnificent ecclesiastical building in America. Only in Europe will you find its equal. The style of architecture is that almost universally used in Roman Catholic churches—the classical Gothic, and art critics all admire its imposing grandeur. It is constructed of the finest white marble in the form of a Latin cross, and is surmounted by two spires, three hundred and twenty-seven feet high, which are decorated with statuary. It is three hundred and thirty-two feet long, one hundred and thirty-two feet in general width, and at the transcept, one hundred and seventy-eight feet. It was begun in 1858, and finished in 1880. The interior of the cathedral is as equally imposing as its exterior. The view is not in the least obstructed, although it contains many pillars which support the vault, nearly 90 feet in height. The high alter is built of the richest Italian marble. It cost fifty thousand dollars, and is alone worth a visit to New York to see. Grand at all times, it is surpassingly so when illuminated. On the day which we visited the cathedral, a solemn requiem high mass was being celebrated in the presence of Archbishop Corrigan. From the cathedral we proceeded along Fifth Avenue, lined on either side by grand residences, than which none more beautiful exist in any of the world's cities. At 34th street we saw the white marble palace of the late A. T. Stewart. Broadway of course with its wealth of handsome residences attracted our attention. The Fifth Avenue, Brunswick, Gilsey, Metropolitan and the Astor House all were seen and admired. We paid hasty visits to the City Hall, Post Office, the world-renowned Castle Garden, and Staten Island with its sailors' home, while we obtained a general view of the city by a ride on the elevated railways. We decided to return by way of the Sound, and took passage in what is called the finest vessel afloat—the mamoth "Pilgrim" of the Fall River line. No money has been spared to render beautiful this queen of the Sound. It is a work of art and is Oriental in its rich magnificence. We would certainly advise any one who visits New York to see it. He will be amply repaid for his time and trouble. We sailed at 5 p. m., and swiftly steamed down the harbor, with New York on our left, and Jersey City on our right. Doubling the battery, we left in our rear Staten and Bedloe's Islands, the latter proud in its possession of the famous statue of the goddess of liberty, while in a few minutes more we passed under that wonderful achievement of modern ingenuity—Brooklyn Bridge. Soon we sped by Blackwell's, Ward's and Randall's Islands with their many elemosynary institutions, and were fairly upon the Sound. When night set in, we betook ourselves to the parlors. A band discoursed excellent music, and caused the hours before bed time to pass pleasantly by. The weather had been fair when we started, but gradually a fog overspread the waters, which so thickened that at Point Judith it was difficult to penetrate it for any distance. The fog horn constantly sounded its solemn notes of warning. These fogs are the terror of the Sound—crowded at all times with craft of every description, plying their course on this highway of commerce between Boston and New York. We reached Fall River in the morning and proceeded directly to Boston. We returned home well satisfied with our pleasurable excursion.

NOTES ON INSOMNIA.

What pleases me, when I am tormented with sleeplessness, is a little health book of my own, in which I have jotted down a few—a very few— of the "infallible remedies" for sleeplessness which had been tried in thousands—or perhaps it was millions of cases, most of which were in the prescriber's own immediate family, or, at the farthest, circle of intimate friends, and has never once failed to effect a permanent and, it is needless to say, instant cure. All of these cases collectively and each one by itself individually were and was exactly like my own in cause, duration and operation. The simplicity of the combined remedy appeals at once to human confidence:

Eat nothing within three hours before retiring.

Eat a light but substantial luncheon just before going to bed. Nature abhors a vacuum. (This is one of the perscriptions I like.)

Read light literature before going to bed.

Read nothing after supper. Walk a mile in the open air just before bed-time.

Go to your room an hour before retiring and read until bed-time. Give up smoking altogether.

If you are a smoker, a cigar just before retiring will soothe and tranquilize your nerves until you can't keep awake.

Don't think about sleeping; you scare away slumber by wooing the drowsy god.

Resolutely resolve as you lie down that you will go to sleep, and sleep will come naturally.

Take a warm bath, and go from the tub into bed.

Take a cold sponge bath, jump into bed, and you'll be asleep before your head touches the pillow.

Walk slowly about your room an hour.

Lie on your right side, with your cheek on your hand.

Lie on your left side, with your head resting on your arm.

Count up to a thousand. (I tried this inhuman bit of idiocy one night. I came very near falling asleep two or three times, but was startled wide awake by suddenly becoming conscious that I had lost my count, and had to begin over again. This cure kept me awake one whole night, when I was so sleepy I could scarcely hold my eyes open. The friend who gave me the prescription is not living now. She was a woman, and I could not, as a gentleman, offer her violence. So I dosed a box of marshmellows with Rough on Rats and sent them to her.)

Drink milk. (This, according to my experience, is the best prescription in the lot. It will make you sleep better then all the bromides going, which are snares and delusions. But milk diet not only makes you sleep at night, but you want to sleep all the next day. It makes you intolerably stupid all the time. It is a very pleasant, half-awake feeling, if you have nothing else to do but to enjoy falling asleep at any time and in all manner of places, like Colville in the best-told story of these times, "Indian Summer;" but if you have any work to do it is embarrassing.)

So, what is a sleepless man who wants to sleep going to do? If he eats a light luncheon, smokes a mild cigar, reads Bunner an hour, walks a mile in the air, comes back and walks another mile about his room, takes a sponge bath, cold, followed by a tub bath, warm, drink a pint of milk, jumps into bed and lies on both sides, with his head on one arm and on one hand, and counts a thousand, it will be time to get up, anyhow, and he can have a few nervous fits during the day.

It is a fact, however, that even men who suffer from sleeplessness do not lie awake half so long as they imagine they do. When a man says to me, "I did not close my eyes once all night," I know he lies. Not intentionally, of course; he thinks he was awake all night; the probability is that he did not get to sleep until two hours after the regular time, and it seemed an age to him. Really, it isn't often that a man lies awake the whole night through. I am not physician, and cannot speak by the book, but I believe that men fib about their sleepless nights more than any other ill to which our weak humanity is heir. Now, take your own case; you remember the last time you lay awake all night, don't you? Yes, I see you do. Well, don't you remember that same night you heard the clock strike two, and then the next time you heard it, it struck seven? Yes, I see you do. Well that's one of the mysteries about insomnia that is difficult to explain.

"There seems to be nothing in the market," said Mrs. Hendricks despairingly, to the widow Jenkins, who had just dropped in for a moment. "I'm worried to death to know what to get for—" "Why, ma," interrupted Bobby, who was laboriously penciling his name on the wall, "I heard you say Mrs. Jenkins was in the market."—Bazar.

Sweet boy visitor—"Where is the cat and dog, Mrs. Blank?" "We haven't any, my dear." "That's funny!" "Why is it funny, pet?" "'Cause mamma said you and Mr. Blank lived a perfect cat and dog life."—Detroit Free Press.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 22, 1888.

Gen. Sheridan is improving slowly but surely, with a fair prospect of recovery.

President Cleveland has directed that the civil service rules be applied to the railroad mail service. This is an important step, but its immediate effects would have been very much better if it had been done before large numbers of efficient clerks had been discharged to make room for men whose chief recommendation was their Democracy.

At the recent Democratic national convention at St. Louis Mrs. Meriweather, who addressed the convention on woman suffrage, was jeered and insulted by the hoodlum delegates. This week, at Chicago, the Republican platform committee treated the ladies who presented the same subject with the utmost respect and attention. One party may not favor woman suffrage more than the other in its platfrom, but the Republicans have sufficient self-respect at least to treat the ladies in a gentlemanly way.

The Presidential Problem.

The result of the next election can be predicted with tolerable certainty in nearly every state, though there are enough doubtful ones to make the final result entirely uncertain. The Republican party can confidently count on the electoral votes of the following states:—

REPUBLICAN STATES.

| | Electoral Votes. | | Electoral Votes. |
|---|---|---|---|
| California, | 8 | Nebraska, | 5 |
| Colorado, | 3 | Nevada, | 3 |
| Illinois, | 22 | New Hampshire, | 4 |
| Iowa, | 13 | Ohio, | 23 |
| Kansas, | 9 | Oregon, | 3 |
| Maine, | 6 | Pennsylvania, | 30 |
| Massachusetts, | 14 | Rhode Island, | 4 |
| Michigan, | 13 | Vermont, | 4 |
| Minnesota, | 7 | Wisconsin, | 11 |
| TOTAL, | | 182. | |

The Democrats are equally sure of good majorities in the following 16 states:—

DEMOCRATIC STATES.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Alabama, | 10 | Mississippi, | 9 |
| Arkansas, | 7 | Missouri, | 16 |
| Delaware, | 3 | North Carolina, | 11 |
| Florida, | 4 | South Carolina, | 9 |
| Georgia, | 12 | Tennessee, | 12 |
| Kentucky, | 13 | Texas, | 13 |
| Louisiana, | 8 | Virginia, | 12 |
| Maryland, | 8 | West Virginia, | 6 |
| TOTAL, | | 153. | |

The result of the battle will therefore be determined by the votes of the four remaining:—

DOUBTFUL STATES.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Connecticut, | 6 | New Jersey, | 9 |
| Indiana, | 15 | New York, | 36 |
| TOTAL, | | 66. | |

There are 401 electoral votes, and 201 are necessary to elect. The Republicans must have 29 votes from the doubtful states, to win, and the Democrats 48. With New York, Republican success would be assured, but the Democrats must have Indiana, or Connecticut and New Jersey, in addition, to carry the day. In this connection it is noted as a singular fact that, with one exception, either Connecticut or New Jersey, or both, have stood with New York in every presidential election since the beginning of the present century.

THE CHICAGO CONVENTION.

The Republican national convention began its sessions at Chicago Tuesday noon in the new and spacious Auditorium hall, which will seat 7900 people, and is admirably adapted for such a gathering. Chairman B. F. Jones of Pittsburg called the convention to order. Among the interesting episodes of the day were the appearance of Gen. John C. Fremont, the first presidential candidate of the party, and Fred Douglass, and the presentation of a gavel made from an oak under which the Republican party was born in Michigan. John M. Thurston of Nebraska was the temporary chairman, and he made a notable address. Its most significant passage was his reference to Mr. Blaine, in which he said:

> With the sublime magnanimity of his incomparable greatness he has denied us the infinite pleasure of supporting him in this convention. Desiring above all things party harmony and success, he has stepped from the certain ladder of his own laudable ambition that some other man may climb to power. As his true friends we cannot, dare not commit the political crime of disobedience to his expressed will. We cannot place him at the head of the ticket, but we will make him commander-in-chief at the head of the forces in the field.

This declaration was received with cheers from all parts of the convention, and was accepted as a quietus upon Mr. Blaine's fool friends.

The convention completed its permanent organization Wednesday with M. M. Estee of California as chairman. An evening session was held, but the only business accomplished was the acceptance of the report of the committee on credentials.

Yesterday morning the platform was reported by the committee, and was received with the greatest enthusiasm. It is a clear, forcible and rousing declaration of principles, and will well repay a careful perusal. Protection is advocated to the fullest extent. The platform affirms that its temporary abandonment has always been attended with disaster to all interests "except those of the usurer and the sheriff," and denounces the Mills bill in general and the free wool proposition in particular. It recognizes the necessity of reducing the revenue, and marks out a definite policy to this end, comprising the repeal of the tax upon tobacco as "an annoyance and burden to agriculture," the removal of the tax upon spirits used in the arts and for mechanical purposes, and such a revision of the tariff as will tend to check importation of articles produced by our people, and will free from duties such articles of foreign production, except luxuries, as cannot be produced at home. If the revenues are still excessive, the platform declares the entire repeal of internal taxes to be preferable to the surrender of any part of the protective system. There are strong declarations in favor of strengthening the navy and the national defences, fostering our merchant marine and protecting the fishermen. The weak foreign policy of the administration is denounced sharply. There is a strong and explicit declaration upon civil service reform, quite in contrast with the silence of the Democratic platform on this subject. The declaration for a free and honest ballot, the denunciation of "trusts," the restatement of Republican policy on the public lands question, the demand for the admission of the territories, the call for the reduction of letter postage, the deliverances on polygamy, bi-metallism and free schools, and the resolution on pensions are expressed with moderation and firmness, and are in clear accord with established Republican principles.

In the afternoon came the presentation of candidates, Gen. Hawley, Gresham, Harrison, Allison, Alger, Depew, Sherman, Fitler and Rusk being named in turn. Gov. Foraker aroused the greatest enthusiasm by nominating Senator Sherman, but who the candidate will be, nobody can tell yet. Balloting began when the convention reassembled at 11 a. m. to-day.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

C. D. Holbrook is out with a new delivery wagon.

The Block Island train will be put on the New London road for the season June 30.

Squier's new ice cream parlor seems to be much appreciated these warm summer evenings.

The baseball diamond on the park, which was badly damaged by Forepaugh's circus, is being repaired.

Dr. William Holbrook attended the reunion of the 10th Mass. Regt. at North Adams yesterday.

Rev. Mr. Hatch, of Monson, will speak to the children at the state primary school Sunday morning.

A subscription paper has been circulated this week to obtain money for repainting the Second Congregational church.

The graduating class of the high school attended the graduating exercises of Monson Academy in a body Tuesday.

A requiem high mass was celebrated at St. Thomas's Catholic church last Friday for the repose of the soul of James Burns.

James S. Clark of Chicopee, formerly of Lord & Clark, confectioners, has accepted a position in the provision market of F. C. Hatch.

Dr. William Holbrook has greatly improved the appearance of his North Main street tenement house by grading the yard surrounding it.

W. H. Kellogg has just invented a neat water-proof leather shoe which promises to be extensively worn as soon as it is put upon the market.

The marriage intention of John O'Connor and Miss Annie Murphy was published for the second time last Saturday at St. Thomas's Catholic church.

Sunday evening services at St. Paul's Universalist church will be discontinued during the summer months, beginning with next Sunday evening.

New writing desks containing the advertisements of nearly all the local business men have been placed in the office at each of the hotels in this village.

Dr. G. H. Wilkins is grading his recently-purchased lot on Pleasant street, and will soon convert the homestead of the late Lucy D. Tiffany into a double tenement house.

Harry, son of A. H. Stockwell of this place, was married Wednesday to Rosa M., daughter of H. G. Brown, superintendent of the Highland mills at Huntington.

Excursion tickets to the French Canadian convention at Nashua, N. H., may be purchased from this place for $2.75 for the round trip good June 24-28, returning, June 28-30.

F. C. Hatch and George A. Griffin attended the shooting tournament at Springfield Tuesday and came home with a few "laurels" for good marksmanship, if not with the prize.

George W. Lyman has been awarded the contract for the erection of a $4500 residence for W. R. Milligan on Thorndike street, between the houses of John Foster and A. H. Willis.

The signatures of Gov. Ames and staff officers appear upon the register at the Weeks' House, where they remained Monday night on their way to the Amherst College commencement.

The Young Mens' Library Association held an adjourned meeting at the rooms Monday evening and elected George W. Ely treasurer in place of F. L. Brooks, who has removed to Westfield.

The Maple street school of Warren had a picnic at Forest Lake Garden Tuesday, and the district school Wednesday. Rev. E. W. Virgin, of Bondsville, will preach there next Sunday afternoon.

The Flynt Building and Construction Company of this place has secured the contract for the erection of the new Springfield City Hospital at Springfield. The structure will cost about $40,000.

People desiring a cheap trip to Niagara Falls can take advantage of the excursion rates, $12.75 for the round trip, to the Institute of Homeopathy. Tickets are good going up to the 28th, and to return until July 15th.

The Palmer high school will graduate a class of nine next Friday evening, the exercises being held in St. Paul's Universalist church. After the exercises the graduating class will give a reception to invited guests in the church parlors.

A basket picnic will be held at Forest Lake Garden to-morrow. Athletic sports will be indulged in, while music will be provided for those who wish to dance. A special train will leave the lake for Springfield at 9 o'clock p. m.

The Palmer high school nine visited the county seat Tuesday afternoon and played a game of ball with the Childs' business college nine, the score standing 9 to 9, although the Springfield club was composed of much the larger members. A return game will be played here next week.

The selectmen appointed three special police officers for patrol duty on account of Forepaugh's visit last Friday, but their services were not needed, as everything passed off quite peaceably for the size of the crowd. Quite a large number were seen upon the streets drunk late that evening.

The annual examination of pupils for admission to the high school took place Tuesday morning. Out of the twenty-six examined the following are the only successful candidates: William M. Roach, Stephen V. Taft, Charles L. Johnson, Fred W. Robinson, Byron C. Shanks and Miss Mabel L. Smith.

The Homeopathic Medical Society of Western Massachusetts met at the Massasoit House in Springfield Wednesday. Dr. N. W. Rand of Monson read a paper on "Pronunciation," and Dr. J. P. Rand was chosen a delegate to the meeting of the American Homeopathic Association at Niagara Falls next Monday.

Charles H. Sanders, head clerk in the New London Northern freight office, has taken a position on the New London Northern road as baggage master on Conductor Sanders' train. He will be succeeded in the freight office by Charles B. Betts, whose position as clerk will be filled by H. E. Huntley, now employed in the post office.

Owing to some misunderstanding, the meeting called at the district court room Tuesday evening to consider the proposition of having an antique and horrible parade here on the Fourth of July was not held, but was postponed to this evening at 7.30 o'clock, when some definite action will be taken. Every patriotic citizen is requested to attend the meeting and take active part in the affair.

A good joke was played on a local wood dealer not long ago. A party who had owed him six months for some wood ordered another load. Instead of the wood he was sent a bill for the first lot. Instead of settling he ordered two loads of a party, who got the wood from the third dealer, getting credit for it, and the dealer still has the three loads of wood charged on his books.

Charles Atwater, for some years connected with the North Monson mills and well known in Palmer, was married at Pittsfield Wednesday to Miss Alice Maude Allen. Many society people of Boston, New York and St. Louis were present. The ceremony was followed by a reception, and a supper by Delmonico of New York. The newly-married couple will take a three-months' trip abroad, and will then reside at Pittsfield.

Engineer Kenerson and Conductor Warner and train men of the Ware River road, now lay off a day or two every week, which promotes Fireman Calkins to be engineer a portion of the time and Baggage Master Bartlett to be conductor one day in the week. Fireman Newton is promoted from the Ware frieght to Engineer Chilson's train. These changes return Charles Reed from West Warren to employment at this station.

George W. Cobb, an old resident of the town, died Tuesday night after a short illness from a kidney trouble. He was a native of Rhode Island, and came to this town many years ago, where he has since built up a lucrative business as a baker. He was 65 years of age and leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss. The funeral was held at his late residence on Church street at 2.30 this afternoon, Rev. H. W. Pope of the Second Congregational church conducting the services.

It is expected that a large crowd will be on the park to-morrow afternoon to see the two crack amateur nines of Central and Western Massachusetts, the Palmers and Southbridges, in a match game of ball. The visitors have made the assertion that they will capture the next game any way, if they have to secure nine players from Boston. The Palmers will play their regular men, with the exception of Greene and Flynn, who are quite liable to play with the local team for the remainder of the season.

Adam Forepaugh gives a good show, and he has a fine corps of artists and trained animals; but he makes a great mistake in introducing the "Wild West" business at the commencement of the exhibition, filling the tent with smoke which prevents a decent view of more than half the performance. The circus drew a large crowd last Friday afternoon, and a fair one in the evening, in spite of the pouring rain which drenched everything and everybody, and caused the performance to be "cut" unmercifully.

Children's day was well observed at St. Paul's Universalist church last Sunday. Rev. F. W. Betts preached a very interesting sermon to the children in the morning, and another to young men in the evening. The floral decorations were especially fine, and the music by the choir very appropriate. Some very interesting exercises were held at the state primary school on the evening of the same day by the children, who did themselves great credit. The flowers used in decorating were very pretty and arranged artistically.

A letter dropped in the post office last Friday afternoon by one of the employes of Adam Forepaugh bore the following address, which could not be found in the postal directory:

Mr. Ro-we-te-ka-ne-ra-ta-ne-ken,
Caugh-nan oga, P-hue,
Canada.

The post office officials thought some of sending the letter in a separate pouch, but as fears were entertained that the pouch might be broken into and the address upon the letter read and pronounced, the scheme was abandoned. However the letter has reached its destination.

Killed by the Cars.

Michael Brean, a resident of Bondsville, was run over and instantly killed in the yard of the New London Northern road at this place about one o'clock last Saturday morning. The victim was intoxicated at the time of the accident. The body was somewhat mutilated, indicating that it had been thrown upon the track a second time after being first hit. The general impression is that he was lying upon the track instead of walking it when the locomotive struck him, yet no one appears to know the exact details of the case. The body was viewed by Medical Examiner Holbrook and the remains interred. He was about 30 years of age.

District Court.

June 16.—The following victims had hearings for drunkenness, all of which paid fine and costs of court, with the exception of the last named, who was committed to the house of correction in default of payment: George Lewis, John Carney, Joseph Lock, Dennis Dwyer, F. B. Hodge, Patrick Hines, John Carlin, John Varney, Harry Coy, John Murphy, William Johnson, Charles Dickens, David O'Rourke, Michael McGarrity, John Lynch, John Mellen, John Murray, John O'Brien and George Kennedy.

19.—Dennis Hurley, for assault discharged.

James McCarty, Terrence and Thomas Gilbride, for drunkenness. The latter was committed while the two former paid fines and costs.

21.—John Delaney of Monson, for an assault; paid fine and costs of $8.15.

22.—Fred L. Amerine, cruelty to horse; continued to the 29th inst.

Gordon Wood of Ludlow, for an assault. The complainant acknowledged satisfaction and the defendant paid costs.

Railroad Notes.

A new time table goes into effect Sunday on the Boston & Albany road. The Springfield accommodation now leaving at 2.05 p. m. will leave at 1.59, and the one now leaving at 6.09 p. m. will leave at 6.10. Passengers for New York will have to leave at 5.30 p. m., as the New York express, which does not stop at this station, leaves Boston a half an hour earlier, passing the 6.10 accommodation at this place. The evening accommodation from Springfield will arrive five minutes later, at 7.05, leaving Springfield at 6.35 p. m. The Albany express for Boston will leave at 8.23 p. m., instead of 8.36. On Sunday the New York fast express trains cease stopping at this station, and New York passengers must take the 5.30 p. m. Albany express, changing at Springfield. The Albany express for Boston will run Sundays, leaving at 8.23 p. m. The Ware branch train for Barre Plains will leave at 7.08 p. m., instead of 7.05.

Cemetery Association Formed.

At the adjourned meeting held in the Congregational church vestry Monday evening in regard to forming a cemetery association, the committee on plans reported in favor of forming such an association, and presented a constitution, which was accepted, an association formed, and these officers elected: President, W. A. Breckenridge; vice-president, J. H. Woolrich; secretary, L. E. Chandler; treasurer, L. E. Moore; these, with the following, to constitute a board of 15 trustees: J. W. Shanks, Mrs. George Davis, W. B. Ham, Mrs. S. R. Lawrence, Mrs. L. E. Child, William Merriam, C. B. Fisk, H. C. Strong, David Knox, George Robinson, Mrs. L. M. Burleigh. A committee of five—Mrs. George Davis, Miss Minnie Burleigh, Mrs. C. E. Dewey, Miss Cora Brown and Mrs. W. B. Ham—were appointed to solicit donations and memberships to the association. Rev. F. W. Betts, George Robinson and O. P. Allen were appointed a committee to present the matter to the next town meeting, and see what arrangements could be made for having the control of the cemetery turned over to the association, as the town now owns and controls it, but gives no deeds to lots, simply the right of burial there. Any resident of Palmer may become a member of the association by the payment of one dollar yearly and signing the constitution.

Palmers 6; Southbridges 4.

The much-talked-of game of ball between the Southbridge and Palmer clubs was played last Saturday afternoon upon the grounds of the Southbridge club, which was easily defeated and very nearly shut out by the Palmers. As usual, Cotter and Kane's battery work was of the very best, while the double plays by Kee and Shackley created great applause. Every man of the Palmers "played ball" until the eighth inning, when a muffed fly let in four runs, the opponents being shut out in every other inning. Gurnhert of the Holy Cross College team pitched for the Southbridge nine. The score:

The Commercial Street Bridge.

THE PASSAGEWAY TO THE RAILWAY STATION, AND THE FINDING OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The county commissioners have rendered the following decision in the matter of widening Commercial street under the railroad tracks:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Hampden, ss.—At a meeting of the County Commissioners of the county of Hampden, held at Springfield, in said county, on the fourth Tuesday of December, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and eighty-seven.

On the petition of the selectmen of Palmer and the Boston and Albany Railroad Company then presented to said commissioners, representing and setting forth that the highway in said Palmer known as Commercial street is crossed in said Palmer by the railroad of said company, the railroad of the New London Northern Railroad Company, and the railroad of the Ware River Railroad Company, the said highway passing under said railroads; that the passageway is long, narrow and dangerous, and the undersigned are of the opinion that it is necessary for the security and convenience of the public, as well as to enable the said Boston & Albany Railroad Company to construct at and near said crossing a suitable and convenient approach to its passenger station in said Palmer, that said passageway should be shortened, widened and that alterations should be made in the crossing, the approaches thereto, the location of the said railroads, highway, and in the bridge at said crossing, and praying that after due notice said commissioners would hear all parties interested, and if said commissioners decide that such alteration is necessary certify their decision in the matter to the parties, and also to the board of railroad commissioners, and take such other action in the premises as to said commissioners should seem meet and proper.

The commissioners appointed Friday, the eleventh day of May then next and ten o'clock in the forenoon, at the station of the Boston and Albany Railroad Company, in Palmer, as the time and place for hearing all parties interested, and caused due notice thereof to be given to all parties interested.

And on the said eleventh day of May the commissioners met at the time and place appointed, and having heard the parties, said commissioners then proceeded to consider and adjudicate upon the prayer of said petition; and after considering the same, said petitioners did then and there adjudge and determine that it is necessary for the security and convenience of the public that the prayer of the petition be granted, and said commissioners continued the proceedings in said matter to their next regular adjourned meeting, and so from meeting to meeting until this fifth day of June, A. D., 1888, when said commissioners do decree and determine that it is necessary for the security and convenience of the public that the prayer of the petition be granted, and said commissioners do prescribe the manner and limits within which such alteration shall be made as follows, to wit:

The present east abutment shall be moved 12 feet more easterly, and shall be 6 feet thick at the base and 3 feet thick at the bridge seat.

The roadway shall be 20 feet wide with a clear height of 11 feet from grade of street to bridge floor or bottom of rolled beams. A sidewalk shall be provided 7 feet in width; the grade of which shall be about 3 feet above the grade of the street, giving a clear height of 8 feet between the grade of the walk and the bridge floor or bottom of rolled beams, said walk to be concreted, and connected with the sidewalk on Main street with concrete walk 6 feet in width. Between the sidewalk and the street there shall be a retaining wall, the top of which will be at grade with the walk. This wall shall be the foundation for a row of iron columns which will support the floor of the railroad bridge. Between these columns there shall be a stout gas-pipe railing on a line with the edge of the sidewalk.

There shall be 12 stone steps leading from the sidewalk to the platform of the depot between the track of the New London Northern Railroad and the south main track of the Boston and Albany Railroad. The steps shall have a tread of 13 inches and a rise of 7 inches.

The length of the bridge over the street shall be 88 feet at the face of the easterly abutment, and 80 feet at the face of the westerly abutment, located as follows:

At the face of the easterly abutment, from the center between the main tracks of the Boston and Albany Railroad to the notherly end of the bridge floor will be 36 feet. From said center to southerly end of bridge floor 52 feet.

At face of westerly abutment, from center between main tracks to northerly end of bridge floor 37 feet. From said center to southerly end of bridge floor 43 feet.

Leonard Clark,
A. F. Wildes,
Lewis F. Root,
County Commissioners.

A true copy. Attest:
Robert O. Morris, Clerk.

Oration, "Beyond the Alps Lies Italy," Herbert Gay
Oration, "Success in Business," H. Preston Worden
Oration with valedictory addresses, "Industry the Price of Success," Carlton De W. Green

The funeral of Lewis S. Janes, long employed by J. R. Gould in his meat business and well-known, especially on the Bondsville route, was attended at the residence of Mr. Gould Wednesday morning, Rev. P. W. Lyman, who had known him quite familiarly since 1871, officiating. His death was instantaneous and occurred Monday morning in the garden of F. L. Plantiff, whither he had gone from his room near by and had just begun a little light work. For a year or more he had been able to do but little light work, suffering at intervals spasms of severe pain in the stomach, which would at times continue some hours. He had been in Mr. Gould's service for fourteen years past, previous to that time he was in the employ of the late Dea. Harrison Root seven years. Before this he was known in Brimfield and Wales. He was buried in Brimfield beside his parents. Some years ago he contracted a most unfortunate marriage, in which after a long desertion, he obtained relief by divorce, so that he left no family, and but few relatives. According to his ability he was generous toward those in need, and he always had a cheerful word for those with whom he was brought into business relations.

THORNDIKE.

Mrs. George Moores is visiting friends in Orange.

The Thorndike Co. has bought a fine grey horse.

Mrs. S. S. Carter is visiting friends in Moodus, Conn.

Frank Root and Emma Roch were married on Tuesday.

James Loftus has put in a new soda fountain the past week.

John Molloy has recovered from a light attack of scarlet fever.

The young stars nine will probably play Bondsville on Saturday.

Miss Emma Rosco is spending a vacation with friends at Burlington, Vt.

Steam heating apparatus is being put into the residence of F. J. Lynch.

John Wagner has accepted a position at Springfield in the meat business.

The Thorndike firemen will play the Palmers at Palmer on the afternoon of July 4th.

The second team of this place expect to go to Ware Saturday to play the Unions of that place.

Those who attended Forepaugh's circus on Friday did not feel pleased with the performance.

Greene and Flynn of this place are to play with the Palmers on Saturday against the Southbridge club.

A number from this place went to Boston Monday to witness the two games between the Bostons and Chicagos.

A large number from this place will go to Palmer to-morrow to see the game between the Palmer and Southbridge clubs.

The clerk's base ball club is anxiously awaiting a challenge for some Tuesday or Thursday afternoon. Palmer clerks prefered.

John Keefe, a young lad employed in the cloth room, had his hand caught in the machinery one day last week, and was quite badly injured.

A game between a picked nine and a nine representing the No. 1 Mill weave room was played on Saturday last, and was won by the picked nine.

Frank Pierce is acting as second hand in No. 2 spinning room for a few weeks, and will afterward make some tests of power and product of various machines in the mill.

Agent Greene of the Thorndike Co. intends making the following changes and improvements: Will raise the No. 2 mill canal so as to get two feet more head of water; will connect the engine with the old part of No. 1 mill; has plans drawn for the rearrangement of No. 1 mill card room. A new tenement house is being built at the 4 Row.

MONSON.

E. P. Keep, while hewing ties Wednesday, severely cut his knee.

All the public schools, with the exception of No. 1 grammar, will close to-day.

George H. Newton's house on Main street has received a new coat of paint.

The marriage of R. F. Bradway of this place and Miss May Nash of Gouldsborough, Me., will occur at the home of the brides' parents next Wednesday morning.

WALES.

The semi-annual meeting of the Wales Savings Bank will be held July 3 at 2 o'clock p. m.

Rev. H. P. Smith has arrived with his family and occupies the place he recently purchased of Robert Lewis on the hill overlooking the large and beautiful lake.

Aaron Shaw has arrived with his span of bays for the summer, much to the delight of those to whom he will give splendid drives over the hills and through the shades in the hot days.

Some young fellows went on an outing last Saturday, to a neighboring town and returned in the evening with an apparent good feeling. On their way home they came across a scare crow beside the road, taking it to be a man much in their own condition, and being willing to do as they would be done by, picked it up and brought it home. On arrived at the stable and finding out their mistake, they deposited it beside the fence. Sunday morning parties observing it, supposed it to be some one drunk, lying there, and ordered Constable Switzer to arrest him, so with assistance he went to the place and found the fellow harmless.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The Ware Cadet Band gave the first open air concert of the season last evening.

W. S. Hineline, from the West, brother of Mrs. George H. Coney, is making her a visit.

Three hundred and ninety Ware people visited Forepaugh's circus at Palmer last Friday.

It is expected that the brick work will be commenced in a few days on the new Catholic church.

The electric light poles have been much improved with a coat of paint of a color to harmonize with the trees.

The Canadian Circle have a meeting this evening to elect delegates to the National Convention at Nashua, N. H.

A committee of 25 was chosen at a meeting at Music Hall Monday evening to make arrangements for a trades procession the 4th. John Lashua was chosen chief marshal.

An interesting Sunday-school concert was given at the Unitarian church last Sunday evening, opening with a march and song by the children. The singing and recitations were excellent.

At a meeting of the Circle Canadian Messrs. J. O. Deslauries, A. Dubois and M. Plouf were chosen delegates to the Canadian National Convention to be held at Nashua the 26, 27 and 28 of this month.

Twenty-five Ware people attended the Grange excursion and picnic at the Amherst Agricultural College on Tuesday. There was reduced fare on the Central Railroad, and a most enjoyable time is reported.

A town meeting is called for to-morrow afternoon to see if the town will authorize the treasurer to borrow money for the construction of sewers, raise $400 for new streets, and purchase a bell for the Town Hall spire.

The thunder storm of last Friday night played the mischief with the electric lights, the incandesent lamps going out early in the evening. The lightning entered the station several times, but no serious damage was done. A Frenchman living on Morse avenue received a serious shock.

Arrangements have been completed and invitations issued for the reception and banquet to be given by the citizens of Ware to the board of trade and citizens of Northampton on Thursday afternoon and evening, June 28th. There is a committee of five on invitations, a committee of seven on banquet, and a committee of forty for reception. The banquet will be served in the Town Hall at 7.30.

The ordination and installation of Rev. B. W. Pennock is to take place at the Unitarian church at 2 o'clock next Wednesday afternoon. Rev. E. A. Horton of Boston, will preach the sermon, Rev. Mr. Badger, of South Natick, will extend the right hand of fellowship, and Rev. B. V. Stevenson, of Ware, will give the charge to the people. In addition to the above, the pastor and delegate from the following liberal churches have been invited: 1st and 2d of Boston, Springfield, Clinton, Northampton, Upton, Peabody, Winchester, Petersham, So. Natick, Warren, Palmer, Hopedale, Barre. The council will meet at 12 o'clock, and a collation will be served afterward.

High School Matters.

The public examinations of the Ware High School will take place at the high school room next Wednesday, and will be as follows:

9.15—9.45 a.m., Virgil, junior class; 9.45—10.30, geometry, sophomore class; 10.45—12, latin and ancient history, first year class; 2—2.30 p.m., English literature, senior class; 2.30—3, civil government, junior class; 3—3.20, Greek classics, junior and sophomore classes; 3.20—3.45, Cicero, senior class. The public is invited to be present all day.

The graduation exercises of the Ware high school will be held in the Town Hall, next Friday evening, with the following programme:

The graduation class numbers eleven, the largest since 1881.

The class motto is non quis sed quid, "Not who, but what."

The graduates are:

Classical Course—William John Reilley, Mary Field Eaton, Susie Bryant Dwight, Mabel Orne Storrs.

Latin English Course—Harry Spencer Nye, Charles Francis Clark, Katherine Kelley, Sara Gardner Hyde, Lizzie Jane Kelley, Nellie Elizabeth Marsh, Edward Albert Barnes.

The reunion of the high school will be held at the Town Hall, Monday evening, July 2, from 7.30 to 10.30. There will be a short musical and literary entertainment.

NOT a word has been heard from Stanley, the African explorer, since last August, and it seems more than probable that the reports of his death must be true.

---

AFTER occupying the German throne for a little over three months Emperor Frederick III has ceased his heroic struggle for life, having passed away peacefully at the royal palace in Potsdam last Friday forenoon. He had been sick for many months, and the post-mortem examination shows that the fatal malady was cancer of the larynx, his case being quite similar to that of Gen. Grant, and the cause also similar,—his inveterate smoking habit. "Unser Fritz," our Fritz, as he was familiarly called, was greatly beloved by his people, and his death will be sincerely mourned. His funeral occurred on Monday, the services being very simple and impressive. His son William, who now becomes emperor, takes the title of William II.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, June 20, 1888.

Political interest to-day centers in Chicago, and the headquarters here have nothing of interest. During the week the Prohibitionists have put out a campaign flag near the corner of Washington street and Cornhill, only a few feet from the Cleveland and Thurman flag, which hangs in front of the headquarters of the young men's Democratic club. It bears the names of the presidential candidates—Fisk and Brooks—and also suitable sentiments for the protection of the home and the nation. By the way, there seems to be something in the names of these men which affects their chances of victory. Two monosylables—Fisk and Brooks—how short they sound! There is not the chance for a hurrah that there is in names of more rhetorical capacity. I remember hearing an observing student of history remark that our relations to England over the northwestern boundary trouble were much endangered by the alliteration of "Fifty-four forty or fight." Some of our people were claiming the land to 54 degrees, 40 minutes of north latitude, and there was plenty of "holler" in the cry. But nobody in the world would have thought of going through the streets with bands and banners and shouting "Fifty-three forty-nine or fight." So such trifles have an effect on the public mind, and it may injure the prohibitory cause that it has not a better campaign slogan.

The Prohibitionists are expecting to do great things this fall. One of their leaders in this state told me to-day that they expected to show a decided increase over their vote of nearly 11,000 for governor last year. They expect to nominate Eugene C. Clapp for governor, that is, some of them do, bnt there are others who think that William H. Earle of Worcester made a good run last year, and should be put up again this year. Mr. Clapp is engaged in the erection of a new pulp factory down in Maine. He is the president of the company, and it is possible that his business will keep him out of politics this year. In New York, the third party is expecting a large increase of vote. In 1884 they cast 25,000 ballots for president, and this year they think they will get 75,000. Their prohibitory vote in the congressional districts in 1886 was 52,217. In New Jersey, also, they expect to do well, because their candidate, Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, is a resident of that state.

In our own gubernatorial campaign no new developments have occured, and none are likely to just yet. Speaker Noyes seems to have got into a little trouble at Chicago, and that will not help him any here with either party. Perhaps he felt that he was in danger of getting into close quarters, for he remarked to a friend a few days ago that he wished he was not going. His friends continue to talk of what they are going to do in Essex and elsewhere, but most people think he has no chance for the governorship whatever. Gen. Draper is in the field to stay and get all the votes he can in convention. This I get only "second-hand" from his brother George Draper, and there is no doubt that it is reliable. I see by the Chicago dispatches that a part of Gov. Ames's little joke has reached the Lake City, namely, that the presidential difficulty be solved by nominating Gen. Draper. The second part is that they nominate Speaker Noyes for vice-president and thus take them both out of his way.

A gentleman who returned not long ago from a business trip to Buenos Ayres says that he occasionally sees E. D. Winslow there, and that he is pursuing the same method of business that distinguished his career in Massachusetts. He lives in a magnificent residence and "cuts a pretty wide swath". To-day I have happened to meet one of the men whom Winslow defrauded out of thousands of dollars, and he says that Winslow's paper, (which is published by the way, under the name of E. D. Low—he having dropped the name of "Wins") is without question the ablest paper in South America. It is of immense size, being a quarto, each of whose pages is nearly as large as one of our blanket folios. About two-thirds of the paper is in Spanish and the remainder in English. A while ago, Winslow cheated some English capitalists out of some $140,000, and they managed to give him an eight month's stay in jail in consequence. This marvelous story is told of an effort of his victims here to procure his extradition. When he went to Buenos Ayres he wound himself into the good graces of the state department there, and finally was made confidential adviser to the head of that office. When Hamilton Fish, then our secretary of state, wrote to the state department at Buenos Ayres for the extradition of Winslow on the ground of international comity (for we had no extradition treaty with that nation) the very letter was turned over to Winslow himself, as confidential secretary, for his advice. It is needless to say that the request of Mr. Fish was politely declined. This gentleman says that Winslow was the most brilliant man in this part of Massachusetts, and he might have been governor or anything else in politics he chose, if he had not been a rascal. He was the Senate chairman of the legislative committee on prisons the year Concord prison was built, and had much to do with that work.

The canvass for Congressman Long's shoes is proceeding in a lively manner between the friends of Council or Moore and those of Mr. Borden, the chairman of the Republican state committee. From all that I hear, it seems that Mr. Morse is doing the most work and is the most likely to win. He is credited with a long purse and with opening it freely, and that goes a long way this year. It ought not to be so, but the second district people do not seem to rebel against it.

Next Monday noon in the Park street church a public reception will be given to nine teachers who are engaged in work among the Mormons of Utah, under the auspices of the New West Education Commission. Rev. A. E. Windship, formerly secretary of that convention, and now the editor of the Journal of Education, will deliver the address of welcome.

Many of our Boston residences are deserted now for the summer. For several weeks past it has been no unusual sight to see a big express wagon backed up to the front door of some fine residence, taking on a load of furniture to be used in the summer house down at the beach. But it has been a good season for dwellers in town thus far. Only a day or two have we had of decided heat. Yesterday, with a bright sun and a clear sky, there was that refreshing salt breeze directly from the expanse of old ocean, which made it comfortable, even on the sunny side of the street.

While the lack of news from Henry M. Stanley is observed here with anxiety, those who are in the best position to know do not put any confidence in this morning's dispatch which says that the Journal des Debats in Paris has advices from Zanzibar that he is probably dead. As one gentleman puts it: "Those fellows in Zanzibar, sitting on the dry goods boxes on the wharves, have talked the matter over and have come to that conclusion. If news had come from Stanley, it would have come through certain native sources, and these sources would have been mentioned if the dispatch had been reliable."

A big company is preparing to go from here July 6 to the meeting of the National Educational Association in San Francisco July 17. LANDON.

Thousands of pairs of Women's Kid Oxfords for 75 cents and 95 cents, selling quick at Broadhurst Bros'. (Morse's Shoe Store), Springfield. Those that visit this store get well suited and those that don't, make a mistake.

For fifteen years I was annoyed with severe pain in my head and discharges into my throat from catarrh. My sense of smell was much impaired. By the use of Ely's Cream Balm I have overcome these troubles.—J. B. Case, St. Denis Hotel, N. Y.

Strong's old stand, 294 Main Street, Springfield, is the center of a brisk shoe trade under its new owner, S. C. Hall. J. & T. Cousins' Ladies' Fine Shoes, Ladies' and Misses' Tan Oxfords—all shades—and superior lines of Gents' Fine Shoes suggest a stock sure to contain everything wanted for foot wear, all at bottom prices.

Goodyear's rubber store, 391 Main-st., Springfield, Mass., offer lawn and garden hose at very low prices. They sell 50 feet of Standard Hose for $5.00, warranted. This is a great bargain. They have Hose Reels and Garden Sprinklers on hand in large variety. When in the city visit this store, where you will find everything in the line of rubber goods. 4w10

No other blood medicine so utilizes the results of scientific inquiry as Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

When people are bilious and dyspeptic they need a laxative medicine. In such cases Ayer's Pills give perfect satisfaction.

After trying numerous so-called catarrh remedies and receiving no benefit I was finally induced to try Ely's Cream Balm, and after using one bottle I take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers from catarrh.—N. L. Gorton, with S. Gorton & Co., Gloucester, Mass.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF

of the Grand Army of the Republic, Major George S. Merrill. Few remedies are better known in this this vicinity than Sulphur Bitters; their sale has been very general throughout this section, and the number of reliable and well attested cases of beneficial results and recovery by their use, is large and beyond dispute.

THE HOMLIEST MAN IN PALMER

as well as the handsomest, and others are invited to call on any druggist and get free a trial bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs, a remedy that is selling entirely upon its merits and is guaranteed to relieve and cure all chronic and acute coughs, asthma, bronchitis and consumption. Large bottles 50 cents and $1.

SOME FOOLISH PEOPLE

allow a cough to run until it gets beyond the reach of medicine. They often say, "Oh, it will wear away," but in most cases it wears them away. Could they be induced to try the successful medicine called Kemp's Balsam, which is sold on a positive guarantee to cure, they would immediately see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Price 50 cents and $1. Trial size free. At all druggists.

INTERESTED PEOPLE.

Advertising a patent medicine in the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam for coughs and colds does, is indeed wonderful. He authorizes all druggists to give those who call for it, a sample bottle free, that they may try it before purchasing. The large bottles are 50c. and $1. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption.

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

This remedy is becoming so well known and so popular as to need no special mention. All who have used Electric Bitters sing the same song of praise.—A purer medicine does not exist and it is guaranteed to do all that is claimed. Electric Bitters will cure all diseases of the Liver and Kidneys, will remove pimples, boils, salt rheum and other affections of impure blood.—Will drive Malaria from the system, prevent as well as cure all Malaria fevers.—For cure of headache, constipation and indigestion try Electric Bitters.—Entire satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.—Price 50 cts. and $1.00 per bottle at Legro & Lynde's drug store. 5

IS CONSUMPTION INCURABLE?

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says:

"Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an Incurable Consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle, and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jessie Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Dscovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 5

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

TO THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.—

Respectfully represent the undersigned, that the public convenience and necessity require the discontinuance of so much of the county highway in the towns of Brimfield and Palmer, as lies between a point on the Tower Hill road, so called, near the house of Theodore Farrell in said Brimfield, to near a house formerly owned by Col. John ton in said Palmer, and also the discontinuance of so much of the county highway in said towns as lies between a point on the Fenton Bridge road, so called, near said house of Col. John Fenton, and a point near the house occupied by Oscar D. Wells in Brimfield.

And the undersigned further represent that the public convenience and necessity require that a new highway be laid out in said Brimfield, commencing near the the said house of Theodore Farrell and ending near the said house of Oscar D. Wells.

Wherefore they pray that you will view the premises aforesaid, and grant the prayers of this petition.

TOWN OF BRIMFIELD.
By OSCAR F. BROWN, FRANK R. NEWTON, JOSIAH STEBBINS, } Selectmen of Brimfield.
Brimfield, June 4, 1888.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, SS.—At a meeting of the county commissioners, holden at Springfield, within and for said county, on the fifth day of June, in the year of our Lord, 1888.

And now upon the petition aforesaid, the county commissioners, deeming a view of the premises expedient and proper, give notice that they will meet for the purpose of said view, and hearing all parties interested, at the station of the Boston & Albany Railroad Co. in Palmer, on Tuesday, the tenth day of July next, at 9.45 o'clock a. m.; and it is ordered by the county commissioners that a copy of said petition be served by the sheriff of said county, or his deputy, upon the clerks of the towns of Brimfield and Palmer, in said county, thirty days at least before the said tenth day of July and that all other persons and corporations interested therein be notified by publishing a copy of said petition and this order thereon, once a week, in the PALMER JOURNAL, a public newspaper printed in said county, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the time of said view and hearing. And it is further ordered by the commissioners that copies of said petition, or abstracts containing the substance thereof and this order be posted by said sheriff or deputy in two public places in the towns of Brimfield and Palmer, fourteen days before said tenth day of July, and that notice be given in manner aforesaid, to all persons and corporations interested, that the county commissioners deem a view of the premises expedient and proper, and that a view of the same will be taken by them at the time and place aforesaid, and that they will hear the parties interested at the time of said view. ROBERT O. MORRIS, Clerk.

True copy of the petition and order of the county commissoners thereon. (3w10)
ATTEST: ROBERT O. MORRIS, Clerk.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, SS. PROBATE COURT.—

To all persons interested in the lands of which Isaac H. Robbins, late of Monson, in said County, died seised in this state:

Whereas, Elizabeth W. Robbins, of Monson, in said County, has presented to said court her petition, representing that she is the widow of said deceased, and entitled to dower in his said lands, and praying that the same may be assigned to her by said court, as provided by law.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be holden at Springfield, in said county, on the first Wednesday of July next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by delivering a copy thereof to each person interested, fourteen days before said Court, or by publishing the same, once a week for three successive weeks, in the PALMER JOURNAL, a newspaper printed at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this eleventh day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.
(3w11) SAMUEL B. SPOONER, REGISTER.

NOTICE is hereby given that the subscriber has been duly appointed Administrator of the estate of James Burns, late of Palmer, in the County of Hampden, deceased; and has taken upon himself that trust, by giving bonds as the law directs. ## CURE OF CANCER AND ULCERS.

Judge T. C. McLendon writes to the Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., under the date of February 14, 1888: "About three years ago, Jerry Bradley, a colored man, had a cancerous sore on his face, near the right eye. It caused him a great deal of pain, and he lost the sight of the eye, but was finally cured of the cancer by the use of Swift's Specific. This case is well-known in Wilkes Co., Ga., where he lived (near Danbury), and of this case, I, myself, had personal knowledge."

Mr. L. Cox, of Arkabutla, Tate Co., Miss., writes February 24, 1888: "I suffered a great deal from old ulcers for six years. Your medicine was recommended to me, and after using six bottles, I was completely cured. I never saw its equal as a blood purifier. My neighbors will use no other. Your medicine does even more than you claim for it. I have known it to cure cases which were thought to be hopeless. It is the best medicine made."

Mrs. A. M. Goldsmith, No. 674 Warren St., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes February 22, 1888: "I commenced using S. S. S., about three years ago. I had suffered with a sore throat for over a year, when I commenced using your remedy. I used a great many other remedies with no good results. My little girl also had sore fingers; it commenced from the quick, and then the nails would come off. We doctored her for over two years, and when I commenced using S. S. S., I thought I would see what it would do for me. I am thankful to say that it entirely cured her. It is the best remedy I know of for the blood. I really believe it was the means of saving my life. The doctor told me I had a throat disease similar to General Grant's. I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from disordered blood. I use it now as a tonic whenever I think I need it."

Mr. B. F. George, Miford P. O., Ellis Co., Texas, writes: "I had a cancerous wart or mole on my eyelid, as large as the end of my thumb, which had the appearance of cancer, from which I suffered a long time. Seeing the S. S. S. advertised I commenced using it, and after the use of a few bottles the sore dropped out, my cancer was gone, and I was entirely relieved."

Mr. G. W. Pettis, of Aiken, S. C., writes: "I was a sufferer from cancer of the breast, and had been under the treatment of five physicians, but it did me no good. It was so bad that I had to stop work. After taking a course of S. S. S. I was entirely cured."

Reminding The Hens.

"It's well I ran into the garden,"
Said Eddie, his face all aglow;
"For what do you think, mamma, happened?
You never will guess it, I know.

"The little brown hen was there, clucking:
'Cut-cut,' she'd say, quick as a wink,
Then 'cut-cut,' again, only slower,
And then she would stop short and think.

"And then she would say it all over,
She did look so mad and so vexed;
For, mamma, do you know, she'd forgotten
The word that she ought to cluck next.

"So I said 'Ca-daw-cut, ca-daw-cut';
As loud and as strong as I could;
And she looked 'round at me very thankful;
I tell you it made her feel good.

"Then she flapped and said 'Cut-cut ca-daw-cut';
She remembered just how it went then.
But it's well I went into the garden—
She might never have clucked right again."

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.

The other evening when Mr. Bowser came home to supper he began to empty his pockets of fish-hooks and lines and sinkers and bobbers and reels, and I naturally asked him what was going to happen.

"We are going a-fishing, Mrs. Bowser."

"When?"

"To-morrow."

"But I can't go. You know mother—"

"Your mother be hanged, Mrs. Bowser! You can take baby over there, and we'll go off for a little recreation."

"Do you—you suppose we'll catch anything?"

"You probably won't, for no woman knows how to fish. There might be a thousand bass and pickerel within a foot of her hook and she wouldn't get a bite. However you look worn out and a day off will brighten you up."

"Will you catch any fish, Mr. Bowser?"

"Humph! What do you suppose I invested $5 in fishing tackle for? I don't want to give the exact number I shall catch, because there may be one more or less. You had better tell the girl to clean out one of those kegs to-night and have it ready to salt down our fish in."

Mr. Bowser was in excellent good humor that evening. His talk ran to bass, pickerel, wall-eyed pike and perch, and he spent two hours with his fish lines and sinkers. He gave me a long and entertaining lecture on the habits of the pickerel—the pickerel weighing from three to fifteen pounds—and he followed that with some choice anecdotes of black blass—their powers of sight, voracious appetites, etc. Fearing that he was over-sanguine, I felt it my duty to observe:

"Mr. Bowser, suppose you shouldn't catch a fish?"

He looked at me with such an injured air that I felt sorry for him, but continued:

"Suppose I should catch 'em all?"

He looked startled for a moment. Then he came over to me with a pleasant smile on his face, placed his hand on my head in fatherly way, and kindly replied:

"My dear, I hope you will catch every blessed fish in Lake St. Clair! Nothing would give me more pleasure than to see you haul out a wagon load."

We went to the lake the next morning and began fishing from a private dock. Mr. Bowser got his fish line tied to the pole before we were within forty rods of the dock, and when we were 100 feet away he put a minnow on the hook and jumped out and ran for the dock, leaving me to hitch the horse. It looked a bit selfish to me, but I have ascertained that all husbands who go fishing with their wives do the same thing. He had been fishing twenty minutes before I got down, and I asked if he had any bites.

"Bites? Of course not. You don't think I telegraphed the fish what minute we'd be here, do you? If you get a bite in an hour and a half you'll do mighty well."

No sooner had I thrown in my hook than I felt a yank, and the line was carried off to the left. I called Mr. Bowser's attention and he replied:

"It's probably an old boot or an oyster can. Don't get excited and fall off the dock."

After feeling a heavy tug at the line I made a pull, accompanied by a yell, and lo! I landed a three pound bass on the planks. I just danced up and down and yelled to Mr. Bowser to come and help me. He came over and growled:

"Humph! Fish was making for my bait when you happened to pull him up. Nice way that is to fish!"

"But the hook is in his mouth."

"Well, don't startle the people in the grave yard! By some hook or crook or blunder, you've caught a poor old worthless sheep's head; but don't break the dock down over it!"

He was so anxious to catch the next fish that he wouldn't stop to take mine off, but I finally got it loose, rebaited the hook, and as I dropped it in Mr. Bowser said:

"It isn't likely another accident will occur, but if it does, don't canter around like a lunatic. Your actions frightened an immense fish away from my hook."

"I feel a bite, Mr. Bowser."

"Bosh!"

"But I surely do!"

"Mrs. Bowser, don't you dare to pull up your line and scare my fish away!"

I knew I had a fish and I pulled and landed a pound perch. I couldn't help but clap my hands and called to Mr. Bowser, and he replied:

"Are you a baby or a grown woman?" Are you the only person on earth who ever caught a poor starved perch, which no doubt took this means of committing suicide?"

"But come over and fish in this place."

"Never! There isn't another fish within forty rods of you!"

I dropped my hook in again and got another perch. Then came a rock bass and a third perch. I didn't say a word to Mr. Bowser and he whistled to himself and pretended not to see anything. At the next cast I got a tug on the line which made the pole bend like a whip, and I called to Mr. Bowser to come and help me.

"I'm not fishing for dog-fish!" he called, as he bobbed his line in a vicious way.

The fish played back and forth half a dozen times, and then I ventured to pull him in hand over hand and lift him up. It was a magnificent pickerel. I called to Mr. Bowser, but he wouldn't come. I had added three more perch to my string before he came over and said:

"Mrs. Bowser, we are going home?"

"But it isn't noon yet."

"Makes no difference. I can't neglect important business to fool around here. It isn't the right sort of a day for fish, anyhow."

"It isn't?" I replied, as I landed another perch.

"See here!" he said in a hoarse whisper, as he came nearer, "if you go home and brag about this I'll—"

"But I won't."

"You can own up to catching a perch or two, but—"

"You can claim all the rest if you'll stay."

We stayed. I caught seventeen fish, great and small, and Mr. Bowser got one little sun bass. On the way home he held up the string to every friend, and when they asked who caught 'em he invariably replied:

"Well, Mrs. Bowser caught one and had two more bites. It's her first experience."

The next morning he actually claimed to me that he caught all but one, and when I rebuked him he hotly remarked:

"That's it! That's it! Dragoon your husband into fooling a day or so fishing and then call him a liar because you didn't happen to have any luck!"—Mrs. Bowser in Detroit Free Press.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

AN AWFUL CATASTROPHE.

We parted in silence, one sweet summer night,
On the bank of a beautiful river;
She made not a murmur as out of my sight
Swift she sank with scarcely a shiver.
The nightingales warbled, the stars brightly shone,
And though she will rise again never,
No sorrow I felt for the life that had flown—
For that feline is silent forever.

The little boys in a down-river town attend the same school. They are but four years old, and are in the same class. The other day they were called out by the teacher and asked to spell a certain work. They all failed, and one of the little fellows looked up to the teacher and said: "Now, Mr. M., you are in a terrible fix, ain't you?"—Bangor Commercial.

"I think," said the minister, who was visiting a parishioner, "that it is easier to coax children than to drive them. Gentle words are more effective than harsh ones." "I think so, too," said the lady tenderly. Then she raised her window and suddenly shouted to her boy: "Johnnie, if you don't come in out of that mud-puddle I'll break your back."—Columbus Dispatch.

Mrs. Bass—"Oh, you may sneer at women, but for all that they are the better part of creation. A woman is all heart; the men think of nothing but themselves. You will always find women ready to sympathize with the sorrowful and to succor the distressed. Hasn't it been truly said that woman was the last at the cross and the first at the sepulchre?" Mr. Bass—"Well, what of it?" I'll warrant you it was only out of curiosity."—Boston Transcript.

LET US "RUSTLE."—Tell me not in mournful numbers that the town is full of gloom, for the man's a crank that slumbers in these bustling days of boom. Life is real, life is earnest, and the grave is not its goal, every dollar that thou turnest helps to make the old town roll. But enjoyment and not sorrow is our destined end or way; if you have no money, borrow—buy a corner lot each day! Lives of great men all remind us we can win immortal fame. Let us leave the chumps behind us and we'll get there just the same. In this world's broad field of battle, in the bivouac of life, let us make the dry bones rattle—buy a corner for your wife! Let us then be up and doing, with a heart for any fate; still achieving, still pursuing, booming early, booming late.

A place on earth has been found where taxes are unknown. It is a territory bordering on the northern line of Lincoln County, Me., called "Hibbert's Gore." It contains 334 acers of land and 10 flourishing families. It is bounded by the lines of three counties, Knox, Lincoln and Waldo, but is not claimed by either. The inhabitants do not maintain a municipal organization and cannot vote for President, governor, members of the legislature or town officers, but they are contented with their lot, have fine farms and good roads, their pork barrels and potato bins are open to one another, and they do not care a snap about politics. This community comes as near to having a Utopia as community ever did.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; but is often lost owing to the poverty and impurity of the blood and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion and giving strength to the whole system.

"I had been troubled with pimples on my lower limbs, loss of sleep and appetite, and in fact was generally run down. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla the pimples disappeared, my appetite was renewed, and I feel better in every respect." P. DEVLIN, S. E. corner 10th and Buttonwood Sts., Philadelphia.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon I felt as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

MONSON ACADEMY.

REVIEW OF THE YEAR'S WORK.

BACCALAUREATE SERMON.

Graduating Exercises and the Alumni Reunion.

Monson Academy finds itself in a much more prosperous condition than last year. During the term which has just closed 70 students have been enrolled, including 11 from outside of this town. The services of Principal Dustan, Assistant T. Henry Flint, Preceptress Miss Gertrude Hall, and Second Assistant Miss Hattie Anderson, have been very satisfactory, and it is much regretted that Miss Hall, who goes to Boston to take a course of music, will not return next month. Her place will be filled by Miss Anderson, a most efficient teacher. The other vacancy is yet to be filled.

The school owes much of its prosperity to its present principal, who has worked hard to upbuild the school, and his efforts have met with good success. He has succeeded in raising enough money for the new dormitory, which will be furnished at a cost of $1000, and will be named "Hammond Hall," in honor of the late Charles Hammond, who for many years was principal of the Academy. Several new pieces of scientific apparatus have been added during the year, and the number of volumes in the library has been extended. All things considered, the school is in excellent condition to accomplish even greater things next year.

The first of the graduating exercises were held in the Congregational church Sunday evening, and was well attended. Rev. P. W. Lyman of Belchertown, president of the trustees, preached the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class, taking for his text:

> The pure in heart shall see God.—Matt. 5: 8.
> Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace; thereby good shall come to thee.—Job. 22: 21.
> In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thee.—Prov. 3: 6.

"Two ways of life, and only two, are possible. In the one way the appetites are supreme; in the other, the dictates of the spirit. In the one way the motives which dominate are those which appeal to time and sense; in the other, they are those which lay hold upon the unseen and eternal. In the one way, God is at the best ignored; in the other, he is acknowledged and accepted as the guide of the daily life. The latter will be found to be the way of peace, of usefulness and of true success. In the former, though there may be pleasure, there is no permanent satisfaction. Why should God be known and be made a permanent factor in the conscious daily life? First, because not otherwise can the visible world itself be understood. No scholar, however profoundly he has studied, has ever found the origin of life or the final explanation of the methods of nature unless he has found God. Nature is not its own sufficient explanation. We cannot understand the visible without a knowledge of the invisible, whence that which is seen proceeds. A thing cannot be understood apart from its cause.

Second, God should be known and be allowed to enter into our lives, because not otherwise can we know ourselves. How can one know himself unless he knows the author of his being? Whence came we? Why are we here? Whither are we going? What manner of persons are we? What ought we to be? Not one of these vitally important questions can be answered satisfactorily unless we know God. Nature is almost dumb as to our future. Only God can make the answer to that mystery clear. And as to the present, one cannot estimate himself justly unless he sees God. He must have a true standard of judgment. Only by comparison with this standard do men know themselves morally. When they make this comparison they are cast down by it. But they ought to be cast down. He that humbleth himself shall be exalted. Only when we know God do we know the magnitude of our moral defects. One need not thereby be cast into utter and hopeless sorrow.

Because when one knows God truly he knows Him as a forgiving God. He sees then that his case is not hopeless. When we see a holy God, notwithstanding his hatred of sin, loving us and making himself cost for our redemption, we find the motive, the inspiration and the encouragement to attempt the mastery of our baseness and earthliness. In the light of this wondrous revelation of God's feeling and purpose toward us, we see attainable a glorious moral future, and we can never be content to have our part in this life alone. We see that there is something unspeakably higher and better than material good. Thus the appreciative knowledge of God ministers to self-government as well as to self-knowledge. If this be true of individuals it is true of society at large. The way to correct the evils of society is not unlike that by which the evils of the personal life are corrected. Let God be revealed. Let the people see Him. Let them know Him. The setting forth of God as He is variously made known, especially as the gospel reveals Him, is the great agency for the use of those who bemoan and could correct the moral and even the physical ills under which the world grows. So I say that you need to walk with God, not only for the personal benefit of such acquaintance, but also because you thereby become qualified to minister to the world's greatest need. Constituted his messengers, by that filial relation to which I am urging, you will be able to bring, to the sin-sick and sorrow-laden, the true and only effectual antidote for their bane. By no other course could one of you so enhance his power for good. Again this confidential relationship to God is to be derived because otherwise life is liable to become a desolation. We are surrounded by vast physical fires, which, indeed, in the main operate benificently, but which care not at all for us and which crush us if ever by accident we get in their way, and that without a twinge of remorse or of pity. But, if we may believe that Our Father holds all these forces in his hands, then, whatever we suffer for them, we are not the victims of fate, or of tyranny, or of caprice. Sustained by an unfaltering trust in God, myriads have met the ills of life, have borne them with resignation, have triumphed over them, nay more, have even coined out of them elements of character which enriched them beyond all earthly measure. In time of grief it is an infinite comfort to feel that we are in the hands of one who knows, and of one who loves.

Still again, this relenting to God ministers more effectually than can any thing else to that brave and persistent public service which is required of the educated, but which is sometimes fraught with difficulty and peril. A multitude of instances in proof of this assertion might be adduced both from the Old Testament and from New Testament history, both from the early and from the later Christian centuries. In instances without number this faith in God has kept up the courage of the spiritual heroes of the church in the most dire and dreadful emergencies, and each in the face of death. What it has done it is still capable of doing. If the days of martyrdom are ended, the calls to endurance, for the truth and the right, are not ended. In order that one should meet them manfully, he needs the consciousness of a divine alliance.

Finally, one should walk with God because only then is he walking in the way to Heaven. If we would dwell with him above, we must walk with him here below, in conscious deference to his perfect will.

I pray you then, subordinate your learning to that which is beyond it, the fear of God. Toward him sound learning leads. Physics and metaphysics alike suppose a theology. A cosmos requires a regulator. History is but the record of God's ways with men. Language expresses the thought of men made in God's image. Social science is but a phantom, except as it takes account of the hand and will of Him who sets the solitary in families. Civil government that ignores the divine decree is a baseless fabric. Every highway of learning leads toward the great white throne.

Thus learning should be the handmaid of religion, which it cannot supersede. Learning gives increase of power. It should be fervently desired. It should be eagerly sought. It cannot be too accurate. It cannot be too profound. But it is to be subordinated to the highest ends. It is to be placed at God's disposal. "The highest learning and all for Christ." This consecration I bespeak at your hands. I ask it as the only use of your trained powers which is consistent with the highest good. I ask it in the name of the academy which, with that motive, has nurtured and trained you thus far. I ask it for the sake of the world, some portion of which awaits a healing touch from you.

I cannot look back upon a class of young people finishing an advanced course of study, as you are doing, without solicitude as to the direction which they will give their energies. I see them standing upon the threshold of life, peering anxiously into the future, some of them already revolving the question of their life work. Before them, on the one hand lies a wide and varied field of beneficent activity inviting their effort. On the other hand, a field of selfish, if not baneful, endeavor equally wide, to the scenes more fascinating, more clamorous, though not more urgent in its call. Toward which field will they turn? Into which course of life will they enter? I look at these candidates for the activities, the rewards and the honors of life, heirs of an immortal destiny—a destiny whose character their fast opening life is to determine. I look from them to the world, sick, sinful, needing light, needing love, needing spiritual healing, calling for sanctified workers in every line of effort. On the one hand the need; on the other those who can meet that need so vast and pressing. Will they respond? If they do not respond how shall they be qualified for their accepted calling? With this vision before me, the world, its multiplying and pressing needs, its opportunities for and solicitations to activity, both beneficent and baneful, the young men and women with an eternal personal destiny to settle, and a life work whose quality they are soon to determine, is it any wonder that there is solicitude? In the midst of the vision I lift my eyes upwards toward the blue and bending heavens and behold the infinite Father, all knowing and all loving, stooping from His throne, and in a voice of entreaty, when it might have been a voice of command, I hear Him saying, "Wilt thou not from this time cry unto me, 'My Father, Thou art the guide of my youth.' I hear his promise. "In all thy ways acknowledge me and I will direct thy paths." With this vision, listening to this voice of heavenly invitation and promise, how could we avoid solicitude? Let me urge you to take this offered heavenly companionship and guidance into your life. Make it a matter of every day desire and realization. Not otherwise can your trained powers be most wisely directed. It is the way of safety. It is the way of success. it is the way of present peace. It is the way of final salvation.

On Monday the public examinations at the academy were well attended, and were very interesting. The scholars showed excellent training and reflected great credit on their teachers as well as themselves.

The Linophilian was held at the academy Monday evening. The meeting opened with prayer by Rev. Mr. Smith, after which the following programme was rendered:

Instrumental Music............ ....
Miss Myrta Fisk.
Recitation............................"The Debate"
Miss Mary Peck.
Recitation........................"The Last Hymn"
Miss Minnie Smith.
Instrumental Music..................
Miss Nellie May Leary.
Debate..........."Is New England on the Decline?"
Affirmative—Harry Graves.
Negative—Stanley Hobbs.

The merits of the question were decided in favor of the latter.

A paper prepared by Misses Cantwell and Underwood and Walter Coyle was next read, which caused much merriment. The meeting closed with instrumental music by Miss Mary Peck.

The graduating exercises of the class of '88 of Monson Academy were held in Memorial Hall Tuesday morning, and were largely attended. The Springfield Orchestral Club furnished the music.

The platform, on which the trustees, teachers and graduating class and speakers occupied seats, was tastefully decorated with wild flowers, and the class motto, "Pondere non numero," in letters of evergreen, hung suspended overhead. The exercises opened with prayer by Rev. J. H. Emerson, and following is the orner of exercises:

Salutatory............................
Oration..........................."A Poor Boy's Chance"
Albert Eben Thresher.
Essay.........................................."Gates Ajar"
Clara Bell Clark.
Essay........"To See Ourselves As Others See Us"
Eliza Leonard Walker.
Essay, with Valedictory.............
Sarah Esther Stebbins.

At the close of the graduating exercises diplomas were presented by Rev. P. W. Lyman, president of the board of trustees. The address of the day, on "The Education of the Feelings," was delivered by F. M. Balliet, superintendent of the public schools of Springfield. The following is an abstract of the address, which was eloquent and highly interesting, exhibiting the thorough earnestness and convictions of the speaker, who held the audience in close attention throughout.

The alumni dinner and the 85th anniversary of Monson Academy called together about 70 of the graduates, who greeted the old classmates, and recounted the deeds and achievements of their academy life. Among those present were Rev. Julius H. Ward of Boston, Col. Charles Joslyn of Hartford, Conn., Rev. P. W. Lyman of Belchertown, Rev. Mr. Dustan of Hartford, and H. W. Blake of Springfield. Rev. Mr. Ward called the meeting to order and introduced Col. Joslyn as toastmaster. The after-dinner speaking was very enjoyable, and participated in by Rev. Julius Ward, who spoke of the past and the future of the academy; Col. Joslyn of the advantages of Monson academy over other academys of the same class; Rev. Mr. Lyman stated the condition of the school and its advancement. Other brief speeches were made by Cyrus W. Holmes, Jr., Rev. F. S. Hatch, Rev. J. F. Lee, H. W. Blake, Rufus Stebbins and James Tufts. The officers elected for the ensuing year were as follows: President, Rev Julius H. Ward of Boston; vice president, Lucius D. Trow of Hardwick; secretary, E. F. Morris of Monson; treasurer, Dr. F. W. Ellis of Monson; committee to arrange for the exercises next year, Prof. Dustan, Miss Esther Holmes, Miss Hattie Anderson. The exercises closed with remarks by Prof. Dustan.

The class tree exercises were held at the academy at 4 o'clock p. m., where the class planted the class ivy, and the following programme was rendered: Middle address to seniors, Miss Julia Underwood; prophecy, Miss Mary Peck; history, Miss Clara Bell Clark; the ode composed by Miss Nellie May Leary was sung by the class.

A ball game between the academy base ball nine and the alumni was played on Flynt's park at 4.30 o'clock, and resulted in a victory for the alumni by a score of 23 to 12.

The exercises of the day closed by the senior reception at academy hall in the evening. A large number of the former students were present, and the '88 class received the congratulations of their friends. Lane's orchestra furnished music.

COMMENCEMENT WEEK AT WESLEYAN ACADEMY.

The anniversary exercises of this institution began last Friday evening with the first and second year prize declamation contest for the principal's prize. The programme, which follows, was well rendered and was far superior to those of the preceding years.

"My Lord Tomnoddy"..........................Barham
Wilbur C. Johnson, Marblehead, Mass.
"A Clock's Story" ..................................Anon
Carrie B. Davis, Philadelphia, Pa.
"Dangerous Legislation"....................J. McDowell
Walter S. Pember, Walpole, Mass.
"Two Runaways"...........................H. S. Edwards
M. Pauline Cushing, Wilbraham.
"How Mr. Sniggles Went to a Public Dinner"
E. F. Turner
Jesse F. Welles, Boston, Mass.
"Mother and Poet"..........Elizabeth B. Browning
Lila M. Gould, Florence, Mass.
"The Old-Fashioned Man of God"..............Paxton
Alfred E. Upham, Rutland, Mass.
"Annie and Willie's Prayer"..................S. P. Snow
Louise Houghton, Wilbraham.
"Shamus O'Brien"....................................Lover
Harry L. St. Clair, St. Paul, Minn.
"Mice at Play"..........................................Anon
Ethel DeV. Tassin, Washington, D. C.

On Sunday morning at the M. E. church Dr. G. M. Steele delivered the annual sermon before the graduating class. The graduates were ushered into their seats by four juniors appointed for the purpose. The chancel was very neatly decorated with various kinds of flowers. The text was from John x: 10: "I am come that they may have life, and that they may have it more abundantly." After the preacher had spoken at length about the coming of Christ and of Christ's life as being the ideal example for us to follow, he pictured the golden opportunities open to those who live a consistent Christian life, and closed his discourse by exhorting them to follow the doctrines of Christ and to be faithful to His cause. The service was very impressive and will long be remembered by the members of the class and visitors.

The examinations before the conference committee commenced Monday morning and were completed Tuesday evening. According to the report of the examining committee, the standard of scholarship is much higher than it has been for many years in the past.

Large numbers of the alumni and friends of the students arrived on Monday, and as a result the chapel was very well filled at the junior prize declamation contest that evening. The selections rendered, especially by the ladies, were highly appreciated by the audience. The programme was as follows:

"How the Old Horse Won the Bet"...O. W. Holmes
Frank E. Lindsey, North Dana, Mass.
"The March of Attila"..........Florence Landberry
Bessie M. Wright, Essex, Conn.
"Tammy's Prize"........................................Anon
Clara A. Hall, South Willington, Conn.
"Napoleon's Overthrow"...............Victor Hugo
Minton A. Norton, Plainville, Conn.
"Virginia of Virginia".................Amelia Rives
Ida C. Rogers, Newbury, Mass.
"Tobe's Monument"..............Elizabeth Kilham
Amy E. Wood, Montevideo, Uruguay.
"Horatius at the Bridge".......................Macauley
George D. Lamberton, Westfield, Mass.
"Surly Tim's Troubles"..............Francis H. Burnett
Claudia A. Ross, Wallingford, Conn.

Professor Raymond deserves much commendation for his unwearied efforts in trying to secure the success of the prize declamation contest, which was largely attended and very much enjoyed by all.

In the church Tuesday evening, Dr. Bradford K. Pierce of Boston, an alumnus of Wesleyan academy, delivered a very eloquent address before the alumni. He spoke so interestingly that at the close of his address it was moved and carried that the alumni present the speaker with a vote of thanks for his kindness in profitably entertaining them that evening. The election of officers for the ensuing year then took place and resulted as follows: President, Rev. Loranus Crowell; secretary, Rev. Benjamin Gilll; treasurer, Dr. G. M. Steele. After the address an art reception was given by Miss Wyman at the studio. A large number of crayon portraits and oil paintings were exhibited, which were all the production of the students. Miss Wyman received many congratulations on her success from several of the most critical judges.

Naturally one of the most interesting of the exercises was the chapel service Wednesday morning, at which were distributed several of the prizes. At this meeting the examining committee presented their report, which was followed by the reading of the students' marks for the year. The prizes were distributed as follows: The prize for the best declamation by a gentleman of the junior class awarded to George D. Lamberton of Westfield, and honorable mention was given to Frank E. Lindsey of North Dana. Prize for the best declamation by a lady of the junior class awarded to Amy E. Wood of Montevideo, Uruguay. Prize for best declamation by gentleman of first or second year classes, Harry St. Clair of St. Paul, Minn., and honorable mention to Jesse F. Welles of Boston. Prize for best declamation by a lady of first or second year classes, M. Pauline Cushing and Louise Houghton, both of Wilbraham. As the committee deemed both of these ladies deserving of the prize, they decided to give one prize to each.

The Boothby mathematical prize for the senior who should pass the best examination for admission to college was awarded to Frederick H. Tackaberry of New York city. After this affair was disposed of, the chairman of the committee on examinations gave a very favorable report of the year's work. In behalf of the committee he tendered their thanks to the faculty for their diligence and successful accomplishments during the past year.

At a meeting of the trustees in "Club" hall Wednesday afternoon, every member of the faculty was re-elected to serve another year in their respective positions. The trustees purchased crayon portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Orin Daggett, the former steward and stewardess of the academy, and hung them on the walls of the dining hall as a token of their appreciation of Mr. and Mrs. Daggett's faithful service during the sixteen years in which they filled the offices.

The class day exercises of '88 were given on the campus Wednesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. The class occupied seats on the grand stand, while the audience found seats under the trees in front, though a large number were seated on the grass. Many persons came from the surrounding towns to witness the exercises, the following being the programme:

Salutory...........................
Albert L. Crowell.
Principal's Response.......................
Rev. G. M. Steele, D. D.
Class History............................
Samuel J. Watson, Louis B. Grover.
Class Poem..............................
Lou B. Ballou.
Oration....................."The Dreams of Youth"
John S. Pullman.
Music............................................"Medley"
Class.
Presentations........................
Frederick H. Tackaberry.
Address to Classes.......................
Bertha M. Styles.
Class Prophecy.......................
Joseph H. Hefflon, Carrie Steele.
Immortelle Ceremony....................
Elsie Wood,
Farewell Song.........................
Class.

The class song was a composition of several glees and was very well received by the audience. The presentation to the different classes by Mr. Tackaberry was very interesting. The following are the names of the representatives who responded to the address of the donor and returned the thanks of their classes: Junior, W. L. Eaton; second year, C. A. Gray; first year, S. J. Rook, who proved their ability to answer the sarcastic remarks of '88's representative. An orchestra from Springfield assisted in the musical part of the programme. The most interesting of all the various parts of the programme was the "immortelle ceremony" by Elsie Wood, to which the audience listened with great interest. It is safe to assert that this was the best class day Wesleyan has ever seen. The officers of the class are: President, Joseph H. Hefflon; vice-president, Bertha M. Stiles; treasurer, William H. Hall; secretary, Bessie H. Warner.

The musical department of Welseyan Academy was was shown off to good advantage at the commencement concert at the church Wednesday evening. The pupils were assisted by Miss Blanche Clarke, soprano, of Boston, and Miss Lida Low, accompanist. A very large audience was present and witnessed the following programme:

Organ Solo—"Offertoire in C".....Alex. Lemprevost
Emily B. Spaulding.
Soprano Solo and Male Quartette—
"World, Thou Art Fair"..............Hiller
Elsie Wood,
Alfred E. Upham, E. P. Van Deusen,
E. Hugh Crosby, Robert H. Guibord.
Duo—"Oberon"........................C. M. von Weber
First Piano, W. H. Brown,
Second Piano, Grace A. T. Garner.
Vocal Solo—"Cupa Fatal"...............Centimeri
Miss Blanche Clark.
Organ Solo—Overture, "Euryanthe"
C. M. von Weber
Louise B. Grover.
Vocal Solo—"Good Bye".............................Tosti
Miss Blanche Clarke.
Organ Solo—"Fantaisie on an Air by Rode"
W. T. Best
Maytie A. Case.
Vocal Duet—"The Venetian Regatta".......Rossini
Alice H. A. Philbrick, Bertha M. Cushing.
Duo—"Norma"........................de Bellini
First Piano, Louise B. Grover,
Second Piano, Frank E. Lindsey.
Vocal Solo—"Three Wishes".................Pinsuti
Miss Blanche Clarke.
Organ Solo—Welsh March—
"Gorhoffedd Gwyn Harlech"......W. T. Best
Wm. H. Brown.

Never before in the history of the school has the standard in the musical department been so high, and is all due to the faithful services of Misses Stebbins and Carr, for which they deserve much praise.

A reunion of the alumni and active members of "Old Club" took place in the Society Hall at six o'clock Wednesday evening. Every member had a very sociable time. Professor Rockwell was toastmaster. The following responded: "Clergymen," Dr. L. Crowell; "The Alumni," Mr. W. M. Prest; "Undergaduates," G. W. Simonson.

The need of refurnishing the hall was discussed, and active measures for that purpose adopted.

At 9 o'clock yesterday morning the senior class began the programme of their graduating exercises, which lasted until 1 o'clock. As on all previous occasions, many visitors were present, among whom were many notable clergymen. The main feature of the programme was the contest for the two senior rhetorical prizes, one of which was established by G. W. and J. A. Saxe for the best oration by a senior gentleman on graduation day; the other was given by the class of '87 for the best oration by a lady. All the orations were very interesting and were rendered without a single halt. The programme consisted also of several musics, and at the close an address to the class by the principal, immediately after which the diplomas were distributed. As the speakers left the stage after delivering their orations, they were presented with many handsome bouquets by their relatives and friends.

At half past three o'clock in the afternoon the class of '73 held a reunion at Club Hall. With a few exceptions every member of the class was present. Several toasts were responded to, and after a very jolly time of two hours they adjourned.

Of all good times enjoyed by Wesleyan students the social interviews are the most highly appreciated. For many years past it has been the custom of the school to have an interview in the chapel at the opening and closing of each term, and the most important of these is the one held at the closing of the commencement exercises. The popularity of these occasions constantly increases, and each one seems to surpass all those proceeding. The interview of last evening was by no means an exceptional case. It was given under the auspices of "Old Club" society. G. W. Davison acted as president, with Miss M. F. Powell as vice president, and this interview has been pronounced the best ever given in Wesleyan Academy. During the evening's exercises Dr. Steele brought forward a very interesting subject. It was the distributing of the senior rhetorical prizes. The gentleman's prize was given to John S. Pullman of New Britain, Conn. Honorable mention to John D. Murphy.

The lady's prize was given to Mary E. Howard of Wilbraham; honorable mention to Bertha M. Stiles. After the close of the interview the seniors held their class supper. The following persons compose the class: Alice Adams, Caroline Steele, Ada E. Alden, Frederic H. Tackaberry, Luella B. Ballou, Samuel J. Watson, Lottie B. Bancroft, Ella E. Glover, May L. Bancroft, Louie B. Grover, Maytie A. Case, Joseph H. Hefflon, Albert L. Crowell, James D. Murphy, Cora P. L. Grinnell, Arthur I. Powers, William H. Hall, Walter J. Rist, Mary E. Howard, Nellie H. Shumway, Winchester D. Osgood, Bertha M. Stiles, John S. Pullman, Frederic Von Toble, Gregory Rosenblum, Bessie H. Warner, Elsie Wood. In addition to the above, the following graduated in special courses: William H. Brown, Grace A. T. Garner, Frank E. Lindsey, Emily B. Spaulding, Florence A. Ward, Mabel R. Welch, Amy E. Wood.

WARE'S FRENCH PROTESTANT CHURCH.

Dedicated with Interesting Ceremonies.

The new French Evangelical church in Ware was dedicated last Sunday afternoon with interesting and impressive services. The church was filled not only by members of their own society but from all the other churches in town. The floral decorations were elaborate and in good taste. At the back of the pulpit was a beautiful floral cross. Rev. A. T. Perry of the East Congregational church presided. The exercises commenced with an invocation hymn, sung by the French people in their own language in a manner that showed their soul was in it. The reading of the scriptures was by Rev. A. T. Perry, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. Provost of the French Protestant church of Springfield, after which the following hymn was sung by the congregation:

I love thy kingdom, Lord,—
The house of thine abode,
The church our blest Redeemer saved
With his own precious blood.

I love thy church, O God!
Her walls before thee stand,
Dear as the apple of thine eye,
And graven on thy hand.

For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend:
To her my cares and toils be given,
Till toils and cares shall end.

The responsive reading was led by Rev. C. W. Duffield of the Trinity Episcopal church, and an anthem was sung by the choir of the East Congregational church.

Rev. Thomas A. Dorion, in giving his statement, said: "Since the last time we met, at the laying of the corner stone—March 18th, 1888,—of this building, the temperature has changed considerably. Then it was cold, now it is warm, but I know that the temperature of your hearts has not changed in regard to this work. Judging from appearances you are as much interested now, if not more, than last winter. This building has cost, with the land, $6700. It is more than we expected at first. There remains due on the building $4300, and we have every reason to believe it will be paid in a short time. In regard to the spiritual progress of this mission, I think that figures speak better than words. Fifteen months ago—when I succeeded Rev. T. G. A. Cote—six individuals were the only persons frequenting our meetings, and it remained so for about a month. Eight months later, on Sept. 27th, 1887, a church was organized with 22 members. Since then 19 new members have been received, and I think this mission is the only one where you will find as many converted from the Romish church. With these few facts you have every reason to be encouraged for the sacrifice you have made in behalf of this mission work. You may feel assured the French Protestants will never forget the Christian sympathy they have received from you."

REV. MR. COTE'S ADDRESS.

Rev. T. G. A. Cote, general missionary of the state, made an address in English. After thanking very much all the friends of Ware for their generous help in aiding to erect this beautiful temple of God, he showed the necessity of the French evangelization in New England, and the necessity of erecting temples and organizing French Congregational churches. "There are," said the speaker, "over one million French Canadians in the United States, and about thirty-five thousand of them are Protestants, or incline to become so. Our work is especially directed toward those who have become loose from the system of Romanism. In a town like this, where there are troubles between priest and people, we find the best part, the most intelligent class of the French, entirely out of the system of Popery. Our duty is to show to these countrymen that the religion of Christ exists outside of the walls of the temples of Romanism. Our chief aim is to educate the young in the light of the Gospel, and make of them men and women that will sustain every national enterprise, beginning by your grand school system. A large third of the whole French population of this town is outside of Popery. So if these men, women and children are left to themselves, growing and advancing toward their graves without the power of the gospel of Christ, do you see what dreadful responsibility falls on the Christian people of this town? It is our privilege to let you know your duties and your privileges in this great work. We started this work in this state in 1877. The first church was organized in Lowell July 3d, 1877, with 7 members, and now our church stands with a stone building costing $14,000, and well furnished inside, with a church roll of 150 members. We have a church at Springfield of nearly 100 members and a building costing $10,000. We have a church organized at Holyoke with a pastor and about 75 members. We have a church at Fall River with about 100 members. The French people of Fall River are building a church to cost $4000. We have a pastor at Spencer, with a beautiful prospect for the future, and two other missionaries at Marlboro and New Bedford. We thank God for so many benedictions, and our success proves to us the great necessity of prosecuting the work in every state. Last week we presented the cause to the Rhode Island churches, and Rev. J. A. Derome, nephew of a Roman Catholic bishop, and a graduate of Hartford Seminary this spring, has been engaged for the Rhode Island mission. Our French paper, the Lemeur Franco American, and our French college, soon to be transplanted to Springfield, gives us all the necessary equipments to do a blessed work among the French population of New England.

REV. A. T. PERRY,

in his address, said: "Our Lord our God, the Almighty, Creator of the heavens and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands. The heaven of heavens cannot contain him, much less stands for the four walls of human building. And yet in the infinite condescension of God he has always chosen among men a place for the manifestation of his glory. When King Solomon built the magnificent temple, for which he and his father had been preparing, the Lord came and the cloud of his glory filled the temple. So always our God has chosen to manifest himself in certain places upon earth and show forth his glory. The people of God must worship him, and it is fitting that a place specially prepared should be set apart for that purpose. As we come to-day thus to set apart this edifice, it is with the earnest prayer that the infinite God, our Father, our Saviour, our Sanctioner, may choose to manifest his presence here. It is with thanksgiving to God that we see this little church, not yet a year old, entering a house of worship like this. The spire, like an index finger pointing heavenward, is a constant invitation to all who dwell in sight of it to look away from earth to the other world, and to him who controls the destinies of eternity. We thank God today for his goodness and his help, and we congratulate the French church upon their good fortune. We feel, too, a deeper interest in you and in this chapel because we have had a share in building it. May this edioce stand in the years to come as a token of our Christian fellowship and a pledge of our Christian love. But this has not been placed here merely to furnish a place where Christians can meet and worship. It has been erected chiefly as a means for Christian work. Not only that Christians may meet here for their own satisfaction, but also, and mainly, that those who are in error and sin may be brought to Christ, the truth and the life. This chapel, then, is part of the equipment of this company, for the fighting that is before it. May it prove adapted to your uses and an efficient aid in winning souls to Christ. You stand nearer to the enemy than do we. The man of sin who sits in the seven hilled city has his followers and agents among us, and into the darkness which he has made you are trying to throw the light of the gospel. This land of ours, thank God, has never yet been the Pope's land, and it never will be. I know that Rome is making great exertions to control politics and win adherents, to destroy our public schools and undermine the foundation of our liberties. But this is a Protestant nation now, and I believe it will ever be. Rome cannot hold her own against education and free speech, the light which Protestantism has shed abroad. The Bible, upon which she professes to rest, is no sooner given to her people than her control is gone. The light streaming from God's word surely dispels the darkness she has caused. You of the French church are among us, still somewhat as strangers. You speak a foreign tongue, you have been with us but a few years. Yet there is a bond of Christian sympathy binding us all together, a bond reaching back to the days of our fathers, when the Lollard in England and the Huguenot in France were well-nigh destroyed by the treachery, the unlawful intolerance of a Romanized government. But persecution and the sword cannot destroy the truth, and to-day, in a free land, a land which Rome can never curse as she has the countries of the old world, in this free land to-day, the children of the Lollards and the children of the Huguenots join hands and unite voices while we praise God that the truth has triumphed, and while we pray that the pure gospel of Jesus Christ, the son of God, may spread over all the earth until the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdon of our Lord and of his Christ, and shall reign forever and ever."

The French congregation then sang a dedication hymn in their own language, after which the dedicatory address was given by Rev. Joshua Coit, secretary of the Home Missionary Society of Boston. His text was first Timothy, third chapter and fifteenth verse: "The house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and the ground of truth." Paul was writing Timothy a letter, and in giving the reason why he wrote he says: "These things write I unto thee that you mayst know how thou oughtest to behave thyself," or as the new version has it, "How men ought to behave themselves in the house of God," and to this he adds by way of emphasis, as seizing a chance to say what he thought of the church, or better, as inspired to declare what the spirit knew the church to be, "What is one church of one living God? the pillar and the ground of truth." That the house of God is a building devoted to His worship, stands for the church of the living God, and is its outward manifestation and representation in the community, is the reason and justification, if any be needed, for the expenditure of large sums of money in the building and adorning of churches. Everywhere and among all people the temples of God have been the most costly public structures. If it is fit and appropriate that state houses and city halls and town buildings be suited to the wants and correspond in some degree to the ability and dignity of the state, city and town, those churches should also be suited to the wants, and should correspond to the ability of those who worship in them.

The prayer of dedication was offered by Rev. E. S. Huntress, pastor of the First Congregational church at Ware Center. The exercises closed with the singing by the congregation of the following hymn, and benediction by the pastor:

O Thou, whose own vast temple stands,
Built over earth and sea,
Accept the walls that human hands
Have raised to worship thee.

May erring minds that worship here
Be taught the better way;
And they who mourn, and they who fear,
Be strengthened as they pray.

Lord, from thine inmost glory send,
Within these courts to bide,
The peace that dwelleth without end,
Serenely by thy side!

May faith grow firm and love grow warm,
And pure devotion rise,
While round these hallowed walls the storm
Of earth-born passion dies.

If We Knew.

If we knew the cares and crosses
  Crowding 'round our neighbor's way;
If we knew the little losses,
  Sorely grievous, day by day,
Would we then so often chide him
  For his lack of thrift and gain,
Leaving on his heart a shadow,
  Leaving on our lives a stain?

If we knew the clouds above us,
  Held by gentle blessings there,
Would we turn away all trembling,
  In our blind and weak despair?
Would we shrink from little shadows
  Lying on the dewy grass,
While 'tis only birds of Eden
  Just in mercy flying past?

If we knew the silent story
  Quivering through the heart of pain,
Would our manhood care to doom them
  Back to haunts of guilt again?
Life hath many a tangled crossing,
  Joy hath many a break of woe;
And the cheek tear-stained is whitest—
  This the blessed angels know.

Let us reach into our bosom
  For the key to others' lives,
And with love toward erring nature
  Cherish good that still survives;
So that when our disrobed spirits
  Soar to realms of night again,
We may say: "Dear Father, judge us
  So we judge our fellow men."

A MARRIAGE IN THE DARK.

At ten years of age I, Constance Urquhart, was stricken with blindness. As well as I can remember this did not happen suddenly. A slight mist at first seemed to veil my eyes, the outline of objects became blurred and indistinct, colors lost their vividness and blended confusedly with each other, and I was startled at times by flashes of almost intolerable brightness. Gradually the mist deepened into the blackness of night.

I was too young to realize fully the extent of the calamity which had befallen me. My mother disliked talking about it, and alway endeavored to evade my questions. Only now and then I could hear her weeping quietly to herself. At first I was terribly frightened. I thought in my childish mind that the sun had departed forever, and that eternal darkness enveloped mankind. Gradually the truth dawned upon me. I, only, and the few other unfortunates, it would seem, were to be excluded from the light of day. Others could see, for them the sun and stars continued to shine, for them the leaves grew green in summer and brown and gold in autumn, and still the world was fair. From me, alas, even the familiar face of my dearly-loved mother was hidden, and she became a voice and a presence, heard and felt indeed, but unseen. I was alone in the dark.

In imagination I saw stretched out before me the long, melancholy vista of life. Life under the ban; set apart and indescribably solitary; to be lived through somehow amid deep gloom until it merged at last into the profounder shadow of death. Many a time I have thought it would be better to die at once and be done with it; many a time I have rebelled indignantly against my fate and shed bitter tears over it, so unmerited did it seem to me—so unjust.

And then slowly, almost imperceptably, a new world began to open out for me. A mysterious world, full of surprises and revelations, of incredible things. A strange world, in which every variation of texture, every inflection of sound, carried with it new and pregnant meanings, where touch became a talisman and hearing was the keystone of knowledge, and over which music ruled with indisputable sway, the sole source of consolation and delight.

The specialists who had been consulted about my case held out little prospect of ultimate recovery, but hope never entirely died within me. Now and then faint glimmerings passed across my eyes like the first flirtations of light at early dawn, but these departed as they came and left me in my accustomed darkness. Always they brought with them a thrill of wild delight and longing, and were followed by the reaction of profound despair.

As year after year passed away and brought no change in my condition, I grew by degrees resigned, and even in a half-hearted way, contented with my lot.

Occasionally I had a relapse. I remember on my twenty-first birthday I sat before my useless looking-glass twisting and untwisting the long coil of my hair, and wondering, for the first time in my life, what I was like. It may seem strange that I had never speculated on this before, but it was really so. Good looks and bad looks had in fact no significance for me. The voice only was of importance; I judged the character and formed my likings and antipathies.

But on this particular day I felt an overwhelming desire to know in what guise I presented myself to the outer world. I was familiar with the shape of my face, as far as I could judge it from touch. My nose seemed straight, my mouth small, my hair soft and abundant. But these things conveyed little tangible impression to my mind. I longed desperately to see myself, if only for an instant, to lift for a brief second the everlasting veil of night which hung over me. Placing my elbows on the table, I strained my eyes at the glass. I exerted all the force of my will. Was I successful? My nerves throbbed, and across my eyes passed a faint, ghastly glimmer. It grew brighter, brighter than I had ever seen it before, and then faded slowly away into blackness.

It was a sad disappointment. I laid my head down on the table and flooded those useless, sightless orbs of mine with tears.

My mother came in and found me weeping.

"What, crying, Conny?" she said with surprise, for I was not often taken so, "and on your birthday too! My child, what is the matter?"

She sat down beside me and put her arms round me in her motherly, comforting way.

"It is only that I am foolish, mother, and can't resign myself to the inevitable. You will laugh when I tell you that I actually tried to see myself—yes, to see myself in the glass. Presumption, wasn't it? And I cried because I couldn't."

"Poor child! Poor Conny," said my mother, kissing me. "It is very, very sad for you, but I thought you had got used to it, dear, after all these years."

"There are some things one can't get used to, mother. But never mind that now. I want to hear what I am like. Am I beautiful, pretty, simply passable, or downright ugly? You never will tell me, but I'm twenty-one to-day, and I think it's quite time I knew.

"My child, to me you will always be beautiful."

"Do you know, mother, that is a most unsatisfactory answer. It sounds very pretty, but it tells me just nothing."

"You will find out all about it some day, my dear."

"I believe I'm as ugly as a witch, and that you are keeping it from me to spare my feelings."

My mother laughed softly to herself.

"I don't think any one could call you ugly, Conny," she said.

And than was all I could get out of her; with this dubious information I was obliged to be contented. From that time forward I took it for granted that I was a very plain young woman, and began to think it was just as well I could not see my image in the glass. Perhaps this was the very impression which my mother, who was a wise woman in her way, wished to convey to me. Plain or pretty, however, it mattered very little; marriage for me was out of the question, had I been as fair as Cleopatra. What man but would prefer a homely wife with a pair of useful eyes in her head to the most beautiful blind woman in the world?

As my mother declined to give me any definite information, I was compelled perforce to remain in ignorance upon the interesting subject of my personal appearance. I knew of no one else whom I could consult on the subject. The dull little country town in which we lived did not afford much material in the way of society, and perhaps we had neglected to make full use of our opportunities. My father, a medical man, had been dead many years, and lay buried in a crowded London cemetery; while the two hundred a year which we inherited on his death, though it sufficed to keep us in decent comfort, was far from enabling us to make a figure even in our own insignificant circle.

With the exception of the curate, who called regularly to look after our spiritual welfare, our only visitor was Dr. Browne, a veteran medical practitioner, and an old friend of my father's. He was the one link which connected us with the outside world, and upon him we depended entirely for our knowledge of its doings. By and by even this link was severed; the good old doctor died, and our isolation became complete. His practice, after being advertised for three months in the Lancet, was sold to Dr. Saxon, whose arrival caused more excitement in our little provincial city than the advent of an eastern prince would have made in London.

We had not expected that Dr. Saxon would call upon us unless professionally; we knew our reputation for exclusiveness and unsociability. Nevertheless call he did, more than once, and seemed to derive considerable satisfaction from his visits.

As a sole representative of society he certainly excelled Dr. Brown. He was younger, better read, knew more of the world, and could express himself always clearly and sometimes even brilliantly. His visits became to me a source of keen pleasure. I liked the tones of his deep voice, the firm grip of his hand, the sound of his quick, alert, tread. On his side he was good enough to express admiration for my musical talents; an admiration perhaps not altogether undeserved, for music was my one passion. The immense amount of time and enthusiasm which I have devoted to piano practice would have been sadly wasted had I not become a tolerable mistress of the key-board.

In a lesser degree Dr. Saxon shared my musical raptures. He was himself a respectable violin player, and one result of our numerous duets was that we became fast friends.

A first friendship is generally a significant episode in one's existence, but to me it was something far more. It was both an awakening and a revelation. All the pent-up sympathies of years rushed along this new outlet, life became a changed thing, full of fresh hopes and wider possibilities, and containing, as it did, compensations, even for me. Without being consciously in love with Dr. Saxon, I yet felt that he was becoming indispensable to my existence.

I was standing, one evening in early autumn, by the French window which opened out on our little lawn. I knew by the time, and by certain indefinite sensation, which it always produces in me, that the sun was near its setting, and happened to be seized with one of the vain fits of helpless longing and impotent resentment with which I occasionally varied the monotony of resignation. It was the old, feeble, weary lament that I indulged in now and then, for the sake of the relief it brought me, but of which I was none the less heartily ashamed.

"Oh! that I could pierce the veil and see God's daylight again! Oh! for a glimpse of the free, wide sky, touched into glory of the setting sun! For that I would willingly give up the balance of my life. What, indeed, is life to me? A poor, helpless wretch, a burden to myself and utterly useless to others."

"Pardon me, Miss Urquhart, but I think your life may yet be of great use to others. And as for your burden, your friends will endeavor to make it light for you."

I had spoken my jeremiad aloud, as was my wont when I thought myself alone, and so preoccupied was I that even my keen hearing failed to detect Dr. Saxon's quick step across the lawn. It was the first time that the subject of my blindness had been even indirectly hinted at between us, and I felt myself blushing with shame and mortification. It was certainly annoying to be thus caught unpacking one's soul with words, and such weak ones.

"What will you think of me, doctor? I am afraid my reputation for fortitude is gone. It is very unlucky that you should have overheard my lamentations. But they do not mean very much. A kind of moral safety-valve; that's all."

The doctor took my light speech for what is was worth, and answered gravely and gently.

"Dear Miss Urquhart, I think, for my part, that you bear your affliction with admirable resignation."

"Admirable, indeed, when I was railing, in good set terms, at things in general, two minutes ago."

"Ah, well your railing was innocent enough. You would be more or less than human if you didn't feel a little bitter at times, and have done with it. May I ask, to adopt the professional manner, what was the exciting cause this evening?"

"Perverseness, doctor, that's all; and a vaporish longing for the moon, or, what to me is as difficult of attainment, a peep at the sunset. A foolish wish—my sun set forever, eleven years ago."

"Let me enlist my eyes in your service for once, and describe it to you as best I can."

"I thank you, Dr. Saxon; it would give me great pleasure; the greatest pleasure. Next to seeing for oneself, the most pleasant thing, I should imagine, is to look through the eyes of other people."

"I don't think," said the doctor with humorous gravity, "that as a describer of sunset I should take rank in the very first class. I wish, for your sake, that I were a Ruskin or a Theophile Guatier. Anyhow, I will do my best. In the first place, then, it happens to be a very fine sunset this evening."

"I was sure of it."

"From whence we are standing one can just catch a glimpse of the river, as it winds round under the low wooded hill. Perhaps you remember it, and the slender, thread-like spire that rises among the trees at the top?"

"It is so long since I saw it, though I have lived here all my life; but yes, I think I do remember it."

"Well, the hill and the trees look black now against the sunset, and the spire is like a little shapely-cut silhouette, standing out against a golden background. As for the river, it is cool and dark where it runs along the hillside, but beyond that the sun strikes it and it glows like a flame."

"Ah!"

"Across the sky are drawn many irregular bars of clouds, looking like long purple promontories running far away into the wide sea of gold and orange and green, and this sea gets brighter and brighter as it nears the great central glow, and then fades inperceptibly into the quiet blue of the night, out of which the stars are already beginning to look down on us."

"How very beautiful it must be," said I, with an involuntary sigh.

"Beautiful it is, but that hardly expresses it all. It is grand, solemn, imposing; looking at it one's mind seems somehow to get purified, one's whole being enlarged, you are filled with a sense of mental and physical spaciousness. To me it looks like the vista of a world to come—appears the promise of a future state. It is sublime; the element of beauty is subordinate. The purely beautiful" murmured the doctor under his breath, "is nearer at hand."

The words, however, were not so softly spoken but that my quick ear had caught their import.

"I don't quite know what you mean by that, doctor," said I.

"Well," he answered, after a second's hesitation, "you must forgive me if I confess frankly that I was thinking of yourself, Miss Urquhart."

"Of me!" I ejaculated, too much astonished to be coherent. "Surely you are joking."

"Do you really mean to say that you don't know what you are like?"

I reflected. I certainly did not know. I had, indeed, a general impression that I was painfully plain. Still, it was possible to be mistaken. Here was an opportunity of acquiring knowledge. To neglect it might be unwise. "It sounds very ridiculous, I daresay," I answered slowly, "but I am obliged to admit that I haven't the slightest notion what I am like."

"Impossible!"

"Easily impossible; and, in addition, quite true."

"Miss Urquhart," said the doctor, after a pause, to enable himself to grasp fully this stupendous fact, "you are, indeed, a phenomenon; a rara avis among young ladies; but such a state of things is abnormal and pretentious. Let me do for you what I tried to do for the sunset just now, and hold, in my clumsy way, the mirror up to nature. I will be your looking-glass—a most imperfect one—and tell you a little about yourself."

"I shall be delighted. That is, if you will promise to be severely accurate, and neither critical nor complimentary."

"It will be the strictly impartial observer; and as I will exaggerate nothing so I will set down naught in malice."

"Very well—go on, then—imprimis."

"Imprimis, you are tall."

"I know it," said I, calmly; "five feet seven."

"You are aware of this; very well. To particularize further; your hair is abundant and of an indescribable golden-brown color; your forehead good, intellectually speaking; artistically—here the impartial observer asserts himself—it may be, perhaps, a thought too high; a defect, if it be a defect, which is corrected by the natural wave of the hair. Eyebrows well defined and mathematically arched. As for the eyes themselves, they are large, bright, and of a clear hazel. Except for a faraway look, which tells us doctors a good deal, no one would imagine that you had not—well, the perfect use of them. They are shaded by long lashes, nose straight, and delicately chiselled; month———"

"Pray spare me further details and get on at once to the general effect."

"Now, I call that unreasonable. You can no more get a general effect without details than you can make a wall without bricks. However, I will be as brief as possible. To proceed, then: your chin, Miss Urquhart, I speak as impartially as I can, is—well, perfect. There is in the centre of it a very effective dimple."

"Please, doctor," I protested.

"Facial outline," continued he, imperturbably, "a pure oval; complexion, a very admirable blending of red and white."

"Dr. Saxon, I shall leave the room if you don't stop."

"The impartial observer apologizes; and, being admonished, leaves detailed criticism and hastens to sum up. His conclusion—on which he is prepared to stake his professional reputation—is that you have rare beauty, Miss Urquhart, and that of a superior order. He trusts that you are not offended."

"Oh, how could I be? But I think you are very much mistaken."

"Not in the least, I assure you. It isn't a question of mere prettiness, about which there might easily be a difference of taste. No two opinions are possible in your case."

It was true then. I believed I could trust the doctor's judgment, and there was no mistaking the sincere ring of his voice. I trembled with pleasure. Vain was all my careful schooling and elaborately evolved indifference to personal appearance. Here was I, a very woman, glowing with pride and pleasure at the thought that some poor share of personal beauty had fallen to my lot. Instinct is ineradicable, I suppose, and it is a woman's instinct to like to look pretty. My exultation, however, was of brief duration. The next moment I was sounding the depths, ovewhelmed by the thought of my blindness. My eyes filled with angry tears. I felt that the doctor was watching me, and turned my head aside. Then I heard him rise and pace up and down the room. Presently he halted and stood in front of me.

"Miss Urquhart," he said abruptly, "I came this evening to say good-by; I am going up to London for six months."

"To London!" I exclaimed.

"Yes. I want to complete some surgical studies in one of the great hospitals."

"Why, I thought you finished your student's career long ago."

"That is true in the ordinary sense; but a scientific man is more or less a student all his life. There is a subject in which I am deeply interested. I have a theory of my own about it that I wish to test practically. Before I go I want to ask a favor of you, Miss Urquhart. Will you let me examine your eyes?"

I assented, as a matter of course. It was not the first time I had been examined by curious scientists, and rang the bell for the lamp.

Dr. Saxon made his examination with the greatest care. I do not think my eyes had ever before been subjected to so minute a scrutiny. His manner was wholly professional, his questions few and to the point.

"Have you ever had any sensation of light?" was his last demand, "any feeling that the darkness was lifting, so to speak?"

Yes. Three or four times a gray mist seemed to rise in front of me. It was very bright the last time. I almost thought I was going to see."

"How long ago was that?"

"Six months. On my twenty-first birthday."

"Ah! Thank you very much; I won't trouble you with any more questions. Really, how late it is getting! I must be off at once; my hands are full just now, as you may suppose. Good-bye, Miss Urquhart. You have greatly obliged me by allowing me to make this examination."

"Do you think there is any hope for me?" I asked, plaintively.

"Hope! Of course—of course," said he, vaguely. "We doctors never give up that if we can help it. It is the finest of all medicines. Good-bye, once more!" And the doctor grasped my hand with a kind, firm pressure, and was gone.

It was fully twelve months before I saw him again. He went, I heard afterward, first to London, and thence, attracted by some great scientific luminaries, to Paris and Vienna. I am not ashamed to confess that the year of his absence appeared to me by far the longest in my life. With him my grasp on the realities of the world seemed to depart, and I sank back, with a shudder, into my old formless, objectless, meaningless existence. True, I had my mother, and the affection between us was deep and sincere; but there was too great a similarity about our mental processes; long familiarity had made us too well acquainted with every turn of the other's thought for our intercourse to be relieved much above the dead level of monotony. Music was my great solace, the chief weapon wherewith to ward off ennui and bring about a momentary feeling of contentment.

I have a rather fanciful habit, Wagnerian though it be, of associating airs with peculiar people. There is, for instance, a plaintive little melody of Mendelssohn's which invariably recalls my mother to me; and Dr. Saxon will always be linked in my mind with Raff's "Cavatina," for I was playing it softly to myself one evening when I heard his step in the hall. I ceased at once, and the next moment the doctor was standing in front of me, holding both my hands in his own.

"Well, Miss Urquhart," said he. "Here I am back again, and I hope you are very glad to see me."

"Very glad, indeed," I answered, withdrawing my hands, for I felt myself blushing like a schoolgirl.

"And I am delighted to be here again. It seems so like home after wandering about among the capitals of Europe."

"It gives me great pleasure to hear you say that."

"When I came into this room, just now, and heard the music and saw you seated at the piano in your white dress, with the firelight glancing on your hair, I felt—I wish I could tell you how I felt."

"Surely you are not afraid of a blind girl?"

"Well, I am not quite so certain of that. You don't know how formidable you can look at times, Miss Urquhart."

"I'm sorry. I hadn't the least intention of looking formidable."

"Formidably lovely, I mean."

"You ought not to say such things, Dr. Saxon."

"I can't help myself. They come out against my will." The doctor paused and then went on in a sudden burst of energy. "I must make a clean breast of it now or never. Dear Miss Urquhart—Constance—the fact is, I love you. I have done so, it seems to me from the first. Forgive my stupid, blundering way of saying it. I have come to ask you to be my wife."

A proposal of marriage! I could hardly believe my ears. Was the world coming to an end? So extraordinary and unlooked for an occurrence fairly took my breath away, and rendered me for the moment speechless.

But the doctor was a man of action, and had heard somewhere that silence indicates consent. His arm stole gently around my waist and I felt his lips on my cheek.

For a moment I let myself go. The sense of repose, of rest, of protecting affection was too delicious, and I loved the doctor. I realized it now for the first time. Then I knew, or fancied I knew, that I was not doing my duty; and it is a pity that duty should be so often disagreeable. It did not seem to me that my way of life ran along such pleasant paths as these. I disengaged his arm, and pulled myself together.

"Dr. Saxon," I stammered, "I am grateful to you, believe me; deeply grateful. But you must see that this is impossible. Marry a woman who will assist you to fight the battle of life; don't be dragged down by a poor, sightless wretch like me. It is too great a sacrifice."

"Sacrifice! Rubbish!" the doctor cried. "Who talks of sacrifice? The only question is, do you care for me?"

I turned aside my head. He was reading my face, I knew, and that was betraying me.

The next moment he had me in his arms.

"Ah, I see how it is," he cried triumphantly. "You do love me, Conny, just a little, don't you?"

"Well, yes; if you must know."

"And you can talk of sacrifice," he went on, still a little indignant. "The sacrifice is all on your side, if you only knew it, you lovely simpleton. How do you suppose a poor ugly devil of a hard-working, commonplace doctor could hope to win one of the loveliest women in England"—for so he talked in his infatuation—"if she had all her senses about her? I am simply the luckiest medical man in the United Kingdom."

What did I care if he were poor and ugly? It was enough that we loved each other. That was material sufficient for happiness.

And happy we were to a degree which a short time before I should have thought impossible on earth. It was only when my first baby was born to me that I began to regret my want of sight.

I was assured on all sides that my child was a miracle of infantile loveliness, and though by no means willing to believe this, I felt a natural longing to be able to judge for myself. Often I passed my hand over the soft baby features, and tried to picture them in my mind, but so long had I lived in darkness that it was difficult for me to form even the idea of a face. I don't think I had at this time any hope of regaining my sight, though, to please my husband, I bathed my eyes regularly, night and morning, with a certain lotion he gave me.

Imagine, then, the astonishment, almost the awe, I felt when my dear doctor said to me one day: "You will want all your courage to-morrow, Conny; but I think you have plenty."

"Courage for what?" I asked innocently.

"I am going to operate on your eyes, dearest. And may God give me skill!"

Light! Light at last! Only the dim, uncertain light of a darkened room, it is true, but how glorious, how divine it seemed! The first glimpse of land to a shipwrecked sailor—the vision of paradise to a tempted saint—I can only compare it to such things; things long hoped for, keenly desired, despaired of, and found at last. But all comparisons are weak enough to express the rapture, the almost frantic joy, the passionate gratitude that filled my heart.

I know I screamed aloud, and in an instant the bandages were replaced.

The first thing I saw distinctly when I was permitted to use my newly recovered sense a little was my boy in his nurse's arms. My informants had not deceived me. Nothing, surely, could be brighter than his eyes, more charming than his expression, nor more altogether delightful than the little dimpled fist which clutched at my finger when they placed him on my knee. Then I turned to look at my husband—my hero. I owed it all to him—eyesight, happiness, a greater gift than life itself. It was for this he had studied in London, and worked in Paris and Vienna. To be grateful enough for such an immense obligation was impossible, but I longed to thank him, however inadequately, for what he had done for me.

A tall, dark, very distinguished-looking man was standing by my chair, gazing down upon me with kindly brown eyes. I re-

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 29, 1888.

Gen. Sheridan plans to spend the summer in his new cottage at Nonquit, near New Bedford.

The New York court of appeals does not go much on civil service reform, apparently, having decided that the civil service laws of that state are unconstitutional, so far as they apply to the department of public works.

Chas. A. Pitcher, teller of the Union Bank of Providence, R. I., absconded last Saturday, and was arrested at Montreal Tuesday, with $700,000 on his person in cash and securities belonging to the bank. No time was lost in emptying that pitcher.

President Cleveland was officially notified of his renomination Tuesday by the committee appointed for that purpose, to whom he made a speech in which, speaking of his administration, he said:

> In the exercise of the functions of the high trust confided to me I have yielded obedience only to the Constitution and the solemn obligation of my oath of office. I have done those things which, in the light of the understanding God has given me, seemed most conducive to the welfare of my countrymen and the promotion of good government. I would not if I could, for myself nor for you, avoid a single consequence of a fair interpretation of my course.

The Republican national convention completed its work Monday, and its candidates for president and vice president are recorded above. It took eight ballots to do the business. Three were taken on Friday and two on Saturday, an adjournment then being made to Monday. Blaine's friends continued to insist that his nomination was inevitable in the end, but two dispatches from him were read Monday morning earnestly requesting his friends to refrain from voting for him. This put an end to their schemes, and the convention was not long in coming to a decision. The changes in the voting are shown in Benjamin Harrison of Indianapolis, Ind., the nominee for president, is a grandson of Gen. William H. Harrison, the hero of Tippecanoe, and ninth president of the United States. He is in his 55th year. He went into the war a second lieutenant and came out a brevet brigadier general. He has served a term in the United States Senate, is an able lawyer, very popular at home, a staunch Republican, and a steadfast Presbyterian. Levi P. Morton of New York is a sprightly man of 62, of Vermont origin, and head of the banking house of Morton, Bliss & Co. He is well known in business and society, and was minister to France under Presidents Garfield and Arthur. The ticket is one which will commend itself to every Republican.

WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT IT.

Upon the tariff question the Democratic policy and platform are right and the Republican policy and platform are wrong. —Providence Journal.

Restrained from nominating Blaine, the convention proceeded to nominate Blaine's shadow. That is the exact size of Benjamin Harrison of Indiana.—Boston Globe.

With a man so strong and worthy, the Republican party has a right to look for a popular uprising not unlike that which swept Martin Van Buren from power in 1840.—N. Y. Tribune.

Mr. Harrison will be a strictly partisan candidate. * * He is likely to accept the tariff feature of the platform in its entirety and strength. Beyond this we see in him a colorless candidacy.—Boston Herald.

A high tariff and low wages is the Republican offer; free raw materials and high wages is the Democratic offer. Between these two radically opposing policies the voters must choose in November.—N. Y. Herald.

It is a respectable ticket all through. * * We warn the Democrats that they will have to put forth their best efforts and bring out their utmost strength. It is no sham battle that is opening before them.—N. Y. Sun.

The nomination of Harrison and Morton is the happiest solution that could possibly have been made of a great political problem. If it were not so clearly the result of human wisdom, we should call it inspiration.—Indianapolis Journal, Rep.

Gen. Harrison's nomination is not in any sense strong. He is lacking in most of the qualities which combine to make a great party leader and popular candidate before the people. He cannot carry Indiana and he cannot be elected.—Indianapolis Sentinel, Dem.

Benjamin Harrison is a Republican, always was a Republican. He is sound on all the great principles laid down in the admirably constructed platform of the party. His character is as pure as his name is illustrious.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

The ticket has strength and character, and the names bring special strength to it from the localities from which they are drawn. * * The issue of protection is the overshadowing one. With it squarely put to the front, the Republicans ought to win. —Boston Advertiser.

The nomination of Gen. Harrison was probably the wisest action under the circumstances that could have been taken by the convention. His public and private life have been without a shadow of reproach; his strength throughout the Northwest is undoubted.—Minneapolis Tribune.

The convention has given us a candidate for the presidency every way worthy, every way available; whose nomination leaves no dangerous heart-burnings behind it; whose candidacy unites and solidifies the party in the doubtful states and the safe ones alike; and whose election in November will insure the country a strong, clean, business-like and thoroughly American administration.—Hartford Courant.

The Chicago convention has made a selection which will be cordially approved by the Republican party in all states and sections, and will be ratified, we are confident, by the country in November. The party accepts Gen. Harrison's leadership, and will give him its united and loyal support. There is that in his candidacy which is calculated to heal any past differences, and that in his character which will certainly win the confidence of voters of conscience, intelligence and genuine independence.—Boston Journal.

Several who contributed large sums for new uniforms for the ball team think it is about time they were forthcoming.

Grand Vice Regent Robinson of the Royal Arcanum attended a meeting of the grand officers held at Boston Tuesday.

The body of Mrs. Nehemiah Smith, who died at Springfield recently, was brought to this place yesterday for interment.

Now that the campaign has fairly begun, how would it do for the Republicans to organize a Harrison and Morton club?

A large number from the surrounding towns attended the afternoon religious services at Forest Lake Gardens Sunday.

Quite a number of the local sporting men went to New London to-day to see the famous Yale-Harvard race on the Thames.

Rev. Myron S. Dudley of North Wilbraham exchanged pulpits last Sunday with Rev. H. W. Pope of the Congregational church.

St. Paul's Universalist church will decide next Sunday where it will hold its annual picnic, and make the preliminary arrangements for the same.

A delegation from Thomas Lodge, F. and A. M., of this place, visited Ware Monday evening, where Eden Lodge worked the third degree.

Rev. T. J. Sullivan of St. Thomas' Catholic church is preparing classes for confirmation, to take place here and at North Wilbraham early fall.

The hydrants were inspected by the board of engineers of the fire district yesterday, and it was voted to pay the Palmer Water Company for 39 hydrants.

A new sidewalk has been constructed on North Main street, near the Point of Rocks, much to the pleasure of pedestrians who are obliged to traverse that locality.

George Robinson and Rev. F. W. Betts attended the installation of Rev. Mr. Pennock at Ware Wednesday, as pastor of the First Unitarian church of that place.

A. E. Phelps will preach at the Advent chapel next Sunday. There will also be preaching services there next Friday evening by G. H. Wallace of Springfield.

E. Goodes has bought the Stark property on Pine street of W. W. Leach for $1800, the report of its sale to Rev. A. W. Weeks through Holden's agency proving incorrect.

The lawn party and ice-cream sociable at F. M. Eager's Wednesday evening was well attended. It was given under the auspices of the ladies of the Baptist church.

Mrs. J. W. Weeks exhibits a quantity of mammoth strawberries which she cultivated and raised in her garden. It only requires twenty-five of them to fill a quart basket.

The match game of ball on Holden's lot Saturday afternoon, between the Wide-Awakes and a nine representing Monson Academy, was won by the former, the score standing 18 to 4.

Conductor James McKenna of the New London Northern road was so overcome by the heat last Saturday that his train was side-tracked at South Coventry for over two hours to await his recovery.

The West Brookfields and Palmers are matched for a game of ball on the park Saturday afternoon. The visiting team will have the famous Goddard and McNally battery, and expects to capture the game.

C. J. Tuthill, a student at Boston University, who is home for the summer, will temporarily discharge the duties of clerk in the post office, which position was made vacant by the resignation of H. E. Huntley.

The engine house will be open for the inspection of the public next Wednesday evening from 6 to 9, when the engineers will be present and glad to explain and show the apparatus of the fire department to all who may call.

The wedding of John O'Connor and Miss Annie Murphy took place at St. Thomas's Catholic church Wednesday morning with a high nuptial mass. Rev. T. J. Sullivan performed the ceremony, which was witnessed by the friends and relatives of the couple.

Those who leave town for a summer vacation will want to know what is going on at home during their absence. The JOURNAL will tell you all the home news every week much more fully than any one can write it to you, and the address will be changed as often as desired.

All who have pledged money for the support of the reading room have been requested to pay their donations to the treasurer at once. The directors have purchased a number of new periodicals, and wish to buy more, but cannot do so until these subscriptions are paid in.

The trustees of the cemetery association held a meeting Wednesday evening and voted to put a man at work immediately, trimming up and repairing the grounds. The committee appointed to solicit subscriptions and memberships to the association reported nearly $100 pledged.

A nine composed of the clerks of the village met the invincible high school nine on the park Wednesday afternoon and was easily defeated by a score of 25 to 8. The high school nine has an enviable record, having won every game with the exception of one, which was declared a tie.

The continuous olowing of a locomtive whistle on the New London Northern Railroad Sunday night aroused the villagers about 12 o'clock, who searched for a fire without success. The whistle was blown by a disgusted engineer who wanted a switch thrown and the signal for the right of way.

Dr. W. H. Stowe has contracted with Survetus Leach for the erection of a unique little cottage on "Oak-Knoll," Thorndike street, an eminence overlooking the village and surrounding country. He expects later to have telephonic connection with his office and the local exchange, and remain there during the summer months.

If you have a friend visiting you, don't fail to let our reporter know it; and if you contemplate spending a portion of the summer out of town, don't forget to mention the fact to him. You like to see your name "in the paper," you know you do, and other people like to know where you are going—some of them may want to forward a bill before you get back.

This village needs a system of sewers badly. A competent engineer should be employed to make a survey of the village and draw plans for such a system. Then when sewers are put in, have it done accordingly, if not more than $100 is expended yearly. Thus in time the town would have a good system of sewerage, infinitely better than this running of lines hap hazard.

A campaign flag, bearing the portraits of Harrison and Morton, the Republican nominees for president and vice president, is soon to be displayed on Main street near the post office, if satisfactory arrangements can be made with parties who own the buildings in question; if not, it will be located at some other desirable place on Main street. When the flag is ready to be displayed, why not have a flag raising, with music and speeches.

A new time table goes into effect on the New London Northern road to-morrow morning, when the Block Island train will be put on, leaving Palmer at 7.05 a. m. Returning it will leave New London at 5.30, reaching Palmer at 8 05. The train now reaching here at 6 p. m. from the north will arrive at 5.29, connecting with the western express on the Boston & Albany road. A new passenger train will be put on from the north, reaching Palmer at 8.37 a. m., connecting with the Central road at Belchertown, and with the "governor's" train for Boston at Palmer.

The Southbridge nine did not need any assistance from the umpire to win last Saturday's game from the Palmers. They outplayed the home team at every point, and could have won easily. The umpire, however, brought from Southbridge, so openly favored the visiting club that its friends frankly admitted it. His decisions was the rankest injustice to the home team, which would have made the result much closer if they had been given only half a chance. The score was:

| INNINGS, | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Southbridges, | 2 | 3 | 1 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 3 | 0 | —10 |

A special train containing the Massachusetts delegates on their return from the Republican national convention at Chicago, stopped at the Union passenger station for some little time Wednesday noon. W. N. Flynt and A. A. Gage of Monson, who were among the number, alighted here, when the delegation shouted in unison: "Oh, what's the matter with Harrison? Why, he's all right!" Just then Stephen S. Taft appeared upon the scene, which prompted the delegation to a repetition of the "chestnut," modified in this manner: "Oh, what's the matter with "Steve" Taft? Why, he's all right!"

The selectmen, to whom the matter was intrusted, have ordered 59 new signs, bearing the names of the streets in town, which are being manufactured by the American Enamel Company of Beaver Falls, Pa., and will be ready for shipment before many days. The new signs are similar to those seen in many of the leading towns and cities, being made of enameled metal, which ensures durability. The names of the streets can be easily read at a long distance, as the letters are large and are Gothic in style. The signs for the roads in the different districts of the town have not yet been ordered.

If anything was needed to demonstrate the pressing necessity of a sewer on Main street, near the Ware River engine house, the heavy shower last Saturday afternoon furnished a most convincing argument in that line, as every spring freshet has done for years. The street was an impassable lake. There formerly was a gutter which made a feeble pretense of carrying off surplus water, but that is filled up, and the drainage from the hill above Pine street, augmented by that of the intervening territory, now gathers on this part of Main street with absolutely no outlet, and the water on Saturday rushed over the land of Mrs. Thompson, across the railroad tracks and through Marcy's lumber yard, washing out deep gullies, flooding the Ware River engine house, and making things uncomfortable generally. This condition of things is disgraceful, and should be remedied at once by the laying of a sewer to the river.

District Court.

June 23.—John Smith, drunkenness; committed in default of $6.43.

Patrick Dwyer, drunkenness; paid fine and costs of $7.33.

25.—Michael Moriarty, drunkenness; paid fine and costs of $6.73.

Edmund Flynn, assault. The person injured having acknowledged satisfaction the defendant was discharged upon paying costs of $5.99.

29.—James Riley, drunkenness; committed in default of fine and costs amounting to $7.78.

At Forest Lake Gardens.

Charles Oliver and wife of Fitchburg have taken a cottage for a few weeks.

Miss May Ford will hold religious services next Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

C. E. Fish of Palmer is getting his camp ready for occupancy, which will probably be about July 5.

The Forest Lake Company are making preparations for the celebration of the Fourth, and promise a good time to visitors. There will be dancing, roller skating, athletic sports, etc.

The grand excursion and picnic at the Lake last Saturday was not very largely attended. In fact there were so few present that the musicians engaged for the day came home without unpacking their instruments.

Damage by the Storm.

The heavy shower which fell last Saturday afternoon caused a good deal of damage throughout this section, being accompanied by sharp flashes of lightning which struck and broke down quite a number of valuable fruit trees on the farm of King Knox, and also in other orchards hereabouts. Trees of considerable size were uprooted near Thorndike, while the roads were so badly washed that in some instances they were impassable for a time, and it will require a large expenditure to properly repair them. The cellars of some of the houses on Park and River streets in this village were flooded with several feet of water, much to the damage of provisions stored therein. The tracks of the New London Northern Railroad near Three Rivers were badly washed, rendering it dangerous for trains to pass over the line. Roadmaster Shanks was soon on the spot with a force of workmen and had the place repaired. Another shower came Sunday evening, flooding the streets, swelling the streams and continuing the work of destruction. Quite a number of the streets in this village have needed extensive repairs since the rain.

The Glorious Fourth.

A meeting of citizens was held at the district court room last Friday evening relative to arranging a suitable programme for the celebration of the Fourth of July next Wednesday. It was voted to have an antique and horrible parade, and a general invitation is extended to all to participate in the procession, which will form at the Point of Rocks at 5.30 a. m., and move over the principal streets of the village. Some excellent "take-offs" are promised in the parade, which every one will surely want to see. Music for the occasion will be furnished by the Palmer Fife and Drum Corps, and the Monson Silver Drum Corps, consolidated, if satisfactory arrangements can be made. There will be burlesques on other musical organizations, now defunct, so that there will be noise enough. Masks can be obtained at Le Gro & Lynde's drug store next Monday. The following have been chosen to have charge of the affair: Chief marshal, M. J. Dillon; assistant marshals, Charles E. Fuller, W. A. Weld, S. W. Ferry; Committee of arrangements, William McDonald, Marcus Shearer, H. C. Sanger, F. N. Carpenter, M. J. Dillon, Charles L. Saunders, Omar Marcy, Charles W. Swift, E. G. Hastings, John Lyman, M. J. Dawson, Charles A. Le-Gro, L. E. Chandler, Chas. Hunt, James H. Wells, Wallace Shaw, C. P. Stone and W. H. Kellogg. A meeting of the committee has been called at the court room for next Monday evening, when every member should be present. The members of the Palmer fire department will have the entire charge of the fire works in the evening, which promise to surpass anything of the kind seen here in recent years. About $75 has already been raised by the committee, which should furnish a fair amount of powder in various forms.

The High School.

The year at the high school was brought to a close yesterday by a public examination of the various classes in the presence of the committee and a large body of the parents and friends of the pupils. The work and progress of the school as thus exhibited is most gratifying, and merits the warmest expectations of its friends. At the close of the exercises Mr. S. S. Taft made the announcement, amid the applause of the school, that the present corps of teachers would return the coming year. He also expressed his gratification that in four years the school had risen from an attendance of 23 to almost 80, and indulged the hope that with all the old advantages plus the new and greater ones soon to be realized, the high school had a still more brilliant career of usefulness before it. The last year certainly has been the most prosperous in the history of the school. This prosperity is measured not alone by its increasing attendance, but also by the enthusiasm and interest manifested both without and within the school room. Almost for the first time the citizens of the town are beginning to realize how unnecessary it is to incur the expense of sending their children abroad, when by keeping them at home advantage may be had of a school as good as the best. With its large corps of teachers and its three courses of study, collegiate, classical and scientific, the high school is prepared to fully meet the wants of the town in the matter of higher education. During the past year seven boys and girls have been taking the college course, and at least a half a dozen more are to enter upon it the coming fall. From this course graduates may enter any college in New England.

The graduating exercises of the school will be held at St. Paul's Universalist church this evening at 7.30, with this programme:

Salutatory......................"Legendary Flowers"
Mina Ball.
Essay....................................."Fame"
Alice Brown.
Declamation.............."Toussaint L'Ouverture"
Charles Hunt.
Essay......................................"Thorns"
Josie Shea.
Declamation............"Eulogy on Lafayette"
Norman W. Chandler.
Essay..............................."The Weather"
L. Belle Baker.
Valedictory..........................."Umbrellas"
Julia M. Winchell.

The class of '88 numbers nine. Following the exercises will be a reception to invited guests by the graduates in the church parlors. A large entering class is expected the coming fall.

The new tenement house which the Thorndike Co. has built on Pine avenue is nearly completed, and will be ready for occupancy in about two weeks.

The picnic to be held July 4th at the church grove promises to be a success, as all arrangements are nearly made, and a good time is assured. All are invited.

The severe rain and wind storm which visited this place Saturday afternoon resulted in the breaking down and uprooting of many trees. The streets and roads were also badly washed

The Young Stars went to Bondsville last Saturday and defeated the local club in a five-inning game by a score of 11 to 0. Lynch, the pitcher for the Thorndike Stars, seems to be a puzzler, as the last three clubs he has pitched against failed to get even a single hit.

MONSON.

Rev. F. S. Hatch preached at the state primary school Sunday morning.

Revs. Priest and Maxham attended the ordination of the Unitarian minister at Ware Wednesday.

The Shamrock baseball club have arranged for a game in Flynt's Park with the Staffords on the morning of the Fourth.

Revs. Hatch of the Congregational church and Emerson of the Methodist church exchanged pulpits Sunday morning.

The Monson Academy base ball club went to Palmer Saturday and were beaten 18 to 4 by the Wide Awakes of that place.

Rev. Mr. Priest will occupy the pulpit of the Universalist church at Ware Sunday. Rev. Mr. Maxham will supply his pulpit here.

One of our merchants in Central block is greatly annoyed by pilferers, who had better take warning lest they be asked to take a free ride to Palmer.

W. L. Ricketts of this place was awarded second prize in the sophomore speaking contest for the Goddard prize at Tuft's College last week.

The Shamrocks went to Stafford Saturday for a seven-innings game with the Staffords. The game was stopped at the seventh inning by rain, the score standing 4 to 4.

The death of Mrs. Nathan Blanchard, who has been ill for some time, occurred Saturday evening, at the age of 74. The funeral was held at the house Tuesday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Emerson conducting the service.

The Sunday-school of the Congregational church enjoyed their annual picnic at Evergreen Park, State Line, Wednesday afternoon. The day was especially fine, which helped to complete one of the pleasantest outings the society ever held.

The ball game between the Windsor and Washington Clubs on Flynt's Park Wednesday afternoon was well attended, the two teams were: Windsor — King, c.; Randall, p.; Flynt 1b.; Fuller, 2b.; Robinson, ss.; Squier, 3b.; R. Squier, cf.; Knowlton, lf.; Cushman, rf. Washington—Brennan, c.; Fagan, p.; Murphy, 1b.; Keefe, 2b.; Donovan, ss.; H. Hughes, 3b.; E. Hughes, lf.; Scannell, rf.; Hanley, cf. The Windsor club, after having four different catchers, succeeded in playing out a one-sided game. The Washingtons had a complete walk-over, owing to former club's weakness behind the bat. The score was 37 to 17.

Last Friday about fifty of the parents and friends gathered at the grammar school room at No. 8 to attend the exhibition given by the pupils of the combined schools. The exercises, which consisted of speaking, singing and general exercises by the pupils of the primary school, were very creditably performed. But the feature of the exhibition was the prize essays, which were read by the members of the grammar school. The essays were of excellent literary quality for students of their grade, and showed much care in their preparation. The manner of delivery was excellent, and it was with considerable difficulty that Dr. N. W. Rand, for the committee, awarded the three prizes, which consisted of three books, as follows: Sarah Gavin, Lena Babbitt and Sarah Hanley. The exercises passed off finely in every respect, and the teachers and pupils have every reason to feel proud of the exhibition.

The glorious Fourth will be ushered in next Wednesday morning by "ye small boy" with fire crackers and toy pistols. Aside from this, it promises from the present outlook to be rather quiet. The annual picnic of St. Patrick's society will be held in Reynolds' grove, which has been newly fitted up, and the society will do everything for the comfort and amusement of their guests. At nine o'clock the procession of Sunday school children will form at the church, and, preceded by the Monson silver drum corps, will march to the grove. A new covered platform has been erected in the grove for dancing, and the Monson orchestra will furnish music. The afternoon sports will be lively and contested for suitable prizes, as follows: Tug of war between teams captained by James Gough and Peter Ward, 100 yards dash, putting the shot, potato race and sack race. A silver cup will be presented for the best jig dancing. Refreshments of all kinds will be served on the grounds, under the direction of the young ladies of the society. The Monson silver drum corps will be in attendance during the day. 'Busses will run from the village to the grove every few minutes during the day, and the programme will conclude with a grand display of fireworks.

Everett Aborn of Chicago, a former student of Monson academy, was in town this week.

Mrs. Maud Kimball of Ellington, Ct., was the guest of Miss Alice Fuller a few days this week.

W. J. Randall, for the past three years employed as dyer at Fay, Peck & Co's. straw shop, left for his home in Mansfield Thursday, and will probably not return another year. During his stay here he has made a host of friends, who with the members of the Windsor Club, of which he was a member, will greatly regret his departure, and hope it is only temporarily.

Failure of Fay, Peck & Co.

An attachment for $2000 was placed against the straw goods house of Fay, Peck & Co. last Saturday, by the Willimantic Linen Company, two others have since been levied, and the firm has made an assignment to New York parties. H. Hodges, Son & Co, the New York branch of the Monson firm, have also made an assignment, with liabilities of from $60,000 to $100,000. It is thought the creditors of the Monson firm will find little except the stock of goods in the hands of the Hodges at New York, and the bills due on goods already sold. The firm has frankly admitted for some time that they had met with heavy losses, and were hard pressed, but claimed to be able to come out all right if not pressed, and they would have been able to pull through but for the action of the Willimantic company.

It is estimated that the amount due the operatives for the season's work in the shop is from $20,000 to $30,000, which is probably low enough. The firm is not a corporation, and therefore not obliged to make payments at any stated time. The out-of-town help has mostly been paid, but it has been the custom to pay the Monson operatives at the end of the season. This year goods have been sold on unusally long time, some of the bills not being due till September, and they knew that the pay would not be forthcoming until late. There are many in town who are much embarrassed on account of their inability to get the money due them, and business men and merchants feel pretty blue over the outlook. One man who recently made a real estate investment is still paying interest on his last year's unpaid taxes, and there are some families to whom $500 is owing.

The firm says that the business has always been good up to this year, which has been the worst in 20. Few goods were sold in April and May on account of the cold weather, and the lateness of the season has been the cause of the trouble. It is understood that the help have been made preferred creditors, and will get their pay in full.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Ordination and Installation.

Rev. B. W. Pennock was ordained and installed as pastor of the Unitarian church on Wednesday afternoon. The ecclesiastical council convened at noon and chose Rev. J. H. Morse of Greenfield moderator, and Rev. G. H. Badger of South Natick scribe. No close questioning was done, but instead the moderator asked the candidate to make a statement of his reasons for wishing to enter the ministry, which was done. He also showed his diplomas from Amherst college and Andover theological school. The examination was satisfactory to the council, and it adjourned till two o'clock. During the intermission a collation was served in the church vestry. At two o'clock the public services began.

Rev. E. A. Horton took his text from Rev. 4: 5—"And there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God." According to his interpretation, these were: The eternal goodness, human responsibility, the leadership of Jesus Christ, continuous revelation, the perfectibility of man, the aim of religion is a type of life, and belief in a universal church. The floral decorations were elaborate. Three churches were represented: Second of Boston, Northampton, Palmer, Barre, Petersham, So. Natick, Warren and Brookfield.

Ware Entertains Northampton.

Yesterday was a day to which the citizens of Ware and Northampton can for a long time look back to with pleasure. Upon invitation of the citizens of Ware 125 members of the board of trade and other citizens of Northampton visited the town. On their arrival at the depot they were met by our citizens with conveyances and taken through the principal streets of the town. Later those who were disposed made a visit to the manufacturing establishments, and according to their report found them of great interest. At 6.45 o'clock a fire alarm was sounded, to which the fire department made ready response. The Otis hose company, the C. A. Stevens hose company and the Geo. H. Gilbert Manufacturing Company hose company also appeared. The best time was made by the fire department hose company, which ran from the engine house to the corner of North and Main streets, made connections with the hydrant and got water through in 1 minute 42 seconds. The second department hose company was next best, being only two seconds behind. The hook and ladder company made a good showing, having raised their ladder to Storrs' block in about the same time that the first stream of water was thrown. Mayor Hill of Northampton, who witnessed the entire exhibition, pronounced it very successful and excellent.

The Northampton visitors brought an excellent band of music, which gave our people a rich treat during the afternoon and the first of the evening.

At 7.30 the company was called to order by Dr. C. W. Roberts, chairman of the reception committee, in the parlors of the Mansion House, and forming in procession proceeded to the Town Hall, where the banquet was spread by caterers from Boston. The tables were arranged in a most tasty manner and loaded with good things for the inner man, and decorated with boquets of flowers. On each plate was a buttonhole boquet and a souvenir of the occasion in the form of a birds-eye view of Ware as it is now and as it was 44 years ago. The stage was converted into a conservatory of plants and blossoming flowers, with evergreen shrubbery in the background and a fountain playing in the center, while overhead was suspended the word "welcome," in white daisies on a background of green. In this mass of beauty was stationed Baldwin's orchestra from Boston, which gave choice selections during the evening. Hon. Chas. A. Stevens, president of the day and master of ceremonies, in a few words gave a hearty welcome to the Northampton guests and gave some pleasing reminiscences of our town 50 years ago, then called upon Hon. Lewis N. Gilbert, who spoke of the enjoyable time the Ware citizens had in their recent visit to Northampton, after which it was decided to return the compliment and entertain the citizens of Northampton at an early date. "We have done what we could, and if we have failed, it is a failure of the head and not of the heart, as the invitations came from the heart. We have no institutions like those of Northampton to show you, and no insane asylum to take you to, but we are proud of your court house and glad to be able to help pay for it. We have no need of a jail, as all would agree from the representatives of Ware seen here to-night." He thanked the company for their presence, and hoped all had been done that could be done for their entertainment.

Mayor Hill of Northampton said "We are here to-night to complete the building up of a union which was begun at Northampton a few weeks since, when a few bricks were collected and the ground prepared but when the laying of the bricks came they found that they lacked the mortar, but in Ware they found an abundance and the building completed." After seeing the beautiful town of Ware the reason he gave for any desire to return to Northampton was to cheer the many desolate homes there. "When you come to see us again we will give you our court house, the jail, and anything you want you shall have it, if you will only call for it." E. H. Baker said "We had returned from our late visit with great enthusiasm, feeling we had learned much from our visit." Speaking of the green hills he said "there was nothing green about Mayor Hill, as he was responsible for this occasion as he had invited us first, and closed by giving the guests a cordial invitation to stop off on their way through the town as often as possible.

He was followed by General Otis, Editor Geer of the Northampton Gazette, John P. O'Connor of New York, a former Ware boy, H. H. Chilson, Dr. W. W. Miner, Capt. Parsons, Capt. Hill, Lawyer Crosby, Lawyer Wainwright, Prof. Pillsbury, Mr. Crouch, Gen. Henry L. James.

Lewis Warner said "When first I knew you I loved you, and I love you better now. Ware has given us an elegant reception. We feel we have learned something by this visit."

Mayor Hill invited the Northampton guests to form in front of the hall and he would undertake to see them safely home, and the meeting broke up with rousing cheers shortly after 11 o'clock. The guests, led by the band, repaired to the depot amidst the blaze of fireworks, and with the best wishes of our citizens departed for their homes on a special train that was in waiting for them.

About 150 Ware citizens partook of the banquet with the guests.

Death of William Hyde.

William Hyde, president of the Ware National Bank, died at his home on Maple street Sunday evening, aged 82. He was the fifth son of Rev. Dr. Alvan Hyde, former pastor of the Congregational church in Lee. He was fitted for college mostly by his father, and graduated at Williams College in 1826. He taught school for one year in Catskill, N. Y., then read law one year with William Porter of Lee and was two years with George Bliss of Springfield. He was admitted to the Hampden county bar, in 1830 and had a law office in Springfield until 1834. He was two years editor of the Springfield Gazette, which has since changed into the Springfield Republican, and was very active in Sunday-school and temperance work until called to be cashier of the bank at Ware. The cashier's keys were given him June 10, 1834, and he remained in connection with that bank, serving it faithfully, for 54 years, 31 years as cashier, and as president from 1865 until the present, and also president of the savings bank from 1850. In November, 1831, Mr. Hyde became a member of the First Congregational church at Springfield under the pastorate of Rev. Dr. Osgood. The veteran missionary, Dr. S. D. Calhoun, a warm personal friend, united with that church at the same time. On removing to Ware he united with the East Congregational church in 1835. In 1837 he was chosen deacon, serving until 1884. He was superintendent of the Sunday-school five years and treasurer of the various charitable operations of the church since 1845. In 1847 Mr. Hyde published a history of Ware which has been incorporated into the history of Western Massachusetts and the Connecticut valley. He served as senator in the Massachusetts Legislature in 1851, but having no taste for political life declined reëlection. In company with his friend, the late S. D. Warren of Boston, Mr. Hyde spent some months in the year 1871 traveling in Europe, and his health, which had become somewhat impaired by long confinement in the bank, was greatly improved. In 1878 he visited California and the Sandwich Islands, and from the first was deeply interested in the missions of the latter. He served as overseer of the charity fund in Amherst college 15 years, and was trustee of Williston seminary at Easthampton 17 years and of Williams college 18 years, and also of Andover seminary six years. He was elected a corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in 1862, and with few exceptions has been present at the annual meetings of the Board. The last time he left his home was to attend the annual meeting in Springfield last October. He gave in 1880 $10,000 toward the erection of the free circulating library in Ware. He married July 4, 1836, Harriet N., daughter of the late Orrin Sage of Ware. Of three children, two, a son and daughter, are living. The first week in July 1886 Mr. and Mrs. Hyde celebrated the golden anniversary of their marriage in a unique and quiet way with children and grandchildren, and the only two persons living who were present at the original wedding. They passed the week together at Mrs. Hyde's early mountain home in Blandford, where they were married by Rev. Charles J. Hinsdale in 1836. Mr. Hyde has been somewhat of an invalid for two years or more, but during the last winter, seemingly convalescing, was able to leave the house occasionally in pleasant weather. For three weeks past he was confined to his bed.

The funeral services were held at his residence on Maple street at two o'clock Wednesday afternoon, and were very largely attended by his fellow citizens, the number of business men being particularly noticeable. As a mark of respect for one who has been so prominently identified with the town, all the stores were closed during the hours of the funeral. Among those present were Ex-Gov. Knight and Prof. A. L. Perry, who came as representatives of the trustees of Williams College, of which body Mr. Hyde was an honored member for 18 years. There were many present also who had received many substantial tokens of his generosity and Christian thoughtfulness. The French Protestant church, toward which Mr. Hyde subscribed liberally, was represented by its pastor, Rev. T. A. Dorion, and A. A. Ayer, M. D., one of its deacons. The services at the house were marked by simplicity and appropriateness. Mr. Charles E. Stevens had charge of the arrangements, and was assisted by Mr. Charles D. Gilbert and Mr. J. H. G. Gilbert. Rev. A. T. Perry opened the service with a sentence or two of Scripture, and then offered a brief invocation. He read by request the hymn, "My faith looks up to thee," which was a favorite one of Mr. Hyde's, and then some selected passages. Rev. Dr. A. E. P. Perkins, now of Worcester, for many years pastor of the East church in Ware, followed by reading the hymn, "Asleep in Jesus," and then making some remarks. He said that it was not necessary to speak at length concerning the life of Mr. Hyde, as a more fitting occasion would occur later, but coming himself as a mourner, he referred to some of the characteristics of the remarkable life just closed. It was a life, the very embodiment of a sense of duty, not in the stern and harsh aspect so often given it, but in the aspect of joyfulness, which always results from duty well done. While not wanting in warm affection and strong feeling, it was a life inspired by principle rather than feeling, and resting on the firm ground of duty. Mr. Hyde was rare in counsel and wise in judgment, and much sought after as an adviser. He might have occupied more prominent places but never sought publicity, although in church and in business he took whatever position seemed to lie in the path of duty. His was a complete life and fully rounded. There is little that we can think of to add to it, and his name is blessed by many all over this land and on the isles of the sea for what he, in his generosity and wisdom, had done. At the close of these remarks, the song, "There is rest for the weary," was sung, and then Dr. Perkins offered prayer. The exercises at the grave in Aspen Grove cemetery were brief. As the casket, covered with flowers and the symbolic sheaf of grain, was lowered into the grave, Rev. A. T. Perry repeated the committal service, and Rev. Dr. Perkins pronounced the benediction. The bearers were the deacons of the East Congregational church, which Mr. Hyde had served in that capacity for 47 years.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, June 27, 1888.

It has been a week full of politics, exciting and eventful. Great interest has been felt in the Chicago convention, and the crowds about the newspaper bulletins have been ample proof of the fact. But the convention is over and our Massachusetts delegation was due to arrive here at 3.30 this afternoon. Already the lines of the campaign are being drawn, and the effect of the nominations and the platform is being seen. So far as the Republicans go, they are pleased with the nomination of Harrison. If they could not have Blaine they will rally around the flag of the Indiana man and do the best they can to win victory. Harrison's nomination makes them confident of carrying his state and thus recovering it from the Democrats. It is to be noticed that the excellence of the Republican organization is beginning to show itself already. Ratification meetings over the Chicago nominations have already been held, and there is an enthusiastic reception of the choice of the convention. On the other hand, the Democrats have held no such meeting, and have none arranged. To be sure they gave a dinner at the Revere House a week ago Saturday to Gen. Collins as the president of the St. Louis convention, but they have held no mass meeting for the rank and file of the party. There is where the Republicans are showing themselves better politicians than the Democrats.

The result of the Chicago convention has been to throw the mugwumps largely to the Cleveland side, so far as appears from the preferences of their Boston representatives. Doubtless the high tariff feature of the Republican platform contributed mostly to this. If Gresham had been the choice of the convention, many men who will vote for Cleveland would have voted for him; but they do not regard Harrison as so nearly on their platform as Gresham. A few mugwumps who are high protectionists would have voted for any Republican nominee, for they cannot agree with the Democratic policy. It is about settled that no mugwump organization will be held this year, as there was in 1884, when the committee of 100 took hold with all its force to rally the state against Blaine. The leaders do not see any occasion for it. Then their movement was against a man, and that man is no longer an issue. So far as the tariff is concerned, there is ample opportunity for affiliation with one party or another. The issue is to be fought out between the two great parties, and there does not seem to be any special occasion for an independent movement. That is the way they feel, and each mugwump will look out for himself as he wishes.

When it comes to the Democrats, they are as confident of success as the Republicans, but they say that there must be hard work before they can win. What they fear most is the effect of the tariff cry upon the laboring vote. They know that that is their weak point in an aggressive campaign, and that they will lose votes among the laboring classes unless they can counteract the argument that a reduction of the tariff means lower wages for them. Where the Democrats expect to gain is in the young vote. It is a natural tendency of the young voters to ally themselves with the party in power, provided that party has not forfeited public confidence. Of course they say they have not forfeited that confidence, and that they will get the larger part of the young vote. Again, the fact of possession is something, and that will count in their favor. But, specifically, they expect to hold New York, to keep New Jersey and Connecticut, to carry Indiana, and are hopeful of winning the Pacific states of California, Nevada and Oregon. The Democrats have the power in Indiana. Senator Voorhees is coming up for reelection, their candidate for governor is author of a sweeping soldiers' pension bill, and Gray (who was defeated for second place at St. Louis) will have to work with all his might for the success of the ticket if he wants any political future. These are their reasons for expecting to carry the state against the immense personal prestige of the Republican presidential nominee in his own state. California they have hopes of on the statement of Democrats there that Blaine was the only Republican they feared.

The Prohibitionists here are active and believe that the failure of the Republicans to put an anti-saloon plank into their platform will cause them to lose many thousand Republican votes—some say 100,000. But little weight is attached to the plank put at the end of the platform on motion of Mr. Boutelle of Maine.

One of the events of the week here has been the exposure, by that wonderful sleight-of-hand performer, Kellar, of the imposture of spirit mediums, so called, in their cabinet manifestations. One medium ventured to accept his challenge that he would discover the means by which these manifestations were made, and after he produced the usual strange noises and apparitions while he was apparently closely strapped to a bench, Kellar proved to the audience that it was a "trick bench," specially prepared for such service, and was so made that the medium's hands could be instantly released and again instantly secured without any difficulty whatever. The medium turned pale as soon as he saw that Kellar was sure to expose him, and then he disappeared beyond recall of the audience. Such an affair as this ought to have an effect in lessening the number of impostures by so-called mediums, but of course there are people who believe that spirits come and cut up all sorts of unspiritual antics, and so long as they are willing to pay their money the spirits will be sure to come.

At a meeting in Park street church this week, some of the teachers of the New West Education Commission told what they are doing to educate the Mormon children and to counteract the degrading influence of that system of religion. It seems that the Mormon church is such a perfect machine that it has one official for every five persons, and that many of the class leaders, or home missionaries as they might be termed, are of a coarse and even profane life. They are low in their manners and morals, and to our eastern ideas are just the reverse of suitable for church work. The teachers of the commission succeed remarkably in drawing the children into the school, and find them quick to learn; but it remains to be seen whether they are making any real headway against the enormous power of the Mormon church.

LANDON.

Wonderful cures by Ayer's Sarsaparilla in every part of the land. Write for names.

After trying numerous so-called catarrh remedies and receiving no benefit I was finally induced to try Ely's Cream Balm, and after using one bottle I take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers from catarrh.—N. L. Gorton, with S. Gorton & Co., Gloucester, Mass.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF

of the Grand Army of the Republic, Major George S. Merrill. Few remedies are better known in this this vicinity than Sulphur Bitters; their sale has been very general throughout this section, and the number of reliable and well attested cases of beneficial results and recovery by their use, is large and beyond dispute.

THE HOMLIEST MAN IN PALMER

as well as the handsomest, and others are invited to call on any druggist and get free a trial bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs, a remedy that is selling entirely upon its merits and is guaranteed to relieve and cure all chronic and acute coughs, asthma, bronchitis and consumption. Large bottles 50 cents and $1.

SOME FOOLISH PEOPLE

allow a cough to run until it gets beyond the reach of medicine. They often say, "Oh, it will wear away," but in most cases it wears them away. Could they be induced to try the successful medicine called Kemp's Balsam, which is sold on a positive guarantee to cure, they would immediately see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Price 50 cents and $1. Trial size free. At all druggists.

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

This remedy is becoming so well known and so popular as to need no special mention. All who have used Electric Bitters sing the same song of praise.—A purer medicine does not exist and it is guaranteed to do all that is claimed. Electric Bitters will cure all diseases of the Liver and Kidneys, will remove pimples, boils, salt rheum and other affections of impure blood.—Will drive Malaria from the system, prevent as well as cure all Malaria fevers.—For cure of headache, constipation and indigestion try Electric Bitters.—Entire satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.—Price 50 cts. and $1.00 per bottle at Legro & Lynde's drug store. 5

IS CONSUMPTION INCURABLE?

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says:

"Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an Incurable Consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle, and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jessie Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Dscovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 5 of exhaustion expressed in the words "all run down," indicates a thin and depraved state of the blood, reacting upon the nervous system. Nothing will reach this trouble with more speed and certainty than Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"I was all run down," writes Mrs. Alice West, of Jefferson, W. Va., "before I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and now I am every day. I intend using it till my health is perfectly restored."

GAINING IN STRENGTH

"Being very weak and despondent after an illness which caused frequent loss of blood, I tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and two bottles have restored me to my former health," writes Miss Blanche S. Brownell, 4 Boylston Place, Boston, Mass.

CURE OF CANCER AND ULCERS.

Judge T. C. McLendon writes to the Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., under the date of February 14, 1888: "About three years ago, Jerry Bradley, a colored man, had a cancerous sore on his face, near the right eye. It caused him a great deal of pain, and he lost the sight of the eye, but was finally cured of the cancer by the use of Swift's Specific. This case is well-known in Wilkes Co., Ga., where he lived (near Danbury), and of this case, I, myself, had personal knowledge."

Mr. L. Cox, of Arkabutla, Tate Co., Miss., writes February 24, 1888: "I suffered a great deal from ld ulcers for six years. Your medicine was recommended to me, and after using six bottles, I was completely cured. I never saw its equal as a blood purifier. My neighbors will use no other. Your medicine does even more than you claim for it. I have known it to cure cases which were thought to be hopeless. It is the best medicine made."

Mrs. A. M. Goldsmith, No. 674 Warren St., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes February 22, 1888: "I commenced using S. S. S., about three years ago. I had suffered with a sore throat for over a year, when I commenced using your remedy. I used a great many other remedies with no good results. My little girl also had sore fingers; it commenced from the quick, and then the nails would come off. We doctored her for over two years, and when I commenced using S. S. S., I thought I would see what it would do for me. I am thankful to say that it entirely cured her. It is the best remedy I know of for the blood. I really believe it was the means of saving my life. The doctor told me I had a throat disease similar to General Grant's. I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from disordered blood. I use it now as a tonic whenever I think I need it."

Mr. B. F. George, Miford P. O., Ellis Co., Texas, writes: "I had a cancerous wart or mole on my eyelid, as large as the end of my thumb, which had the appearance of cancer, from which I suffered a long time. Seeing the S. S. S. advertised I commenced using it, and after the use of a few bottles the sore dropped out, my cancer was gone, and I was entirely relieved."

Mr. G. W. Pettis, of Aiken, S. C., writes: "I was a sufferer from cancer of the breast, and had been under the treatment of five physicians, but it did me no good. It was so bad that I had to stop work. After taking a course of S. S. S. I was entirely cured."

member wondering who he could be.

"Can't you guess my name, Conny?" said he.

My husband's voice.

The veil between us was rent at last. I flung my arms around his neck, and looked at him with pride and wonder. How could he say he was ugly and commonplace?

"Why did you tell me such stories?" were my first words to him. My husband laughed.

"You see, darling," said he, "you had got an idea into that pretty head of yours that I was running myself down a little—not much—I thought to make matters easier. But come with me. I want to show you the kind of sacrifice I made."

And my husband slipped my arm within his own and piloted me carefully out of the room and along the passage; for I was at first very uncertain about distances, and sometimes even shut my eyes in order to move about more confidently. We entered a cosy little chamber, in which a bright fire was burning. A carefully shaded moderator lamp stood on a small table, and not far from it were placed two magnificent cheval glasses.

"Now, Connie," said my husband, "I want you to look in front of you and give me your candid opinion of what you see there."

I looked obediently, but the sense of sight was too recently acquired for me to perceive at once the nature of the things I gazed at. The reflection I gazed at in the glass seemed to me a mysterious kind of picture. I recognized my husband's figure, and beside him stood a tall, handsome girl, with fair hair and brilliant eyes. His arm was around her waist, and she leaned upon him confidently, apparently very much at home.

"She is exceedingly pretty," said I, startled into admiration. "But who"—I stopped short, for as I turned half jealously toward him, the figure in the glass turned to. "Why, it is my own reflection," was my wondering exclamation.

"Little Vanity!" said my husband, laughing. "As if you didn't know who it was."

But I protest I didn't.

A LESSON IN ETIQUETTE.

A young man stood in a doorway on Saturday evening. Another young man and a young woman passed. "Hello, Mary," called the young man who stood, loudly to the companion of the young man who walked. That young man stopped walking, deposited his girl in another doorway, came back to the other young man and gave him an unmerciful beating. "What did you do that for?" demanded the vanquished one as soon as he had a chance to speak. "You insulted the lady I was with," was the reply. "I didn't do anything but say, 'Hello, Mary,' and anyway, don't you know she's my sister?" "Yes, I know that, but you had no right to attract attention to her on a crowded street by hollering at her. Do you suppose that the crowd know that you are her brother! What would they think of a girl thus rudely accosted?" It was a severe lesson in street etiquette.—Buffalo Express.

A teacher in one of the Indian schools relates the following incident of an Indian boy's quick thought. He had asked the meaning of the word "miss." "To miss," I told him, "is the same as to fail. You shoot at a bird or a mark, and do not hit it—you miss it. You go to a tailor for a coat and your coat fits badly—it is a misfit. You hope to enter the middle class next year, but you cannot pass the examinations, and you miss the promotion." His face wore a puzzled air, and he shook his head. "Then," said I, "there is another meaning of miss. We call a married woman madam, but an unmarried woman, miss." His face brightened. He nodded and smiled. "Ah, I see," said he, "she miss the man."

The Rhyme of the Doglet.

Two lovers lingering on a stooplet,
Beneath the stars so still and grand—
In dreams he saw the wedding hooplet
Of gold upon her tiny hand.

He slightly leaned upon his canelet,
A timid youth, and frail to see,
And in his heart he felt a painlet,
For love was young, and so was he!

They had partaken of a creamlet,
As lovers will while they are twain,
And now were busy on the schemelet
Of how and where to meet again.

Meanwhie, unto the lone back yardlet,
Her father sneaked; a chain let go,
Alack, fond love, and, alack, bardlet
That must relate this tale of woe!

* * * * * * *

The youth went bounding, like a goatlet,
With yell and shriek he outward sped,
The dog returned. A piece of coatlet
Hung from his mouth. Love's dream was dead.

—Madeline S. Bridges, in Judge.

WHAT THE BOYS ARE READING.

President Garfield once said that the first volume he ever read—the foundation of his library—was "The Pirate's Own Book." If his youth had been deferred until this time he might have begun his literary pursuits by reading the Pirate's Own Newspaper. The boys have, to a great extent, stopped reading dime novels, and are now reading flashy newspapers, especially gotten up to create and satisfy an appetite for stories of criminal adventure.

At almost any news stand half a dozen of these pernicious prints may be found displayed. The number and the evidences of prosperity which they all contain are surprising. But there is very little variety in their contents. They all celebrate the virtues of the small-boy-who-is-not-afraid-of the-police. This small boy is very smart. He knows more than his father, and can outwit any man by his superior cunning. He usually goes about heavily armed, and shoots with unerring accuracy. He is not above getting drunk and chewing tobacco, but even in his cups his sagacity never deserts him. He despises school and learning and looks upon a teacher as an inferior "cop." His vocubulary of slang is unabridged. He is up to any "racket," and is not "phased" by any "chump."

Five of these interesting periodicals are before the writer. The titles of some of the serials now running through their columns are instructive. Some of them are: "The Young Bank Clerk; or the Mystery of the Money Vault." "Man, Woman or Demon." "Merry Matt; or the Will o' the Wisp of Wine." "Old Merciless, the Man Hunter," by the author of "The Boss Detective." "Yankee Donovan; or the Unknown Champion of the Prize Ring." "Dynamite Dan; or the Young Irish-American." "Tony Bangles, or the Biggest Dare Devil in New York." "Little Terret; or the Boy Detective." "Bastinado; or the Terror of Mexico." "Dancing Dick; or Bootblack and Actor." "Marked for Life, or the Mysterious Protector." "The Boy Beast Tamer; or Tommy Bean's Travels with the Circus." "Archie Alden; or the Infernal Machine and the Doomed Ship."

The illustrations are quite as exciting as the stories. The favorite scene is a picture of a very small boy, or even of a girl, holding off a crowd of big men with a brace of revolvers. There is a life-and-death struggle on the edge of a "beetling" precipice, a hand-to-hand conflict with knives on shipboard, a street scene in New York with two drunken boys in the foreground, and a large and varied assortment of assaults with a deadly weapon with intent to kill.

This kind of literature is worse than the dime novels because it is a studied glorification of the worst phases of criminal life in the large cities. There was something romantic in the pirate's career. It was a seafaring life and its scene was shadowy and remote. The boys couldn't become pirates if they would, and most of them at once recognized the hopelessness of attempting to be anything so grand and splendid. But there is not an equal difficulty in entering upon a career of crime in a large city. The boy who persists in this ambition will be very likely to succeed.

The guardians of the morals of youth should see to it that the venders of flash literature for boys are met on their own grounds. The boys should have a weekly newspaper of their own that is not too good for human nature's daily food, nor too bad for any boy to read. The error of respectable publishers has been on the side of preaching and stiffness. They have put the boys' newspapers too much in the hands of women. A boy likes stories of adventure. He must and will have them, and they may be given to him with perfect safety if they are judiciously chosen. The line should be drawn only at criminal adventure. We are beginning to see that Indian stories and sea-going tales are comparatively harmless. The danger lies in the praise of vices which may be easily practiced at home. Why will not the publishers recall the admonition of Mr. Chadband to little Joe: "You are a boy—a human boy." Most of the respectable juvenile publications are not, we regret to say, intended for the perusal of "human" boys, and the flash writers have been shrewd enough to see this, and cultivate carefully the neglected field.—Chicago Tribune.

NO GRACE ON SUCH A PROMISE.—A very busy Chicago banker was to be married to an Omaha girl, and the day fixed was June 4 at high noon. The day came, but the groom did not materialize, and at 9 a. m. this telegram was received:

"For heaven's sake, tell us what is the matter. This is your wedding day, and the hour approaches."

He was scared half out of his wits, and bounced around like a hen with her head cut off. Then he rushed to the telegraph office and sent this answer:

"Thought I had three days grace. Don't let it go to protest. Coming on the next train."

The wedding was late, but it was a merry one, and all was forgiven. — Washington Critic.

THURMAN'S COMPLEXION.—"Who is this Mr. Thurman whom the Democrats have nominated for something?" asked Mrs. Wishiwas of her husband the other evening. "He is a very eminent statesman of Ohio," replied Mr. Wishiwas, "and he is almost an octogenarian." "An octogenarian!" exclaimed Mrs. Wishiwas. "Dear me, why didn't they choose a white man?"—Chicago Morning Mail.

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one in warm weather, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

"I was all run down and unfit for business. I was induced to take a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it built me right up so that I was soon able to resume work. I recommend it to all who are afflicted." D. W. BRATE, stone-cutter, No. 4 Martin St., Albany, N. Y.

Going West To Die.

Well, here we are, my dear old wife,
On board the train at last,
Our little all packed in a trunk,
With lock and straps made fast;
I hear the bell a-ringing,
And the whistle's piercing cry;
Now, wife, we're moving out of town—
We're going West, to die.

We have been from Jane's to John's house,
From John's house back to Jane,
Till now they've laid their burden down
On board this western train;
'Tis very hard to send us off,
All crippled up and gray,
To find a place in which to die,
Two thousand miles away.

Since we broke up keeping house
They've carted us around
Till now it seems a home for us
On earth cannot be found.
So sure as this old face of mine
Can ne'er look young again,
So sure we'll never more return
To trouble John and Jane.

They send us to a far, strange land,
O'er an untraveled road,
That Mary in her western home
May bear the heavy load;
It is not to be wondered at,
That my eyes fill with tears,
Or that my form is bending down
With more than weight of years.

I did not think 'twould come to this,
I did not mean it should;
No home is like our own dear home,
Though made of logs of wood;
No bread is sweet when eating it
'Mid bitterness and strife;
Few care to fill with peace and love
An old man's closing life.

Now, o'er a long, untraveled road,
We seek a stranger land,
The old home-circle broken up
At cruel Time's command;
But time cannot destroy our love,
'Tis stronger now than when
Our heads wore not these silver locks
Of three-score years and ten.

Since we broke up keeping house,
We've led a wretched life,
Jane put the blame upon her man,
And John upon his wife;
They think not of their infancy,
Of all those tender years
When night and day we toiled for them,
And wiped their flowing tears.

We leave behind us all the scenes
Of early years, dear wife,
And all the friends with whom we won
The victories of life;
We leave behind the little church,
Where oft we knelt in prayer,
But, good wife, we will never leave
The God who met us there.

Although these eyes are growing dim,
I still can see to read
The precious truth in God's own Word,
That children all should heed;
Honor thy father, saith the Lord,
Thy mother honor, too,
Then shalt thou live long in the land
That God has given you.

Our latest day will dawn ere long,
Our journey's end is nigh,
We're going West, to Mary's home,
We're going West to die;
Then He who sees the sparrow fall,
Who counts the ocean sands,
Will take us to our better home,
The house not made with hands.

FROM JEST TO MATRIMONY.

Marriages are often the result of accident. It seems strange, but the most prudent persons will sometimes conceive an irresistible attachment at the suggestion of a word or look. When once under the spell of the verb, "to love," they go through its forms and finish the conjugation of the verb before the altar. The few may give this subject the consideration it deserves; but the many, there is reason to fear, are guided by an impulse. A skipper of a coasting vessel called at a village inn and asked the landlady, a young widow: "Do you know where I can get a mate? I have lost my mate."

"I am very sorry for you, Mr.——," she said, smiling. "I want a mate, too, and cannot get one. As we are in the same position, I'll tell you what I'll do; if you will be mine, I will be yours." He closed with the bargain, and, the widow keeping to her word, he is now supplied with two mates.

A young man at a church fair was buttonholed by a lady. She wouldn't let him go until he bought something. He looked at her stall, which contained fancy work of various kinds. "Why," he said, "I see nothing here that would be of the least use to me, a bachelor, except yourself. The rest would be dear at any price."

"I will be cheap enough," she said, coaxingly.

"If you could be dear enough, perhaps ——"

"Oh, come, you are just the person I want"—taking him by the arm.

She sold him one article after another, keeping up an agreeable conversation the while; and before all was done he had purchased everything on the stall. Then at settling up, there was something said about discount. "I cannot return any money," she said, blushing; "but if you think me dear enough, there's mamma; she may give you my hand." The bargain was accordingly concluded.

At another bazaar in the Highlands, also gotten up for a religious object, the minister, who had just been appointed, gave so much attention to a particular lady that one of his elders thought it prudent to interfere. Taking him aside for the purpose he said simply: "Mind, they will be speakin'."

Comprehending the situation and remembering that the elder possessed a keen sense of humor, he replied: "It's all right, John. They can say nothing. A man may love his neighbor as himself, you know."

"No doubt, no doubt," said John, with a twinkle in his eye. "A man may love his neighbor as himself; but can he love her as his wife?"

"That's a question I never thought about," said the other, nonplussed. However, John's rebuke having forced the question upon him, he decided in the affirmative, and returning to the lady forthwith proposed and was accepted.

An eminent doctor who had saved the life of a lady, a personal friend, was asked his charge. He said he generally allowed his patient friends to remunerate him as they thought befitting. "But don't you often get disappointed on those terms?" she inquired.

"I may say never."

"As you are so easily pleased, here;" and she playfully gave him her empty hand, while in the other was concealed a cheque for a handsome sum. "How easily I could have taken you in," she added, producing the cheque.

"But you have only succeeded in drawing me out," he said, declining to relinquish her hand. "Don't insult me with a cheque. I am most generously rewarded."

Perhaps she understood the doctor's difficulty and wished to help him out of it. At any rate the giving of her hand led him to offer his heart.

This was how a gentleman got his wife: When in a tobacconist's shop, he asked a girl behind the counter who happened to have red hair, if she would oblige him with a match. "With pleasure sir, if you will have a red-headed one," she promptly replied, with such a suggestive, demure smile that she aroused his interest. Further conversation proved her to be a person worthy of regard, and eventually the red-headed match was handed over.

A lady with a fine figure having taken a fancy to a valuable ring which she saw ticketed in a shop window, went inside to examine it. "It is exceedingly lovely; I wish it were mine," she said, on satisfying herself. "What smaller figure will tempt you?"

"No other figure than the figure before me," he said, giving her an admiring look at the same time. "It is exceedingly lovely. I wish—I could tempt you with the ring."

"I think I will take it," she said, laying down the money amidst blushes.

Of course he accepted the money, but getting her address he made such good use of the hint that the next ring she got was given by him in church.

Quite as singular was the beginning of the courtship of the man who went into a shop for a pair of boots. "I want them wide, please," he said to the girl in attendance, "as I have a good broad understanding."

She laughed at the reference to the breadth of his feet, and said: "A very good thing, too, in a man, but not in a woman."

"How do you make out that what is good in one sex is bad in the other?"

"Ah, it is quite simple. You see nature intended man to be supported by a firm soul, but woman by yielding husband."

Whether he made a yielding husband or not, report at any rate says that he has made her his wife.

A man who had been very unfortunate in business, while relating his reverses to a rich lady, wound up by saying: "There is nothing for me but the union."

"Which one?" she inquired, with a smile on her lips and a soft look in her eyes. "If you care for me, choose that union in which I may see you oftenest."

"Shall we say matrimonial?"

"Ah, well, if you have a preference for that one I have no objection," and the agreement was ratified.

A lady in a railway train kept looking out at the window with her head well forward, until she remembered that the gentleman opposite might possible object.

"Do I cut off the view?" she asked.

"Merely of all I do wish to see!" he replied gallantly.

The ice having been thus broken, they entered into conversation, found they were to get out at the same station, and knew each other's friends. The rest was plain sailing into what somebody calls the "matrimonial haven."

"Are you married yet, Kitty?" said a sailor on meeting an old acquaintance after returning from a long voyage.

"No; that somebody has never come."

"Ah, then, I have brought him, after a deal of bother," he said, throwing his arms around her; and the matter was then and there settled.

This was ingenious enough, like the case of the theatrical manager, who was brought to the point when he called to inform his leading actress that he had secured a play at last which was sure to have a long run.

"What part have you reserved for me?" she asked.

"You are to be a charming sweetheart, as you are."

"Is there a wife in the piece?"

"There is."

"Then I have done charming sweethearts till I am tired, I must be a wife in the long run." And she was.

The poor man's Axminster carpet pays only 46 per cent. The rich man's drugget pays 86 per cent. The dainty silk hose with which the workingman's family decks itself pays 50 per cent. The worsted stockings of the millionaire's family pay 73 per cent. The workingman's olives come in free and his paté de fois gras pays only 25 per cent. But the millionaire's corn starch pays 85 per cent and his rice 106. The contemplation of a few facts like these ought to teach the workingman a proper gratitude to the framers and perpetrators of the war tariff.—Detroit Free Press.

A NEW MOTOR.—Old Lady—"Do you actually mean it, Mr. Sharpley, that the boats from New York to Boston go by Sound?" Sharpley—"Positive fact, madam, no question about it." Old Lady—"Goodness gracious! what a queer motive power! What will they do next? First they had sails, then steam, then electricity, and now it's sound. I just reckon it's one of that man Edison's inventions. No wonder they call him the Wizard; he can do most any thing."—Ocean.

THE FEELINGS AND THEIR CULTURE.

An address delivered by Professor T. M. Balliet, at the graduating exercises of Monson Academy, June 19.

We are apt to make two mistakes in dealing with the child's emotional nature. In the first place, we often assume, unnecessarily, in the management of children, that their emotional nature is fully developed, that they have all the emotions and feelings generally that the adult has. You have often seen children seven and eight years old standing by the grave of father or mother without being moved to tears. Why ir this? It is not due to the fact that they do not realize the fact that father or mother is dead, but to the fact that their love for them is not as yet strongly developed. Grief is not possible where there is no love.

Just as the intellectual faculties develop in a certain order which must be observed in education, so the emotional nature develops in a certain order which cannot be ignored in the training of the child. Certain emotions are not possible to the child until he has been matured by years of contact with the hard realities of life. To ask a boy of twelve to declaim one of Webster's speeches is to ask him to express thoughts and emotions which he cannot have. His thoughts no more fit into Webster's sentences than his little head would fit into Webster's hat. We put many things into our reading books for children that express thought and feeling as yet wholly foreign to their minds. To ask a boy of nine in a third reader class to recite with expression a lesson describing a mother's grief at the death of her child is to demand of him what is psychologically impossible. A book for children must not simply be written in a child's vocabulary, but must contain material that is not foreign to his mental and emotional life, and that is cast into his modes of thought. On this point many of our school books sin grievously against the laws of the child's soul.

Another mistake we are liable to make in dealing with the child's emotional nature is to assume that talking to him about an emotion develops the emotion. In this way we moralize to him about his emotions, proving to him that he ought to be grateful, reverent, kind, etc.

The emotional nature comes under the general law that exercise develops power. To cultivate a feeling we must call it into activity. Feeling, like thought and muscle, grows by exercise. Function develops the organ. There is, in this way, a sort of memory of our feelings, as there is of our thoughts. Habit, too, is nothing but a sort of memory of the will.

Emotions are called into activity by ideas (using the word in its wide, popular sense). Every feeling depends in this way on an idea. We cannot laugh or be angry without a cause. The only being in the world that can giggle without a cause is a high school girl about sixteen years old. The feeling of fear is called into activity by the idea of danger, the feeling of sympathy by the idea of suffering, etc. The idea that is to call a feeling into exercise must, however, not be abstract. It is not the thought of suffering in the abstract that moves our sympathy, but the thought of a concrete case of suffering; it is not meanness in the abstract that arouses our indignation, but the thought of a particular mean act. Abstract thought must be clothed in flesh and blood by the imagination before it can reach character. Hence the imagination is a sort of medium between abstract thought and the moral life, and by neglecting to develop it, or by crushing it, in school, we create that gulf between intellectual culture and moral life which we so often have occasion to deplore in our educational conventions. We have not yet fully learned that all intellectual work, if it is genuine, has a direct moral value. There is a closer connection between geography and charity, between arithmetic and righteousness than we are prone to admit.

One feeling is often displaced by another. Certain emotions cannot co-exist in the mind, but are mutually expulsive of one another. This thought is the theme of Chalmer's famous sermon on "The Expulsive Power of a New Affection." In this way the emotion of anger is expelled by the emotion of the ludicrous. If you can make an angry man laugh, you have expelled his anger. There is a mission for the comic in dramatic art. We can laugh ourselves free from crowding cares. This law, too, explains why we can dismiss all feeling of bitterness when we stand by the grave of an enemy. The sympathy and feeling of awe which death inspires expels all unworthy emotions. It also explains why a nation may become reconciled over the grave of a great hero.

"The child's conscience, as his whole moral nature, develops gradually. We can no more trust his conscience to protect him against moral harm than we could trust his judgment to protect him against physical injury. We must appeal to the child's moral sense, so as to call it into activity and develop it. But it is a mistake to rest the discipline of the school, in the case of little children, on such appeal to their sense of right.

If this be true, then it is a mistake to expose young children to temptations which their immature moral natures are not strong enough to resist. The "self-reporting system" in the public schools violates this principle. It tempts children to tell falsehoods to escape punishment. It is one of the best means ever invented for systematically training children into lying.

To place a boy of twelve or fourteen behind the counter in a store to sell goods, a position in which he handles a great deal of money in a day, and can appropriate small sums without detection, is a violation of this principle. No man has a right to put so severe a strain on a child's character at that morally tender age. In this way many a father gradually trains his own child into dishonesty and theft, and is utterly amazed to find that his own good boy at the age of thirty-five can rob banks and superintend Sunday-schools at the same time until he must start for Canada. No man becomes bad in a day. It requries a good many years of training to bring a boy up to the point of stealing thousands.

BLOOMING PROSPERITY.

A few days ago a drummer for one of our wholesale houses was traveling in a buggy along a country road in Arkansas, when he came upon a tall, roughly-dressed man sitting upon a rail fence whittling. With a sociable "good morning" the traveler drew up his horse and asked:

"Is that your field of corn over there?"

"Wal, I calkilate I'll freeze onto a right smart sheer of it. I'm working the piece on sheers.

"Looks like a fine crop."

"It does."

"I presume you are figuring on great prosperity in future, such immense crops indicate plenty for all."

"Prosperity? Stranger, that hain't no name fur the cyclone that's agoin' to hit this settlement atween the eyes this season. A tornado mout come jist now an' land every durned bit o' grain in the county over into Tennessee, and yit the smiles o' contentment 'd never shift off'n our faces!"

"Some unexpected good luck has befallen you," the tourist replied.

"That's the play to a t-y t-y. We're gettin' our slice o' the millennium away ahead o' the advertised date. Fust, ol' Zack Bolton up an' died last month, an' thar' hasn't been a ear o' corn or a side o' bacon missed in the community since we tumbled the dirt on top o' him. Then Wash Tompkins, the boss ol' sledge player, got sent to State prison fur horse stealin', thus givin' us poor players a show fur our pile; then Snaky, the saloon keeper up at the fork o' the road, dropped down to ten cents a drink fur whisky, and said he'd take corn same as cash; then my old woman ran off with a Yankee sewin'-machine peddler, an' my darter Sal got religion an' joined Mt. Zion church, an' if bloomin' prosperity ain't a hangin' over the neighborhood I'm a gilt-edge liar from the Red River swamps. Got any sweet tobacker about you?"—Evansville Argus.

HANGING THE PROPHETS.—A little girl who was taken to the Episcopal church for the first time heard the clergyman read the text:

"On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

"Grandma," said the little girl after she got home, "do they hang the prophets on the commandments just the same as they do presents on the Christmas tree?"—Boston Transcript.

The silver mines of Mexico extend from the Sierra Madre in Sonora, near the northern border, to the gold deposits in Oaxaca, in the extreme south. A continuous vein traverses no less than seventeen States, and since the day of its discovery has yielded more than $4,000,000,000. Yet these great sources of wealth are estimated to be not more than one per cent of the undeveloped and undiscovered whole.

MIXED ARITHMETIC.—Teacher: "Now remember, Robert, that a horse's front legs, as you call them, are his forelegs. Will you try to?"

Robby: "Yessum."

Teacher: "That's a good boy. Now before I dismiss you, tell me again how many legs a horse has."

Robby (promptly): "Six legs."

Teacher: "Six? How do you make that out, Robert?"

Robby: "The two legs what's his hind legs and the four legs what's his front legs is six legs.—Binghamton Republican."

SUCH A THOUGHTFUL MAN.—Mrs. McSwyny: "I'm towld your choild fell out o' the top windy, Mrs. Clinchy?"

Mrs. Clinchy: "Yis, an' av me little mon hadn't come along just at the right time an' broke the fall wid the top of his head, me bye'd been kilt."

Mrs. McSwyny: "Did it hurt your husband now?"

Mrs. Clinchy: "Oi don't think so. It broke his neck and he died widout a groan."—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine for June.

An English school boy was suddenly and sternly asked by an examiner: "Who signed Magna Charta?" and though he knew very well that he was personally guiltless, he couldn't help trembling at being suspected of anything which could be spoken of in such a tone, and at once renounced the act with alarm and indignation. "Please sir, I didn't," adding to make sure of safety, "and if I did I'll never do it again." "Why, you stupid fellow," said the master, "nobody said there was any harm in it. On the contrary, it was a very proper thing to do." "Please, sir," called out another boy, "it was me, sir. I done it myself."

Country Life.

Not what we would, but what we must,
  Make up the sum of living;
Heaven is both more or less than just
  In taking and in giving.
Swords cleave to hands that sought the plow,
And laurels miss the soldier's brow.

Me, whom the city holds, whose feet
  Have worn its stony highways,
Familiar with its loneliest street—
  Its ways are never my ways.
My cradle was beside the sea,
And there, I hope, my grave will be.

Old homestead! In that old gray town
  The vane is seaward plowing,
The slip of garden stretches down
  To where the tide is flowing;
Below they lie, their sails all furled,
The ships that go about the world.

Dearer that little country house,
  Inland, with pines beside it;
Some peach trees, with unfruitful boughs,
  A well, with weeds to hide it;
No flowers, or only such as rise
Self-sown, poor things, which all despise.

Dear country home! Can I forget
  The least of thy sweet trifles?
The window vines which clamber yet,
  Whose blooms the bee still rifles?
The roadside blackberries, growing ripe,
And in the woods the Indian pipe.

Happy the man who tills the field,
  Content with rustic labor;
Earth does to him her fullness yield,
  Hap what may to his neighbor.
Well days, sound nights, oh, can there be
A life more rational and free?

Dear country life of child and man!
  For both the best, the strongest,
That with the earliest race began,
  And hast outlived the longest.
Their cities perished long ago;
Who the first farmers were we know.

Perhaps our Babels, too, will fall,
  If so no lamentations;
For mother earth will shelter all,
  And feed the unborn nations;
Yes, and the swords that menace now
Will then be beaten to the plow.

WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?

"Oh, what a lovely bunch of pansies! Is it possible they are for me?" I exclaimed to a tiny brown-eyed girl who placed a fragrant bouquet of the gold and purple dewy blooms in my hammock, in which I was idly swinging under the big maple.

"Aunty Lee sent them," said the wee child, "and she hopes the mountain air will soon make you well, and she's your neighbor, down under the hill."

"Who is this neighborly Aunty Lee?" I asked the woman with whom I boarded when next she came within hearing of my voice.

"Oh, then she's sent ye some posies," replied talkative Mrs. Evans, coming briskly from the garden and sitting down on the steps of the little porch so that she might entertain me while she was shelling her peas, "thus killin' two birds with one stun," as she said. "I was a wonderin' to myself, not more'n tew minutes ago, how long 'twould be afore she would find out about ye and send ye suthin'. I can't see for my part how she can afford to do as she does."

"Why, what does she do?" I inquired. "Oh, she says she aims to be neighborly, and if anyone happens to be sick anywhere 'round, she sends 'em little things to eat, and flowers to cheer 'em up, as she says; and she always has her knittin' work in her pocket, and her 'odd job o' knittin',' as she calls it, grows eout like magic into gloves and mittens and wristlets and stockin's that she's givin' away."

"To her friends, people who are fully able to buy them, I suppose.

"Oh dear, no. To poor children and to old men and women that I s'pose are real needy, and that set great store by her warm and handsome presents, for her yarns are as bright as her flowers, and I've told my man a good many times that the color went half toward makin' her little gift so welcome. And then she has so much company."

"Rich people from the city, whose visits she returns?"

"Oh, land sakes, no. Poor folks that are tickled most to death to get an invitation to her pleasant little home. Yes, her home is an amazin' pleasant one, though her man is only a poor mechanic. She's always sayin' that she'd rather do a little good every day as she goes along than to be a waitin' to do some great thing when she gets able, and then perhaps lose her opportunity and never do nothin'. I told her one day last year, says I, 'Miss Lee,' says I, 'I should ruther be puttin' by a little sumthin' in the bank for a rainy day than to be a givin' away all the time.' And, says she, 'Mrs. Evings,' says she, 'That's your way, and it's a good way. I don't find no fault with it, but all these little things I give away would never get into the bank, and so, you see, they'd be lost, and I should pass away without ever doing anything for my Master. And I don't want to go to bed a night without thinkin' that I have that day tried to lighten some fellow mortal's burden, brought a smile to some face, or a streak of sunshine to some heart if it's only givin' a bunch of posies in the right speret.' "

"And these flowers cost her a good deal, first and last, I suppose?" said I, caressing my pansies.

"Oh, 'twould cost me a good deal to run sich a flower garden as she does, but Miss Lee says she's not strong, so she gets fresh air, sun baths and exercise in her garden, and spends her time workin' in there instead of visitin'. She returns all her calls by sendin' her compliments together with a bunch of posies."

"She hires some one to carry them about, I presume."

"Massy no. There isn't a child in the village but what would run its legs off for Aunty Lee." And, having finished shelling her mess of peas, my talkative little hostess trotted about her work again, saying, a she disappeared through the doorway, "It's well enough to be neighborly, of course, but Miss Lee may see the time when she will wish she had a leetle something put out at interest."

The Vermont mountain air agreed with me, my health gradually improving, and I stayed on and on, week after week, spending a great part of the time, when the weather did not positively forbid, in my hammock under the maples. As yet I had nor once seen my neighbor, Aunty Lee, but grew to love her on account of the pretty nosegays that daily found their way from her hand to mine by one and another child messenger.

One night, late in August, there was a heavy thunder shower. The sudden downfall of rain swelled the little river that skirted our village to a veritable mountain torrent. A mill-dam some miles up the stream had broken away and the angry flood came rushing down, sweeping all before it.

"Aunty Lee's husband's shop has gone," shouted my hostess, Mrs. Evans, as she knocked at my door in the early morning after the storm; "and that's not the worst on't, for her garden is all washed eout and undermined, so that it'll take a purty pile o' money ter fix it up again, if ever 'tis fixed. I wonder now ef Mis' Lee don't wish she hadn't been quite so neighborly, and so had a little sumthin' eout at interest," and it really seemed to me as if the brisk little woman chuckled to herself as she pattered down the stairs.

In less than half an hour she came back to my room with as doleful a looking visage as I ever saw. Whatever is agoin' to become o' me and my man," cried she; "an' we agettin' to be old folk, tew. Our savings were all in the stock comp'ny up to Minotsville, because they paid more interest than the bank; we only tuk it eout o' the bank a little while ago, and neow their old mill has none clean off, an' they'll all go to gineral smash and we along with 'em;" and this time she went slowly groaning down the stairs. I could not help pitying the woman from the bottom of my heart.

There was great excitement in the little village, as a matter of course, but Aunty Lee was reported to be as "chipper" as ever. The nosegay came to me every day as usual, not quite so many, nor so great a variety as formerly, for a part of the garden had been washed away, but enough to give me an increased admiration for the sweet old lady who was so persistent and unwearying in her neighborly acts of kindness.

The next Monday's local newspaper had this unique notice at the head of the village items:

All who have ever been the recipients of kindly deeds from "Aunty Lee" and who would like to reciprocate now in her day of misfortune are invited to bring their supper to Oak Grove on Thursday afternoon at five o'clock, and talk of the matter over a neighborly cup of tea.

At the time appointed I had a carriage come to take my hostess and me, and my basket of cakes and buns fresh from the bakery, to the beautiful grove. As we were driven along I was surprised to see so many people, lunch-baskets in hand, speeding in the same direction.

"Almost everybody in town is going," said Mrs. Evans, "high an' low, rich an' poor."

As I was being assisted to a seat a gentle, motherly little woman spread a soft shawl over the back of the chair intended for me and quickly folded another shawl for my lame foot to rest upon.

"This is Aunty Lee," said Mrs. Evans, and the sweet-faced little woman and I looked into each other's faces with a little curiosity, perhaps, as well as sympathy, and shook hands cordially.

"I don't know what all these good people are to do with Elijah and me," she said, with a smile that was as genial as a sunbeam, "but the minister would have us come, and he and his wife drove around for us."

The minister ascended the platform just then, and after tenderly yet impressively invoking the Divine blessing, he looked down benignly upon the faces upturned to his, and with a touching intonation of voice, asked: "Who is my neighbor?" He then went on to tell how Aunty Lee had answered that question in regard to himself.

"When I first became acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Lee," he said, "I was finishing my theological studies here in the village with Dr. Mills, and they had just married and settled down in their little house yonder, which they had inherited. One day I was sent for to preach on trial in the adjoining town of Luxboro'. My only coat was worn threadbare and extensively patched, and I had no way of procuring another. Feeling sorely grieved and dispirited I started out for a walk, and for the sake of telling my troubles to some fellow creature, and with no thought of receiving any aid in the premises, I turned in to Mrs. Lee's house and read to her the invitation I had had from Luxboro' and frankly told her why I could not go at present."

"Leave it to the Lord," said the good woman, and forthwith she proceeded to take my measure with a piece of tape. "Go home," she continued, "write your sermon and come here again Saturday morning."

I obeyed. I subsequently found that the woman had actually taken a piece of cloth that she had laid by in the house for a cloak for herself, and tailoress as she was by trade, had cut and made me a coat from it. I preached my first sermon in it, and shortly received and accepted my first call."

"Oh, dear," whispered Aunty Lee from her seat by my side, "he's paid me for that coat every New Year's Day since, and it wasn't much for me to do, after all."

Major Sanford, the richest man in town, was the next to take the stand. The old people smiled and nodded their heads, but the young folks looked at each other and wondered what he could be indebted to Aunty Lee for.

"When I was a boy," the major began, "I was bound out in H—— to a very, very bad master, from whom I determined to run away. I availed myself of an opportunity to escape one Saturday afternoon, when I was sent to the pasture to salt the cattle. I came straight over the mountain to this place. I wanted to get out of the state as soon as possible, so came directly to the bridge down here at the river, which is, you all know, the New Hampshire boundary. Just after I had stepped upon Vermont soil I overtook, on the road, Mr. and Mrs. Lee, young people then. They had a basket and a spade, and had been digging up wild flowers to transplant in their garden. Although an entire stranger, they accosted me kindly. Noticing that I had been crying, Mrs. Lee asked me my trouble. Before I knew it I had blurted out the whole story, and had been invited by her to go home with them and stay over Sunday. I was, of course, only too grateful to accept the invitation. After supper we set out the plants, and then Mr. Lee took me with him down the hill to the bank of the 'brook,' as we called it then, and into his little machine shop. I soon evinced my fondness for tools, and confided to him an invention that had, in a crude form, long had possession of my brain. Being a natural mechanic, he saw the utility of my invention at a glance. The subject was not mentioned on the morrow, which was a quiet, restful day to me. Mrs. Lee loaned me a clean linen suit belonging to her husband, and I went to church with them. The next day Mr. Lee went over to H—— and made terms with my master, because Mrs. Lee said she could not allow me to feel like a 'runaway.' Then Mr. Lee took me into his employment and gave me a corner in his shop where I could, at odd moments, work at my model. My invention proved a success and made my fortune, as you all know. I am thankful, my friends, that I am able to-day to repair the damages done to the dear little homestead and to rebuild my old friend's shop," and Major Sanford sat down, wiping his eyes with his handkerchief, while his delighted audience applauded vociferously.

"Dear heart," said Aunty Lee to me, "what was he talking about? He's paid us over and over, and he's tried and tried to make Elijah go into partnership with him, but he wouldn't, and I would not let him."

Then followed one-minute speeches by the score. "They kept me three months when I was sick and homeless," said one. "I made their house my home for weeks when I was out of work," said another. Ten homeless working girls were married in their parlor and went out into the world with their blessing. There was a great number of touching little speeches from those who had received flowers and delicacies in illness and warm garments in times of need.

And so from them all flowed out contributions of money, the greater part of which was safely placed in bank for the benefit of the Lees when old age and failing strength should overtake them.

"Dear me," said Mrs. Evans to Aunty Lee, "you've been lendin' to the Lord, and He pays the best interest, arter all. I never could understand before; but I dew now."

"There are none of us so poor that we cannot give such as we have. A smile or a kind word even will come back to us in kind," said Aunty Lee, and we all brushed away the tears that we could not suppress while those touching speeches were being made, and went to our homes.

A Little Girl's Composition.—A cow is an animal with four legs on the under side. The tail is longer than the legs, but is not used to stand on. The cow kills flies with her tail. A cow has big ears that wiggles on hinges; so does her tail. The cow is bigger than the calf, but not so big as an elephant. She is made so small that she can go into the barn when nobody is looking. It was a little girl who, going to the Episcopal church, and happening to turn around just at the moment when the congregation bow their adoration in the creed, took it into her head that they were all bowing to her. And so, as she was a polite little girl, and not inclined to receive a salutation without returning it, she bowed very respectfully and exclaimed: "Good morning, people!"—Boston Transcript.

True Sagacity. "Don't you sing?" inquired the musical young lady of the new arrival at the hotel, "why, how stupid of you!" "If you'd ever heard me try," said the young man, with an accent of conviction, "you'd think it was everlasting smart of me.—Puck."

A scheme for the erection of a bridge over the English channel is in active consideration among French capitalists and engineers. The projected bridge would be 22 miles long, resting on piers of concrete and masonry 160 feet long by 100 broad, placed at intervals of 550 yards. The causeway of the bridge would be 160 feet above the sea-level, to permit the passage of ships, and would be 100 feet wide. The estimated cost is $200,000,000. It appears that the channel is not so deep as is generally supposed. There are shallows out from Folkestone not over 20 feet from the surface, the depth from these shallows to the shore on either side varying from 100 to 160 feet.

Too Much of a Lady.

When Eve in the garden was plucking the rose,
And enjoying the Eden walks shady,
I wonder if ever she turned up her nose,
And sighed, "I'm too much of a lady.
Too much of a lady, dear Adam, to work,
A helpmeet was made to be petted,
You keep things in order, I really must shirk,
Though the fact, dear, is greatly regretted.

To-day she has daughters whose delicate hands
Are wholly unfitted for labor;
It almost fatigues them to flutter their fans,
When they languidly call on a neighbor.
Their mission on earth is to gossip and dress,
And live upon life's sweetest honey;
And they haven't a trouble or bother unless
Their masculine bank fails in money.

It isn't the loveliest thing, to be sure,
To dabble in cooking and dishes,
But never a home was kept tidy and pure
By dainty, æsthetical wishes.
I'm free to confess there is something in life
More attractive than putting a stitch in,
And many a weary, industrious wife
Isn't deeply in love with her kitchen.

But duty is duty, and dirt always dirt,
And only the lazy deny it,
Crocheting is nicer than making a shirt,
But man never yet was clothed by it.
To sit in a parlor in indolent ease,
Till one grows all fragile and fady,
Or flounce through the street, silly gazers to please
Is being too much of a lady.

Too much of a lady to darn up her hose,
Or govern her house with acumen;
Too much of a lady, wherever she goes,
To ever be much of a woman.
The muscles that God made are useless to her,
Except to be wrapped up in satin;
And as for her intellect—she would prefer
A bonnet to mastering Latin.

Too much of a lady to own a grand heart,
To be a true daughter or mother;
To much of a lady to bear the brave part
That ne'er can be borne by another.
By fashion or birth too fine for this earth,
When it comes to the judgement's pay-day,
Though our Lord may delight in the lilies in white,
Will he smile on "Too much of a lady?"

OLD PETER'S STORY.

All was excitement in the great house on the hill, for so Chalmers Hall was known for miles around. I had not served the family, boy and man, for thirty years without sharing it to a certain degree not incompatible with my butler's dignity, and all evidence of which I strove sedulously to conceal.

It was occasioned by no less an event than the return of the young lady of the house—the only daughter and sole heiress of all these broad acres—from the finishing school in Paris, to make her formal debut in society.

The suite of rooms assigned to her had been thoroughly renovated and refurnished in a manner widely different from the solid English comfort which prevailed elsewhere throughout the house; but to look through them was like the sudden glimpse into the nest of some humming bird which had imparted all its own brilliancy to its belongings.

Only a few days before the expected arrival came a letter, begging permission to bring with her her dearest friend—a young lady whose father was an East Indian officer, and whose return had been unexpectedly postponed a couple of months.

Of course the petted daughter's wish was law; and though the fond father, reading aloud the letter preferring this request at the breakfast-table, exchanged a glance of disappointment with his wife that so soon the privacy of their little circle must be disturbed, a formal invitation to Miss Aline Revere to the hospitalities of Chalmers Hall was dispatched that very day.

I shall never forget the evening of Miss Chalmers' return. Her cheery "How do you do, Peter?" thrilled my old bones, as did the touch of the little hand she kindly offered me, in memory perhaps of my long service and the many rides up and down the broad halls she had had on my shoulder, screaming the while with glee.

She flitted about all the evening, like a bee from flower to flower, and it was as though a burst of sudden sunshine had illumined the old house. She was a fair, sweet English girl, but as all were seated about the dinner table I could not but acknowledge the palm of beauty must be awarded to her friend. I had never seen a more exquisite face. It fairly haunted me. It held in it the fire of the tropics, the ice of the Arctic, the light of the heavens, the shadow of the night—each expression in contradiction of the other, each tending to produce harmonious welfare.

I did not think this all out myself, but someone, long after, in describing Miss Revere's face thus worded it, and I knew then they had made clear the enigma my old brain had so long tried to solve. I would even then have been envious, for Miss Chalmers' sake, but that she seemed so fond, so devoted to her friend that her very gladness was an unconscious rebuke to me.

It was not long before the house was filled with guests—ladies and ladies' maids, gentlemen and their valets, coming and going, filling the place with gaiety and excitement. Then came the announcement of a grand ball, with invitations to all the county. Glad enough I was when the evening it was to take place actually arrived, and I could feel that the bustle of anticipation was at an end.

On her way down to the drawing-room, Miss Flo peeped in to see the tables, and I thought for that once we might compare her to Miss Aline. She was dressed in white, her arms and neck bare, but glittering with precious stones. Some of the family jewels her father had had reset and presented to her that very morning at the breakfast table. I was not very likely to forget the circumstance, for the old feeling of half dislike with which I had at first regarded Miss Aline swept over me as I fancied I saw an envious glitter sparkle in the great black eyes as they rested on the glittering gems.

"Will I do, Peter?" asked my young mistress, sweeping me a mock courtesy, as she had done when a tiny girl; and I half believe, instead of answering her, I brushed away a tear.

The ball was a grand success, and the sun had risen ere the sound of the wheels of the last carriage filled with departing guests had died away.

There had been many made welcome that night, but none I well knew received a warmer one than young Mr. Earle, who had returned home from a year's visit to foreign countries only twenty-four hours before.

I caught a glimpse of him once as he was dancing with Miss Flo. Even in that fleeting moment I saw how tenderly his strong arm clasped her—how proudly his handsome eyes looked down upon her—how flushed with happiness was her own fair face, half hidden on his own broad shoulder; and my heart gave a glad exultant leap that so joyous a future was assured her.

I well knew what was the unexpressed family wish, for young Mr. Earle's estates adjoined our own. They were unfettered, unencumbered, and in every way a splendid patrimony.

I had turned away from this fleeting glimpse among the great folks, my old brain filled with its idle dreams of the future, when my eyes chanced to fall upon one who, like myself, was engrossed in the animated scene beyond us. It was Miss Flo's friend, but, oh, how changed!

The mask had falled from her beautiful face. The great black eyes fairly scintillating with suppressed feeling, were fixed upon the two who moved in such perfect harmony with the music. A drop of blood was on her scarlet lip, where her little white teeth had rested. One small hand was involuntarily clenched. Her mouth moved, but no sound issued from it.

I stood transfixed, a cold shiver running through me. It was this fury whom Miss Flo, gentle and unconscious, regarded as her dearest friend.

Of what stuff might be made her dearest foe? I remembered then the look I had seen these same eyes fix upon the jewels. Was she envious of my young lady's fortune? What danger might not threaten her through this beautiful pantheress? And yet how dared I, an humble servant, utter a word of warning?

Even with these thoughts passing in quick succession through my mind, there was so sudden and instantaneous a change swept over Miss Revere's expression that I could scarce recall the other, except as the result of some hideous conjuring of my own fancy.

Miss Flo was coming toward her, leaning on Mr. Earle's arm.

I returned to my duties with a heavy heart. I felt a shadow of ill was pending over us, yet I almost forgot it next day, when my young lady's formal engagement to Mr. Earle was announced. So loved and protected, what possible harm could come to her, even through a woman's malice.

Ah, my unspoken question remained not long unanswered. It had been all too natural for these two young hearts to flow toward each other, obeying the life impulse of both. They had loved each other as children; they knew each other as though the bond of brotherhood and sisterhood united them; their memories circled around the same spot, were haunted by the same objects.

It was the natural sequence, which all had anticipated. Therefore, save Mr. Earle, was with us more constantly than of old, and that there was a new flush on Miss Flo's cheek, a softer, tenderer light in her blue eyes, it was hard to realize any change. But one was impending less difficult of realization. The lovers had a constant companion in the person of my young lady's friend. At first Mr. Earle seemed to dislike her; but Miss Flo's sweet influence and his own courtesy led him first to conceal it, and later to overcome it.

Miss Flo's sweet influence and his own courtesy, I have said; but there was a more potent reason still in Miss Revere's marvelous fascination. There was not one in the whole household it escaped, save myself, and even I had to pull myself up many times with a sharp turn lest I, too, should be blinded by its glamour. But it was not my old eyes with which she had to deal.

Miss Flo, all trusting and unsuspicious, threw the two she loved constantly together.

"You must like each other for my sake," she would say.

Is danger ever so threatening as when it fails on those who dream not it is near? The sorceress had the young master tightly in her coil ere he dreamed that even a silken thread enfettered him. The full horror of it all overwhelmed him; he grew pale and haggard-eyed.

But tighter and tighter she drew the bonds, and, like a bird, fascinated by the serpent, step by step he approached the magic influence of her sway.

One of her most wonderful attractions was her voice. Even in speaking, one seemed to listen to low music, but in singing it ranged the gamut of human emotion.

One evening—it was in the twilight—Miss Flo and Mr. Earle were sitting together, on the broad piazza, outside the long French windows leading into the drawing-room, when just within, from the music room beyond, arose the words of an impassioned song.

From the dining-room across the hall I could hear the measure, in its wonderful melody, and knew that she who sang it was singing to but one, who could not be deaf to the appeal the words conveyed.

Higher and higher rose the exquisite voice, trembling with its weight of passion, and he for whose ear alone it was intended, sat without, a girl's fair hand clasped in his— a girl's fair head resting on his shoulder—a girl's light heart filled with his image.

Did Miss Aline know that he would come in obedience to her call? Was it a mere accident which summoned Miss Flo from his side?

However that might be, when left alone, with slow, reluctant movement he rose, and, passing through the open window, walked with uncertain step to the room beyond. The singer sang on.

Did she see that figure standing still and silent just beyond the threshold? Perhaps the evening shadows hid him, as her voice suddenly died away in a choking sob, and her head bent forward on the keys.

Instantly he was by her side. Instantly he had raised her head to his breast, with his strong, faithless arms clasped about her.

"Aline!" he said, "My love, my love!"

And then, uplifting the crimson lips to his, bent and kissed them.

I was busy with my silver, knowing naught of this, but wondering how I might unfold to my young mistress my suspicions, when I heard close beside me a low, startled cry. I glanced up. Miss Flo was standing on the threshold of the music room. She had seen all. She would have fallen, but that, springing forward, I caught her in my old arms, as Mr. Earle came hastily toward us.

I forgot his rank and my position, as I waved him off, but even in my bitter indignation against him, I felt for what he suffered when I saw the white look of misery on his young, handsome face.

Up the broad stairs I carried my young lady to her room, and laid her on her couch. Then her mother came, and I left her; but as I pressed through the room beyond, I saw lying in the empty grate some torn scraps of paper. Mechanically, with a servant's orderly instinct, I stooped and picked them up, when my eye was caught by the meaning of a single sentence, "the heir of the adjoining estate—"

Of course a "gentleman" would have gone no further, but I was but a mere servant, with the interests of the family whom I had served more then two-score years over beyond all else.

I carefully carried the little handful of papers up to my room, and there, bit by bit, with hard work and infinite spelling, I made them almost a perfect whole.

"Delay your coming a little longer, dear father," wrote the traitress. "The fish is already in my net. I could laugh at his weakness were there not such a stake. He is the heir to the adjoining estate, acres on acres of which I can see from my window as I write. I shall be a grand English lady yet; and then, who will taunt me with being the daughter of a circus-rider? We will wipe out that stain, then, on my mother's side, and you shall have your reward for all the sacrifices you have made for me."

Had I discovered a vein of gold I could not have gloated more than over these few words.

Ah, now indeed, I could avenge my young lady, and punish her recreant lover! But the time was not yet ripe; I would wait until he had given her his old and honored name, and then I would unmask her ere she had reaped the glory, and too late for him to retrieve the shame.

With this determination, I went back to my duties; but, passing through the hall, Mr. Earle's voice, low and yet excited, caught my ear.

"I have been mad!" he said. "Aline, forgive me for the wrong I have done you; but you must hear the truth. I know now that my feeling toward you has been the intoxication of your fascination. Never can I wipe from my memory my darling's white unconscious face! I felt as though I had stabbed her to the heart; and I knew then that my soul had never wavered in its allegiance, though your beauty and your marvelous power had turned my brain. Aline, say that you do not love me! Do not make me feel that I have marred your life, too!"

A stifled voice replied, choked with feeling:

"I cannot, Arthur—I cannot! Oh, do not turn from me! I am doubly helpless now! Flo never again will care for you. Let me teach you the lesson of love for me. If, indeed, already you have not learned it!"

It was not my place—I know that; but I forgot my anger against him in listening to the few manly words which assured me his heart was Miss Flo's, and I strode into the room and put the paper in his hands.

"Read this, Mr. Arthur," I said, boldly, "before you answer her."

There is little more to be told. I myself closed the hall-door next morning, bright and early, as the carriage bore Miss Aline Revere on the first stage of her journey Londonward. We never saw or heard from her again.

For long weeks Miss Flo refused even to see Mr. Arthur Earle—for months to look upon him as a friend. Poor fellow! We were all sorry for him during this time, for he had spoken truly—his love had never wavered?

But at last there came a day when Miss Flo learned to do this, and then—ah, then light stole back into her eyes, and the color to her cheeks!

She's been a happy wife this many a year now, and old Peter is growing almost useless, save to ride her children, as he once rode her, through the old halls upon his old shoulders, to the echo of their childish laughter, which keeps his old heart young.

Count Tolstoi gave to a recent visitor a glowing description of the labors of the field. "Ah!" he exclaimed, "what a joy it is, when the head is tired with work, to be able to repose one's self by a simple physical exercise. Every day, according to the season, I go out mowing, digging or plowing. Oh, the plow! You little dream what a pleasure it is, and what good it does to the heart. How joyfully the blood flows through the veins! The head becomes clear, and the feet so light that you scarcely feel them. And what an appetite one gets, and how soundly one sleeps afterward!"

It was a very proper answer to him who asked why any man should be delighted with beauty, that it was a question that none but a blind man should ask.—Lord Clarendon.

The Little Kerchief.

It was only a wee, worn handkerchief that lay in my trembling hands,
As I sat by the window dreaming, and looked on the moon-lit lands;
It was only a wee, worn handkerchief, but it filled my heart with tears,
For it spoke of my beloved, and the unforgotten years.

I thought of the old, old garden, where many a happy night
She stood in the summer moonlight and waved that kerchief white.
As she watched in fond confiding, for she knew that it would be
A beacon of light to guide me, a signal of love to me.

But the moon rose over the meadows; the night grew hushed and still,
And methought that my beloved came down from the old sweet hill;
Once more her hand was waving, once more that kerchief white
Flashed like the wing of an angel out of the silent night.

So I kept the little kerchief, with a trust that can ne'er grow cold,
For I know that my love is waiting, as once in the days of old,
And out of the bright blue heaven there will come, in the years to be,
Her message of old to call me, her signal of love to me.

THE NEW BALLOT BILL.

The three great objects of this bill are to regulate the nomination of candidates, to have the ballots printed and distributed by the government, and to secure secrecy in voting. All nominations for candidates that are to be voted for on the state ticket are made to the secretary of the commonwealth at least 14 days before the election, and for candidates for city election are made to city clerks not less than six days before city elections. The nominations can be made by conventions or caucuses of parties, or through nomination papers, so-called; that is, by subscription of a regulated number of registered voters to a request for the nomination of a candidate. All the candidates to be voted for at the same polling-place are printed on the same ticket. This ticket or printed marking list the voter receives on entering an enclosed space within the polling-room, from the hands of an official ballot distributer. The voter has simply to mark a cross against the names of those candidates he prefers. The voter is not in ignorance as to these candidates when he accepts his ticket, for the nominations are not only open to public inspection, so that they will immediately appear in the newspapers, but also officially advertised and posted, and besides that specimen ballots on tinted paper are put about the walls in the polling places so that the public can exmaine them. Besides that, the newspapers and the party committees will undoubtedly see that every voter is supplied with cards—through the mail or otherwise—of the candidates they advise him to mark. In order to secure secrecy and convenience in marking, a long shelf, partitioned off with wings, is to be arranged in each polling-place within an inclosed space, so that a number of voters may be marking their ballots at the same time, in such a way that their ballots will be screened from observation. They immediately fold their ballots, and, without letting any one see how they have been marked, desposit them in the ballot-box with the official stamp uppermost.

In order to secure these simple objects and to make the law fit exactly into our complicated system, and with our registering ballot boxes and the like, the bill is necessarily cumbered with many details. But as far as the exercise of a citizen's political duties are concerned, the system is extremely simple.

WHY SHE SMILED.

He was a middle-aged man with a suspicion of baldness escaping from under his fur cap, and he stood on a corner smiling at everything in general and at nothing in particular.

"Guess what's in there," he cried, pulling a clinched hand out of his overcoat pocket as McPelter came up.

"Give it up!"

"A souvenir."

"Of what?"

"Why, I stepped into Blank's just now for a little purchase, and you know what a stunning little creature there is in one of the departments? No? Well, she's there, anyhow, and a half-dollar was coming to me in change. Maybe you think she flipped it carelessly onto the counter? Not much! She held it out to me in of her little white hands. I squeezed her fingers when I took it, and you ought to have seen her smile?"

"Bosh! It's just a common half-dollar for all that. Le' me see it."

But it wasn't—it had a hole in it!—Detroit Free Press.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 6, 1888.

Gen. Lew. Wallace, author of that rarely-interesting work, "Ben Hur," is to write a campaign history of Gen. Harrison.

Iron Workers to the number of nearly 100,000 are out of work in Pennsylvania and the West, owing to a reduction of wages, which they would not accept.

During the fiscal year ending June 30 the government debt was reduced $112,000,000, while there was a surplus of $97,000,000 left over. Under these conditions it would seem as if the tariff might stand a slight reduction without injury to the country.

It is rash presumption for a modest weekly to venture a criticism on a great daily newspaper, but it seems a little odd, nevertheless, to see our neighbor, the Springfield Republican, remark of Gov. Foraker that "he would mightily have liked to have jumped for Blaine." It only shows how greatness often tends to beget carelessness.

The Fourth was celebrated generally in about the usual manner, though there were few elaborate observances. Nature patriotically gave us a day of rare beauty, omitting the customary wetting, and everybody was correspondingly happy and comfortable, while there were fewer casualties and fires than usual to detract from the pleasures of the day.

Gen. Harrison was officially notified of his nomination at his residence in Indianapolis, Wednesday, and accepted in a brief speech, saying, among other things:—

> The principles of government and the practices in administration, upon which issues are now fortunately so clearly made, are so important in their relations to the national and individual prosperity that we may expect unusual popular interest in the campaign. Relying wholly upon the considerate judgment of our fellow citizens and the gracious favor of God, we will confidently submit our cause to the arbitrament of a free ballot.

A Good Many people would heartily approve of the Lime Kiln Club's plan for disposing of the surplus in the national treasury. Here it is:—

1. Gin ebery city in de kentry a millyon dollars to spend in fiahworks.
2. Buy fo' millyon bushels of peanuts an' distribute 'em free to all.
3. Hev hoss races an' prize fights once a week, wid admishum free.
4. Distribute Waterbury watches and roller skates free to all, an' doan charge nobody nuffin' for lemonade.

Dr. McGlynn is losing his head. In a speech Sunday night he came very near to advising people to refuse paying rent, arguing that it would take the courts a long time to turn all such tenants out, and in the meantime they would have their rent free. A very pretty programme for rent payers, but a foolish and dangerous one for them to try.

The Yale-Harvard boat race at New London last Friday was the easiest kind of a walk-over for the Yale crew, who came out over twenty lengths ahead, making the four miles in twenty minutes and ten seconds, beating the record on the river by twenty-one seconds. Yale has now won seven of the thirteen races in the series, and will win them right along unless Harvard wakes up and makes a radical change in her style of rowing.

After considering the nomination of Melville W. Fuller for chief justice of the United States for several weeks, the judiciary committee has reported it back to the Senate without any recommendation. Mr. Fuller has been commended by Democrats and Republicans alike, and nothing has been found to impugn his character and ability. The committee's course is therefore both singular and discreditable, showing a more partisan spirit than ought to obtain in such abody. The Senate will unquestionably confirm the nomination.

Mr. Moody's annual summer Bible school for college workers is now in session at Northfield. The purpose of the meetings is to quicken students and strengthen them for spiritual work among their companions in colleges and other institutions of learning in this and other countries, and the influences of the school are already felt to a remarkable extent. The number of students in attendance is increasing yearly, and many others, as well, gather from all parts of the country to enjoy and be helped by the rich feast of spiritual things there provided.

> When we consider the patronage of this great office, the allurements of power, the temptations to retain public place once gained, and more than all, the availability a party finds in an incumbent whom a horde of office-seekers with a greed born of benefits received, and fostered by the hope of favors yet to come, stand ready to aid with money and trained political service, we recognize in the eligibility of the President for re-election a most serious danger to that calm, deliberate and intelligent political action which must characterize a government by the people.

That's what President Cleveland said four years ago in his letter of acceptance, when he favored a constitutional amendment disqualifying the president from reëlection. He understands the "allurements of power" now better than he did then, hence the news of his renomination gave him "the liveliest sense of personal gratitude and satisfaction." Times change, and men ditto.

On the 1st, 2d and 3d of July, 1863, occurred the memorable and decisive conflict between the Union and Confederate armies at Gettysburg. The interest in this great battlefield has grown deeper and deeper year by year, and the 25th anniversary of the contest has been fittingly and feelingly celebrated this week by the survivors of the blue and gray, in the spirit of the immortal address of President Lincoln, at the dedication of the Gettysburg national cemetery, when he uttered these words:—

> Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation, so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We are met to dedicate a portion of that field as the final resting place of those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper we should do this. But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here; but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they have thus far so nobly carried on. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us; that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to the cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

No rain on the Fourth; something unusual.

Dod leedle Cherman Pand was around the streets yesterday.

H. C. Sanger has been granted an insurance broker's license.

About 100 tickets were sold at Palmer for Forest Lake Garden on the Fourth.

The engine and dynamos for the electric light station have arrived, and are now in position.

Chauncey Noble is now in charge of the mail team, which has recently been driven by John Manning.

Work is completed on the Boston and Albany railroad bridge west of the union passenger station.

A meeting of those interested in forming a Republican club will be held at the court room, Monday evening, at 7.30.

A large number came from Monson last Friday evening to attend the graduating exercises of the class of '88 of the Palmer high school.

Invitations are out for the marriage, at St. Thomas's church next Tuesday, of Maggie, daughter of Selectman Kerigan, and Cornelius M. Foley.

The new front of the Cross block on Main street is completed, and the building presents a decidedly citified appearance. The job was done by F. F. Marcy.

The third meeting of the creditors of Joseph E. Langlois, of Three Rivers, will be held in the court of insolvency in Springfield to-morrow afternoon at 2.30.

The 150-acre farm lately owned by James Burns, in the northern part of the town, will be sold at auction to-morrow at ten o'clock a. m., with stock, farming utensils, household furniture, etc.

J. W. Weeks conveyed the members of the Springfield Orchestral Club from Palmer to Wilbraham last Friday afternoon, where they rendered a good programme of music at Wesleyan Academy.

Charles Brown, living in this village, was thrown from a vehicle last Saturday evening while attempting to turn abruptly at the corner of Main and Walnut streets, and had his leg quite badly injured.

Several dogs belonging to Palmer Center parties have been worrying sheep owned by James Hamilton, Horace W. Stimson and Peter Ditto. The authorities have been informed of the matter, and are taking prompt action.

The county commissioners will give a hearing in the matter of the petition of the town of Brimfield for the discontinuance of certain roads and bridges between that town and Palmer, and the locating of a new road, at the union passenger station next Tuesday at ten o'clock a. m.

Some careless urchin threw a firecracker into the carpenter shop back of Dwyer and Sullivan's store Wednesday forenoon, and when it was discovered about ten o'clock by D. H. Brown a hole as large as a man's body had been burned out, but men from White and Eppley's marble works quickly extinguished the fire.

An ancient and dilapidated guide-stone was unearthed near the residence of Charles Foster recently by the highway surveyors while repairing the road. The stone was inscribed with the words "Springfield" and "Monson," and also bore the distance to each place from Palmer. It is believed the stone must be over a century old.

J. W. Weeks's tally-ho coach was chartered last Saturday afternoon by a party which went to Wilbraham Mountain for a "sunset tea" and a view of the sunset and Connecticut valley from that point. A pleasant time and a most magnificent view is reported. Dr. G. H. Wilkins, Edward N. Lacey, Henry Loomis, Luther Cobb, Arthur L. Holden, Miss Sadie Stanwood, Miss Emma Dewey, Miss Lizzie Holden, Miss Ada C. Wing, Miss Alice Holden, Miss May Palmer, and W. C. Hitchcock and wife comprised the party.

It is a pretty serious matter for any one to tamper with the fire alarm system and knowingly ring in false alarms. The law provides a severe penalty, and it will go hard with Wednesday night's offender if he be found. False alarms are also dangerous to property, as the fire of the next morning showed, when several of the firemen thought it was another alarm for a "joke," and were in no hurry to turn out at one a. m. A decided effort should be made to find and punish the maker and user of the false key.

Henry J., son of Rev. E. A. Perry of Hudson, N. Y., formerly of this place, graduated June 21st from Clinton Liberal Institute, at Fort Plain, N. Y. From the Mohawk Valley Register, published at Fort Plain, the following clipping, regarding an oration delivered by him as a part of the commencement exercises, is taken:

> "Then followed an oration, 'Gladstone and Ireland,' by Henry J. Perry. One rarely hears among students so finished and graceful a delivery as that of Mr. Perry, and the substance of the oration fully merited the fine manner in which it was given. Mr. Perry spoke of the characteristics of the Irish peoples and the effect of England's policy on that national character.

About 25 of the 36 Montana horses advertised to be sold on the park Monday were disposed of, the prices ranging from $40 to $80. Some of them were halter-broken and some were not, and the purchasers of those which were not had some fun getting their animals home. It took three men to get one of them along. He had been lassooed on the park, and a rope about 40 feet long noosed around his neck. The only way he could be made to move at all was by tightening the rope, then he would set back and pull, and by easing off a little he would back a few feet. Another pull and a few more steps backward, the process repeated time after time, and by turning his head in the direction opposite from that it was desired to take him, he finally arrived at his destination.

Forest Lake Garden.

To-morrow the Congregational society of Gilbertville will visit the Lake.

The Universalist church of Warren had an excursion to the Lake Tuesday.

Rev. Mr. Groves of West Brimfield will conduct the religious services next Sunday.

The State Street Baptist church of Springfield picnicked at the Lake to-day, bringing their own band of music. There were about 600 in the party.

About 3000 people visited the Lake on the Fourth, and a very pleasant time is reported by all. There is no reason why this resort should not become popular under the present management, as they do everything possible for the entertainment and comfort of guests.

District Court.

June 29.—James Riley, for drunkenness; committed in default of payment of $7.78.

30.—James Brown, drunkenness; paid fine and costs amounting to $8.08.

July 2.—F. N. Davis, Thomas Joyce, Patrick Riley and Fred Andrews were arraigned for drunkenness. The three former were released, while the latter was committed in default of payment.

Michael Sullivan of Bondsville, selling liquor to a minor; case continued to next Monday.

3.—M. E. Haradon and C. P. Stone, charged with selling liquor on the Lord's day. Case continued to next Tuesday.

5.—Edwin Hobbs, William Kelly, William Colgrove and Patrick Sullivan, for drunkenness; each paid a fine of $3 and costs and was released.

5.—Peter Welcome, drunkenness; committed in default of $7.48.

The Work of Burglars.

Burglars paid this village a visit early last Saturday morning, and effected an entrance into Brown & Abbe's meat and provision market by breaking the large light of glass in the front door. The money drawer, which contained about $2 in change, was relieved of its contents, while some canned goods were also taken. The saloon of T. J. Chalk, in Caryl Brothers' block, was also entered, where it was found that some small things were missing. The entrance there was made by breaking a pane of glass in the large window. John Feeney's Main street saloon also received a call, the entrance there being made by smashing the heavy plate glass windows in the front door. The till was broken open, and the amount of money stolen is estimated at about $3, while the best wines and cigars were freely "sampled." The local officers were at once notified, and have been working on the case all the week. No one appears to have heard the noise caused by the breaking of glass, although some one heard a dog barking about two o'clock, the time at which the burglary is said to have occurred.

A False Alarm and a $500 Fire.

The firemen had just finished letting off the last of the fireworks Wednesday evening, and were cleaning up at the engine house, when an alarm was rung in from box 47. The jumper was run out and arrived at the box before the last round of the alarm had done striking, but the firemen found no work to do, someone having made a false key and opened the box. As the key could not be released until the chief engineer came, he now has the forged piece in his possession.

An alarm from box 57 at one o'clock yesterday morning called out the department to a fire in the barn of Mrs. Finnerty on Fox avenue. A son was awakened by the kicking of the horse, and looking out of the window found the barn a lively blaze. A fireman living near ran up street to the box and the boys had a stream of water on the building in 12 minutes after the alarm sounded. They were none too soon, for the house, only 20 feet away, caught fire on the roof as the line of hose was laid. The adjoining property was saved, but the barn was a total loss, with hay, carriage, harness, etc. The horse was got out alive, but badly burned. The total loss is about $500, with $100 insurance on the barn, and $225 on the contents. There is no clue to the origin of the fire.

The Day We Celebrated.

The Glorious Fourth was an unusually quiet one in Palmer this year. There was very little noise the night before, but the town clock had not sounded the second stroke of 12 when the fun began. Cannon, mammoth fire-crackers, tin horns and the school-house bell all contributed a share of the celebration for nearly half an hour, when the noise subsided until daylight. The procession of horribles was a horrible one for those who got up early or came from out of town to see it. There was a wrangle among them at the starting point, and only one two-horse team, representing the Palmer Cornet Band, and a few horsemen paraded, led by the fife and drum corps. Some one stole the cannon from the engine house Monday night, and it was not found until Wednesday forenoon, when it was used to increase the fusilade already going on. There were few picnic parties, property owners preferring to stay at home and guard against the danger of fire from firecrackers and squibs of the small boy, though the ball game on the park in the afternoon was well attended. In the evening all turned out to see the display of fireworks under the charge of the fire department, which was very good considering the amount of money there was to work with. There were also many private displays, some being very fine, and many of the residences were decorated with Chinese lanterns and the national colors. There were the usual number of drunks on the streets, but on the whole it was the quietest Fourth Palmer has seen in some years.

Base Ball.

The base ball games on the park are deserving of better patronage than they have recently been receiving.

The Palmers received their new uniforms last Saturday in time to be worn during the afternoon game on the park. The suits were made by Wright and Ditson of Boston, and are the neatest in this section. The material is white flannel of an excellent quality, while the black caps, stockings, and belts make a very fine contrast. The players are to have their pictures taken in a group before long, with the new uniform on. A large number of pictures will be taken, so that all who desire may procure one.

Palmers 5; West Brookfields 4.

M'Grath's error in the fourth inning very nearly lost the game for the home team last Saturday. With a man on first he tried to stop a hot liner with one hand and make a double play. The result was a muff, and both men were safe. Then a couple of wild throws and two base hits brought in three runs. He made up for it in the twelfth, however, by bringing in the winning run. The score was tied in the ninth inning by hits of Kee and Betts, and some good base running. Both clubs played an excellent game—by far the best one of the season on the local grounds. It was a pitcher's game, and the fielders had but little to do. The Palmers made seven hits with a total of eight off Goddard, while the visitors only got three singles off Cotter. The score by innings was:

| Innings. | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | 12 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Palmers, | 0 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 1 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 1 | —5 |
| W.Brookfields, | 0 | 0 | 0 | 3 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | —4 |

Three Rivers 13, Palmers 10.

About 500 assembled on the park Wednesday afternoon to see the game between the Palmers and Three Rivers, which was not especially exciting, owing to the large number of errors made by the home team. The features of the game were the double plays by McGrath and Shackley, and the battery work of the visitors, who had Paso of Indian Orchard in the box. There was great batting on both sides. The loss of the game is attributed to the disability of Kane, their catcher, who had two fingers dislocated in the second inning. The score by innings is as follows:

| Innings. | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Palmers, | 1 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 2 | 2 | 2 | —10 |
| Three Rivers, | 1 | 2 | 2 | 3 | 1 | 0 | 2 | 0 | 2 | —13 |

The Palmers go to Northampton to-morrow afternoon to play a return game with the Firemen of that place. Kane is so disabled that it will be impossible for him to fill his position behind the bat.

Personal.

C. G. Needham is to move to Wales.

Mrs. E. P. Moore is at Orris Island, Me.

George W. Wright is taking a vacation of a week.

Miss Jennie Eager attended class-day at Worcester last week.

Miss Elva Blodgett of Amherst is visiting Miss Anna C. Hunt.

Charles Bogue spent the Sabbath among friends at Miller's Falls.

George W. Lyman has been laid up this week with a sprained ankle.

Miss May Bryant started to-day for an extended vacation in Maine.

Miss Addie McLaughlin of Boston is at the King farm for the summer.

C. E. Fuller and wife start to morrow for a week's stay at Ludlow, Vt.

Miss J. Hodges, of New York city, has been spending the week in town.

Frank Leland and wife of Worcester spent the Fourth with E. S. Brooks.

Fred Webber and wife of New Hampshire are the guests of W. H. Brainerd.

Mrs. St. John and daughter of Hartford, Ct., are visiting at Rev. H. W. Pope's.

Miss Sadie Stanwood is spending the summer vacation at her home in Maine.

Miss Lizzie Holden, daughter of W. N. Holden, a Worcester merchant, is visiting at the residence of J. S. Holden.

Charles Henken has resigned his position with the American Express Company at this place, and goes elsewhere. He is succeeded by J. E. Richards, of New York state.

Rev. H. W. Pope, of the Second Congregational church, went to Chicago, Ill., Wednesday as a delegate to the national convention of Christian Endeavor societies, which is now in session at that place.

A. E. Howard of Schenectady, N. Y., formerly of the place, has been in town this week on a brief visit, returning home yesterday with his wife and daughter, who have been stopping a few weeks with Mrs. Howard's sister, Mrs. M. E. Daniels.

Palmer High School.

GRADUATING EXERCISES — RECEPTION BY CLASS OF '88.

One of the most gratifying circumstances connected with the graduating exercises of the high school last Friday evening was the representative character of the attendance. Never before has there been so large a representation from the various villages and quarters of the town. This manifestation of interest on the part of the citizens is an exceedingly hopeful sign. Its absence in the past has meant for our school but a sickly growth. Its existence at the present time is the accumulating force which is so rapidly raising the standard of the school, and widening its field of usefulness and influence. The graduating exercises were held in St. Paul's Universalist church. The audience room had been arranged for the seating of over 500 people, but it was packed to the doors, and many were unable to obtain even standing room. The platform and vicinity was elaborately decorated, some fine effects being obtained by masses of ferns and roses. Immediately behind the speakers was a bank of laurel, while arching above this, and formed of white syringa, was the class motto, "Non videri sed esse." The exercises were of an unusually high order of merit, both as to manner and matter, and the attention of the audience was held to the end of the programme, which was carried out as given in the Journal of last week. At the conclusion of Miss Winchell's valedictory the whole class gathered upon the stage and Mr. W. C. Greene, in behalf of the school board, presented the diplomas in a happy speech of felicitation and advice. The music for the occasion was furnished by the choir of St. Paul's church, and the solos by Mrs. Huntley and Mr. Howard were particularly enjoyed.

The reception which followed the graduation was for invited guests only, the teachers even claiming admission upon these grounds alone. The church, vestry, and parlors were beautifully decorated for the evening. Half the parlors in Palmer had yielded some rare bit of furniture or art, and by a skillful disposal of this material the parlor and vestry, thrown together, had been converted into a magnificent drawing room. Beautiful mattings covered the floor, soft chairs promised a cure for weariness, and fine paintings and bric-a-brac adorned the walls. Upon an easel at the head of the hall stood a life-size portrait of Principal Knox, crowned with a wreath of laurel. The reception was entirely informal, and was attended by more than 400 people. Congratulations were the order of the evening—congratulations to the graduates for the fine showing which they had made, congratulations to pupils and teachers that the year's work was over and the long vacation close at hand, and felicitations on all hands upon the present triumphs of the high school, and the brilliant promises of its near future. During the evening refreshments were served in the dining room, to which the company adjourned as they pleased, in pairs and groups, each becoming in its turn a little social. Near the close of the evening Principal Knox unfolded to the pupils the prospect of a grand fair to be given this fall in the new building for the purpose of raising money for the furnishing of what is expected to be one of the most beautiful school buildings in the state. The applause which greeted this announcement was a prophecy of success for the scheme.

BONDSVILLE.

George Rogers has gone to Moosup, Ct., as overseer in the card room of the Union mill.

PALMER CENTER.

George Shaw is breaking two of the Montana horses for Herbert Northrop.

The celebration of the Fourth commenced about ten o'clock on the evening of the 3d, and the boys kept up a continual racket until daylight. There were fireworks Wednesday evening.

BRIMFIELD.

Last Thursday evening the Christian Endeavor Society enjoyed a social entertainment, with refreshments, at the invitation of Mrs. Julia Sherman, at her house.

The anniversary of our nation's birth was ushered in by an unusually early ringing of bells, and more than the usual accompaniment of noises, though there was no organized general observance of the day. The people of the First church had a picnic gathering on the church grounds, and the Second church a like gathering on land of Capt. F. D. Lincoln, near his house. Both were well attended. In the evening a fine display of fire works was made on the grounds of the Wyles place, now occupied by John F. Converse, which was the most extensive and best ever seen in this village. In addition to this, William M. Ducker of New York city made a large display.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

About twenty-five friends of Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Chase gave them a surprise call at their home one evening last week, to help them celebrate the fourteenth anniversary of their marriage. Lemonade, cake and ice cream were furnished ad libitum, and two easy chairs and a fine hanging lamp were left as mementoes of the occasion.

The masonry of the Collins Co's. new buildings is finished except the tower on the mill. This will not be built till the large iron tank to supply the sprinklers and the tenements with water is completed. This is now being put in, and will have an automatic attachment for starting and stopping the supply pump, which will keep it constantly full of water. There is to be a hose room in the tower, and hydrants, so that in case of fire streams of water can be put on from the flat roof of the mill.

WALES.

James Lucy had his face badly injured by a large firecracker on the Fourth.

The Wales Savings Bank has declared a semi-annual dividend of 2¼ per cent.

Mrs. E. A. Deveral and Mrs. J. Freeland have been taking a drive to Milbury and Sutton, spending a few days among friends.

Fourth of July passed off very quietly. Not a drunken man seen on the street. H. M. Needham of Brooklyn, who, with his family arrived this week to spend the summer, made his usual demonstration in the evening with Chinese lanterns, sky rockets, etc.

Some two weeks ago a stranger was seen standing at the door of one of our private boarding houses, evidently asking for some breakfast, as it was early in the morning. As the door was opened he fell in, and has not been seen since. Inquiry has failed to procure any light as to his disposition, rumors of foul play are in circulation, and confederates in the matter are suspected. An investigation doubtless will follow.

THORNDIKE.

Mrs. James Lyons is visiting friends in Haverhill.

Jerry Kelley of Worcester spent Fourth with his friends in this place.

Daniel G. Riley, who is studying at Middlebury College, Vermont, is home on a vacation.

A picked nine from this place played a team from Northampton, and defeated them by a score of 14 to 2.

The Young Stars of this place played a game of ball with the Wares Fourth of July and defeated them by a score of 6 to 0.

Henry Schultz of this place won first prize at Forest Lake on the Fourth in the running long jump, and came in third in the handicap race.

The picnic held at the church grove on the Fourth was quite largely attended and much enjoyed, and was a success financially and otherwise.

Two requiem masses were said at the Catholic church this week; Tuesday in memory of Mrs. McLouglin, and Wednesday for Michael Breen.

Baseball is taking another boom it seems, and probably within a few weeks there will be a strong team in the place as there has been heretofore this season.

At a meeting of the base ball association Daniel J. Sullivan was chosen manager, and will succeed T. J. Moran, resigned. The Thorndikes expect to play a team from Holyoke here on Saturday, and will go to Northamptonon the 14th.

The Thorndikes defeated the West Warrens with ease in a one-sided game on the home grounds Saturday, in the presence of about 400. The features of the game were the heavy hitting of the home team, and the battery work of Schultz and Sullivan, and the playing of Riley and Armour for the visitors. The following is the score:

| Innings. | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Thorndikes, | 1 | 4 | 5 | 0 | 3 | 5 | 3 | 0 | 0 | —21 |
| West Warrens, | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 2 | — 4 |

Mrs. Griffin and daughter of Chicago are spending the summer with Mrs. Sarah Powers.

Mrs. Harwood and family have left for Yarmouth, where she has a cottage, and spends the summer.

Fred D. Holdsworth has graduated after a three and a half years' mechanical course at the Worcester Polytechnical Institute.

The Fourth passed with the usual amount of noise. The Hibernians had a large picnic at Flannery's grove, a good number coming from the surrounding towns.

Edward Patrick and wife celebrated the twentieth anniversary of their marriage at their residence last Friday evening. The Warren band, of which Mr. Patrick is a member, was present.

Rev. Mr. Clark left Monday for his four weeks' vacation, and will attend the Christian Endeavor convention at Chicago. Mr. Ramsdell, from Brockton, a recent graduate of Amherst College, will supply the pulpit during his absence.

The alumni association held their annual meeting at the hotel Friday evening, about forty being present. The evening was pleasantly passed with instrumental music, piano duets by Mrs. Lincoln and Mrs. Kimball, and banjo solos by Miss Alice Washburn. At ten o'clock the party sat down to one of Landlord Sawyer's famous suppers. After this, in response to toastmaster Hastings' demands, they were entertained by toasts by different members, and a poem by Miss Cumming. The evening was brought to a fitting close by singing "Auld Lang Syne," at the last note of which the clock struck twelve.
